Rental inspection draft updated

By Steve Franzen
Staff Reporter

A citizen's committee discussed final changes in the third draft of the proposed city rental inspection program in a work session Wednesday.

"This meeting gave the citizen's committee the opportunity to express their views," said Mike Conduff, city manager.

The two-hour meeting drew a crowd of about 100 people to the Headquarters Fire Station. The session was limited to comments about the rental program draft by committee members only.

"I am not a renter, but this still concerns me," said Judith Starr, junior in apparel design. "A lot of tenants don't know what there is, and kind of settle with what they get."

This final session prepared the draft for presentation to the City Commission next Tuesday. The commission meeting will be open, offering the public the opportunity to comment on the program. The meeting is scheduled for 4 p.m., but the location is still undetermined.

The meeting allowed the committee members to debate over questionable changes in the new draft. This draft had been updated in three areas. The first change redefined lodging and boarding houses, and deleted the term "transients" from the definition.

Secondly, an item defining the term "knowingly occupy," a term which caused some debate during the last meeting, was added.

Finally, the new draft stated that leases could be written or oral, and specified that a tenant could not break an unlicensed lease if the landlord was relicensed within 14 days.

"My notes said, 'don't re-invent the wheel.' The role of the citizen's committee was to develop a program the City Commission can review," Conduff said.

Conduff summarized the committee's concerns at the end of the meeting. The concerns included the need for less inspection of new structures already built to code specifications,

Class studies Fort's plans

By Anne Krauss
Collegian Reporter

The emotional and financial aspects of the proposed Fort Riley expansion were discussed during a UFM class Wednesday.

"It's one thing to give up your home. You find another one and go on," said Jan Lyons, a Riley County landowner. "It's different with land. It's your sweat. Forefathers are buried there. It's your roots."

Lyons said her family could lose up to 1,800 acres of land if the expansion becomes reality.

Possible financial and environmental losses were discussed as well as the individual losses that may result from the expansion.

One of the most compelling arguments against the expansion was the degree of damage to the Flint Hills that could result from military use, said Clenton Owensby, professor of agronomy.

"The area added to the fort could have fairly substantial damage due to tank traffic and other traffic," Owensby said. "The Flint Hills respond well to degradation, but not to tanks."

Owensby explained the geological history of the Flint Hills. He said the area is one of the most productive grasslands in the United States.

"We produce more pounds of feed for livestock than anyone," Owensby said. "Also important is the rich heritage that's extremely important to the culture of Kansas."

Owensby said grazing and burning practices are vital to maintaining the quality of the Flint Hills.

"Currently, some programs are used to preserve vegetation," Owensby said. "One-third of the land is burned each year and there are hay contracts that compare to grazing."

He expects the military to continue such programs.

John Schlender, extension agricultural economist in farm management, said he did not expect the loss of agricultural income to be made up by the expansion.

He recently completed a study of the impact of the loss of farmland caused by the expansion.

He said 102 farms, based on an average full-time family farm of 1,075 acres, would lose a total of about $40 million in net income.

C. Clyde Jones, former professor of management, said about 3,430 jobs in Riley and Geary Counties are a direct result of the military base. Also, about 4,158 civilians are employed at the post.

"There's no indication that we'll see more people assigned here if the expansion goes through," Jones said.

Both panelists and concerned citizens were optimistic that a proposed expansion of Fort Riley would not occur.

"With times as they are, the demands on Congress and the changes in the political structure of Europe, it would be ridiculous to say we are going to expand," Lyons said.

The class will meet again next Wednesday from 7 to 9 p.m. in the Union Big Eight Room to discuss other ways of getting involved. The public is welcome.

Death toll hits 42 in China

BEIJING (AP) — The death toll has risen to 42 in the collapse of a factory roof in northeastern China, state TV reported Wednesday.

China Central Television said 130 people were injured in the accident Friday at the Dalian Heavy Machinery Factory in Dalian, east of Beijing. It said all but three of those hospitalized were out of danger.

The television showed the accident scene for the first time, including the four-story concrete building with a large portion of the roof caved in. More than 300 Communist Party members had been meeting inside at the time, the report said.

It showed rescue workers hauling the injured out on their backs and crowds of medical workers in white coats meeting ambulances at hospital emergency rooms. People's Liberation Army soldiers were shown donating blood.

The report said the cause of the collapse is still being investigated.

Right to burn flag upheld

SEATTLE (AP) — The law against desecration of the American flag passed by Congress last fall is unconstitutional, a federal judge ruled Wednesday in finding that four people who burned flags were exercising their First Amendment rights.

"In order for the flag to endure as a symbol of freedom in this nation, we must protect with equal vigor the right to destroy it and the right to wave it," Judge Barbara Rothstein said in her decision.

"Burning the flag as an expression of political dissent, while repellent to many Americans, does not jeopardize the freedom which we hold dear," the judge added.

She ruled in the first constitutional challenge to the Flag Protection Act of 1989, according to David Cole of the Center for Constitutional Rights in New York, which represented the four defendants in the case.

Mark Haggerty, Jennifer Campbell, Darius Strong and Carlos Garza had been charged with burning a U.S. flag outside a Seattle post office shortly after midnight on Oct. 28, the day the flag protection law went into effect.

Raitt wins 4 Grammy awards

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Rock survivor Bonnie Raitt, who has toiled in the vineyards of obscurity since the 1960s, won four Grammy awards Wednesday, including album of the year, for her critically acclaimed "Nick of Time" album.

"I can only take so much of this," said Raitt, accepting her fourth award, female pop vocalist. "Wake me up when this is over."

Raitt also won female rock vocalist and shared the traditional blues award with John Lee Hooker for "I'm in the Mood" on Hooker's "The Healer" album.

"This means so much for the kind of music I do, and means those of us who do rhythm and blues are going to get a chance again," Raitt, 40, a four-time nominee during her career, told the 32nd annual Grammy Awards show.

The Grammy for song of the year went to writers Larry Henley and Jeff Silbar for "Wind Beneath My Wings," performed by Bette Midler.

It was a night for survivors.

Don Henley, formerly of the Eagles, won male rock vocalist for his lyrical, melancholy "The End of the Innocence." Henley, co-wrote the album's title track with Bruce Hornsby.

Bumper sticker bill on hold

TOPEKA (AP) — A Senate committee Wednesday decided to reconsider a bill that would require seven "dirty" words on bumper stickers to be so tiny that people would not be able to read them from any distance.

The reason the Senate Transportation and Utilities Committee decided to give the bill a second discussion is because those seven words apparently would have to be placed in the state statute books.

The bill, introduced by Sen. James Francisco, D-Wichita, would require the seven words banned by the Federal Communication Commission to be no larger than one-eighth of an inch on a bumper sticker. Violators could be fined $25.

However, Sen. Bill Morris, R-Wichita, committee chairman, said the Legislature cannot simply refer to the words as those banned by the FCC. After all, he said, people have to know what seven words are illegal.

Beech wins Air Force contract

WICHITA (AP) — Beech Aircraft Corp. won a prized contract from the Air Force on Wednesday to supply business jets for a $1.5 billion program to train pilots for flying tankers and transports.

"At this point in time, I'm having a hard time coming off the ceiling," said Max Bleck, Beech president.

The program, called the Tanker-Transport Training System or TTTS, will deliver a big economic boost to Wichita's lightplane industry. Bleck said TTTS will mean an additional 500 jobs, mostly in production categories, at Beech plants in Wichita and Salina.

He was also a member of the crew team, U.S. Rowing Association, Blue River Bow Hunters, Kansas Bow Hunters Association and the National Forensics League.

He is survived by his parents; a sister, LaShawna; paternal grandparents Claude and Darline Harrison of Tahlequah, Okla.; and maternal grandmother Dorothy Mattis of Topeka.

Burial will be at Pleasant Valley Cemetery near Zeandale. Memorial contributions can be made to the crew team. The family will receive friends Friday from 6:30 to 8:30 p.m. at the funeral home.

Technology aids schools

Courses broadcast by campus center

By Mark Lowry
 Contributing Reporter

Advances in satellite technology are helping many rural Kansas high schools meet state requirements for offering a foreign language.

These rural high schools have invested in a high-tech satellite receiver and classroom video equipment to receive programs offered through The Midlands Consortium, a five-state partnership of educational organizations and major universities, according to the consortium newsletter.

The consortium is one of four national organizations funded by the U.S. Department of Education to transmit satellite-based educational programming, according to the newsletter.

To participate in the program, high schools are required to purchase a 12-foot satellite antenna and receiver, a 27-inch color monitor, a VHS videocassette recorder, and a cordless telephone, said Barbara Newhouse, assistant director of Kansas Star Schools.

"The most a high school had to invest to purchase the equipment to begin the program was only about $7,000," Newhouse said. "And many of those schools received mini-grants through the center for the purchase of the equipment."

The main offerings of the K-State center are introductory and advanced Spanish, science labs and courses, and instructor developmental programs for high school teachers, according to a programming schedule for spring 1990.

The courses could then be beamed directly into the participating schools via one of the consortium members.

Newhouse said high school teachers, some who have little or no practical teaching experience in the program areas, must be trained to assist students participating in the program.

Although the courses are only one-way visual, they are two-way audio, giving the students the opportunity to interact with the course instructor and other students across the nation, she said. This is accomplished with cordless phones.

The telephone assists the classroom instructor as students are given the opportunity to pass it from student to student, allowing each to ask questions on problems or assignments, Newhouse said.

Courses from the University are produced and sent from a small studio on the third floor of Umberger Hall and then transmitted from a mobile production unit behind the building.

Currently under construction directly behind Umberger is a $5.92 million Educational Communications Center to be completed in June, 1990. The center will include six production studios, research laboratories, editing suites with computer graphics, video disc systems, and a variety of other equipment to assist the center in transmitting to participating schools.

"We're trying to expand to meet the needs of the smaller schools in Kansas," Newhouse said.

In the future, the center plans to expand its operation to include additional classes for high school students and instructors including more and advanced foreign languages and a class emphasizing the appreciation of art.

Kansas Board of Regents member Charles Hostetler said the center will improve education in Kansas.

"I think the center is a major step forward for the education of the state, especially in the area of qualified admissions," Hostetler said.

Currently Kansas operates under an open admissions policy which allows any student graduating from a Kansas high school to attend a regent funded college.

Police to replace older patrol cars

University officers obtain 3 vehicles; high usage causes frequent changes

By Todd Ubben
 Collegian Reporter

Three new 1990 Ford Crown Victoria four-door sedans have been purchased by the K-State Police Department to replace smaller Chevrolet Celebrity patrol cars.

The campus police use four patrol cars and have a total of 10 vehicles.

A decision was made to purchase the law enforcement-equipped cars in July, Police Chief Charles Beckom said. The expected delivery date is sometime in March.

The patrol cars operate 24 hours a day, seven days a week and face many sudden changes from slow street driving to rapid accelerations in emergencies, Beckom said.

"It has a greater toll on the vehicle than it would if you were just driving it back and forth to work every day," he said.

Patrol cars are usually replaced after they have been driven in excess of 100,000 miles, Beckom said.

"It would be ideal to replace the vehicle between 80,000 and 90,000 miles, and that would be just in the neighborhood of a year and a half, two years maximum," he said.

The three cars will cost a total of about $35,000, exceeding the department's budget of $25,000 to buy such equipment, Beckom said. A lease-purchase payment plan will be used, in which a certain sum is paid per year until the cars are paid off.

"You have to at least establish some budgetary guidelines to insure that the money is going to be there," he said.

The Chevrolet Celebrities will be put up for bid and sale, and the money will support partial payments on the new cars.

Additional costs include transferring radio equipment and light bars from the old cars to the new cars. The transferring of equipment is done within the department to save about $1,800 per vehicle, Beckom said.

The transferring of radio systems costs about $600 per radio, and light bars cost between $300 and $400 to transfer. Topeka is the nearest place where the transfers can be done, he said.

The Crown Victorias will provide more room for equipment and more comfort for the driver, Beckom said. The smaller, Chevrolet Celebrities have been used for escorting and picking up guests of the University, and space has been a problem.

"It's kind of embarrassing when they can't hardly sit in the vehicle because they're so cramped," he said.

K-State Police Sgt. Andrew Amaro said he likes the nice texture, extra space and heavy-duty suspension that the Crown Victoria has to offer as compared to the older cars.

"I see my car as my own little office, and I like to have the extra space," he said.

Students, principals discuss curriculums

By Angela Tholstrup
 Collegian Reporter

Students took time to talk to their high school principals and counselors about a variety of topics at a conference Wednesday.

Students could meet with principals and counselors at the 1990 Principal-Counselor-Student Conference from 10 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. in the K-State Union or Ahearn Field House.

"We talk to a smattering of former students, but mostly freshmen," said Sharon DeBusk, counselor from Great Bend High School.

Jim Walker and Richard Howard, counselors from Eureka High School, said they had spoken to more upperclassmen at this conference than freshmen.

The topics of discussions ranged from problems transferring hours and honors programs to how students are adjusting to college.

Transferring hours to K-State has caused headaches for some students, DeBusk said.

Jim Butterfield, junior in hotel and restaurant management, said he took six hours of accounting at a community college, but only three counted. He said he told his counselor the advising should have been better at the community college. He also said high school students should find out if courses will transfer before taking them at a community college.

The honors program at K-State was one of the topics at the Concordia High School table. About five students agreed the University's honors program in English was good, but the program in chemistry needed to be improved.

"High school chemistry class prepared me for the college chemistry lab, but the class lecture wasn't what I expected," said Shea Andersen, freshman in mechanical engineering.

"Sciences at Independence High School were good," said Marli Rieck, sophomore in mathematics.

According to feedback from former students, Walker said, courses in English and problem solving should be emphasized more at the high school level.

Fuzz busters raise questions of rights

I passed a Porsche on the highway this weekend. I think the driver must have felt pretty humiliated, because he or she (I couldn't tell) pulled in behind me and tried to pass me, but I wouldn't allow it. Actually, this person didn't have much in the way of guts, since I drive a pretty nice four-door-sedan-type thing that's a darn good car in its own Japanese way, but certainly no Porsche. If the other driver had been willing to go, oh, say 130 mph or so, he or she would have certainly left me in the dust.

Finally, the driver of the Porsche decided to use me as a "rabbit" and follow me, which was fine because the ordinary cop just cruising along looking for speeders with his or her radar on (we really need another word for this his or her, he or she stuff) would set off my fuzz buster. I'd slow down and annoy all the people behind me who didn't know I had a radar detector. They'd pass me and then they'd get the ticket, which is also fine, and the Porsche and I would just hang out and laugh. As for the really evil cop, the kind who either points their radar gun and fires at you specifically when it's too late for you to slow down, or hides behind billboards, bushes or in drive-ways and shoots it at you sideways ... well, if you were that kind of cop, and two cars came whipping down the highway and one of them was a sedate looking yuppie sedan and the other was a black Porsche, which would you want to nail? I was banking on the Porsche—literally, because I can't afford any more tickets. So I figured I was getting something out of the deal, and it's hard to feel too sorry for someone in a Porsche. He can buy his own darn radar detector.

Yes, I have a radar detector. I used to have a really cheap one that my dad gave me so he'd have an excuse to buy a nice one. I just set it on the dash and wondered if it would go off. I didn't trust it one bit, and I was right not to; it only went off around hospitals, unless I didn't pass any cops in a year and a half. That one got stolen, but I figure the thieves were picked up for speeding a few miles out of town. My dad gave me his so that he'd have an excuse to buy a really nice one.

This one I trust. The only ticket I've gotten since I've been using it is one when an officer saw it hanging in my window. He pulled me over for doing 59 in a 55, after I'd slowed down because the fuzz buster went off. The officer scolded me soundly (oh no! not a scolding!) for owning the thing, and it cost me about $40.

But other than that, life's been really great and I love getting places a lot faster than I used to so I have more time to waste when I get there.

Karin Dell'Antonia

COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

All this brings me, finally, to the point of the article. Why am I allowed to get away with this? Let's face it, there is absolutely no legal use for a fuzz buster. So what it amounts to is that I, using a perfectly legal piece of equipment, flagrantly and cheerfully break laws. In fact, I live for it.

I have to wonder, though, I can't think of any other legal thing that can only be used to break laws. Of course, in several states they'll take your detector away if they stop you. Preventing getting stopped is the whole point of the thing, so it's still an odd system. I wondered about it for a while, and then I came across the answer. I thought I'd share it because it's a pretty funny example of taking government literally.

What it all boils down to is the First Amendment. It seems that any form of radar is actually a form of communication. Any laws interfering with radar detectors, which send out a sort of radar that detects other radars, would be interfering with our constitutional right to free speech. At least that's the rationale of the people who sell radar detectors, who, for some reason, lobby violently against any laws that interfere even a little bit with the American people's God-given right to own a fuzz buster.

Don't take this wrong — I should think it would be perfectly obvious that I would fight to the death or at least break a nail to keep my fuzz buster. It got me thinking — how seriously can we be expected to keep laws when it's so easy to break them? Does anyone really believe that taking away my fuzz buster would seriously interfere with my right to free speech? I hardly ever talk to it anyway.

So what's my point? I think we have a pretty misguided legal system. I'm pleased to have my First Amendment radar communication rights so diligently looked after, but I have a few other free-speech-type rights I'd like them to deal with. I'd even keep my radar detector off and my mouth shut while they did it.

I think we have a right to clean air. Coughing interferes with my ability and right to speak. I think we have a right to clean rain; the acid kind makes people sick and then they can't talk, either. I think we have a right to a whole ozone layer. I understand that without atmosphere to convey sound, we couldn't communicate.

I think we have a right to have rapists kept off the street for more than seven years. Screaming interferes with my ability and right to communicate with dignity in a manner that my friends can comprehend.

I think we should be protected from murderers for more than twenty-seven years. Death can really make a conversation drag, you know? I saw it in "Weekend at Bernie's."

I think we have a right to know if we're sending arms to Contras, even if most of us can't even remember anymore who the Contras are and where they're from. If we don't know about it, we can't talk about it — and neither can our radar detectors.

I think we have rights to a whole lot of things that are more important than Constitutionally legal fuzz busters.

I love my radar detector, but I hear they're spending a lot of money to come up with a police radar to beat my radar detector, and even more to equip the police with it. So I have to wonder ....

Parental-notification bill threatens minors

Potentially lethal legislation threatened pregnant Kansas teenagers this week.

Two bills that would require parental notification in the case of teenage abortions were, fortunately, rejected by the House Federal and State Affairs Committee Wednesday.

Gov. Mike Hayden's proposed bill would have forced doctors who perform abortions on girls 16 and younger to either notify one parent or obtain court approval. The other, more restrictive bill called for doctors operating on teenagers 18 and younger to notify both parents.

According to legislative procedure, the bills can still be introduced for consideration from the floor of the House of Representatives.

Parental notification laws certainly would not decrease teenage pregnancy. In the heat of the moment, state rules and regulations are the last things experimental teenagers are thinking about.

Neither would the laws reduce teenage abortion. Girls who won't — or can't — let their parents know they are pregnant and need an abortion will only seek alternatives. Tragically, the alternatives available to girls who wish to retain their privacy might kill them. Illegal abortions. Coat hangers. Household chemicals.

The one thing a notification law would decrease is the number of girls surviving their unwanted pregnancies.

Kansas should take Indiana's parental-consent law as an example. Becky Bell, 17, died in September 1988 from an infection caused by a botched abortion. She had told a friend she loved her parents so much that she didn't want to disappoint them by telling them she was pregnant. Bell's parents blame the law for her death.

Girls who want ask their parents for advice will talk to them anyway. But when a girl wants to protect her parents or fears their anger, she should have the right to keep her abortion a secret. The government has no business making a teenager's traumatic situation worse.

Abortions will continue to be performed, no matter what the law says. Tightening the abortion law with a notification requirement merely sets a precedent for further encroachment of legal, safe abortions.

Teenage girls, even if they have made a mistake, deserve the chance to salvage their youth without fear.

DRIVING MANDELA

Drug laws hypocritical

"I sit on a man's back, choking him and making him carry me, and yet assure myself and others that I am very sorry for him and wish to ease his lot by all possible means — except by getting off his back." Russian writer Leo Tolstoy (1828-1910)

It is one of the most addictive drugs known to man. In pure form, it is a highly poisonous, volatile, weakly basic alkaloid with the chemical composition of 10 parts carbon, 14 parts hydrogen, and two parts nitrogen.

It comes from a tall, erect, annual South American herb with large ovate to lanceolate leaves and terminal clusters of tubular white or pink flowers. When ingested — either smoked, snorted, or placed in contact with mucous membranes of the mouth — it produces a euphoric sensation of calm and well-being, referred to as a "buzz" or "high."

This particular drug, when smoked, was directly responsible for the death of an estimated 111,000 people in the United States in 1988 alone. Some estimates range as high as 400,000.

And the drug? No, not heroin. No, not cocaine, "crack," or "ice." The drug is nicotine, and it comes from nicotiana tabacum — the tobacco plant. And it is responsible for 85 percent of the U.S. deaths due to lung cancer each year, with an estimated cost of $52 billion per year in lost productivity and increased health care services.

The United States produces roughly 550,000 metric tons of unmanufactured tobacco each year, which constitutes about 9 percent of the world total. We export about 56 percent in this raw state.

From the manufactured tobacco, we produce cigars, cigarillos, snuff and chewing tobacco, as well as 690 billion cigarettes per year. We export approximately 100 billion cigarettes, which represents anywhere from

Brad Seabourn

COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

$3 billion to $5 billion in annual foreign sales, depending on the local price. In cigarettes alone, at an average U.S. cost of $1.49 per pack of 20, that's more than $51 billion in total cigarette revenue for U.S. manufacturers.

The lion's share of tobacco profits goes to two major manufacturers — R.J. Reynolds and Phillip Morris. These two companies, along with U.S. tobacco farmers, compose one of the largest, if not the largest, political lobbies in our nation's capital.

In 1989, the United States consumed approximately 75 percent of the 130 to 140 tons of cocaine produced worldwide. At a 1989 median price of $88 per gram, or roughly $39,916 per pound, U.S. cocaine consumption amounted to over $8 billion — all imported and totally illegal.

In 1988, 1,582 deaths and 39,657 illnesses were attributed to cocaine use in the United States. That's approximately 109,418 deaths fewer than the number attributed to lung cancer induced by smoking tobacco in that same year.

Colombia, Bolivia and Peru, combined, produce less than 1 percent of the world's tobacco, yet produce over 95 percent of the world's cocaine.

Last week, President Bush met the leaders of these three countries to discuss our so-called "war on drugs," and iron out the framework for cooperation in the mutual fight against cocaine trafficking. They signed a 13-page communique, pledging to work together toward "dynamic programs" to fight the flow of drugs from South America to the United States. The United States would in turn help train Andean farmers in how to switch to other crops to substitute for coca.

Does anyone else see a double standard here, or am I the only one? Our war on drugs is the absolute height of hypocrisy. If, for instance, the Peruvian president came to the United States and asked American tobacco farmers and cigarette manufacturers to find an alternative crop for tobacco because tobacco was recognized as killing thousands of Peruvians and was considered an illegal drug in Peru, do you think they would?

Do you think the our government would cooperate in interdicting U.S. shipments of tobacco to Peru?

The answer to both questions is "Hal." Do you really want to know why our government has chosen to wage a "war" on the South American cocaine cartels, and not on the more murderously destructive and profitable U.S. tobacco companies?

Money. We call tobacco "legal" because it produces taxes, creates jobs, contributes to our GNP and contributes significantly to offsetting our foreign trade deficit. It is an American-made product.

Cocaine is "illegal" because it is, and does none of these things.

And it matters not one whit to George Bush or any other elected protector of big business and high finance that U.S. tobacco manufacturers have produced, and continue to produce and export, more death and human misery than the Medellin cocaine cartel could ever imagine.

Now you know.

McCain play leaves void

Performance classified as underdeveloped

Laura Scroggins

REVIEW

The performance of "The Wind in the Willows" Tuesday at McCain Auditorium was a disappointing combination of underdeveloped story line and outright foolishness. The presenting company, Stage One, focused solely on the child, leaving the other half of the audience anxiously awaiting the final curtain.

This fact may not necessarily be offensive. After all, the book by Kenneth Grahame has often been categorized as a children's story. This classification is incorrect, unfair and shortsighted.

The play's story line contains social comment and criticism too advanced for the appreciation of a child.

Some say it is the representation of a class struggle, political systems or even of philosophical ideologies. But in truth, it is really all three, according to a program note by director and playwright Moses Goldberg.

The absence of depth from the performance left a noticeable void and showed Goldberg's adaptation from book to stage to be shallow.

The characters Toad, Rat, Mole,

Otter, Badger and the Weasels represent different aspects of life's struggles while making their way through life on the riverbank.

The story begins in England with the emergence of Rat from his small house along the bank of the unnamed river. Along with friends Mole and Otter, Rat takes stock of the day and decides a picnic is in order.

Trouble starts when Toad comes along on the picnic. Toad, regarded as a nincompoop by his peers, brings his obsession for horses with him.

Toad's obsession for possessions increases. He moves on to motor cars and, eventually, airplanes. The motor cars are his greatest passion, and the one that gets him and his friends into such trouble.

During the course of one day, Toad buys and destroys four motor cars (toads don't have driver's licenses). Toad then steals and destroys a police car, landing himself in jail.

This introduces the Weasels, who take over Toad Hall, Toad's mansion, and capture Mole for fun.

Toad's character represents the upper class. The stereotypical likeness of this social class intends to justify the nonchalant purchasing of the automobiles and the challenge involved for the Weasels in ransacking Toad Hall.

Badger's character portrays the establishment and the "Good Ol' Days." His constant reminiscing illustrates this point and brings a warm, grandfatherly image to the story.

The winner of the best performance category would have to go collectively to the Weasels. Their animated performance was superb. It was the only adaptation from the book that was worth anything.

The wind itself did make a few brief appearances during the show, in the form of a flute melody.

Overall, Stage One's adaptation of "The Wind in the Willows" was a disappointing experience. Without the backbone of Grahame's storytelling, the play would have been a complete failure.

Love triangle focus of comedy

at Manhattan Civic Theatre

By Elvyn Jones
Collegian Reporter

If you can't love them, kill them. That is the prevailing attitude of the three main characters in the Manhattan Civic Theatre's play "Murder at the Howard Johnson's."

The play, written by Ron Clark and Sam Bobrich, is a light suspense comedy about a love triangle taking place in a Howard Johnson's Motor Inn, said the play's director, David Bucholtz.

Bucholtz said the play begins with a restless, 38-year old Arlene Miller, played by Amy Strathman, sophomore in radio-television, waiting for a rendezvous at the local Howard Johnson's. The meeting is with her lover and family dentist, Mitchell Lovell, played by Fred Nelson. The couple plots to kill Arlene's faithful husband and used car dealer, Paul, played by Gale Fulte, unless he agrees to a divorce.

Paul's refusal leads to an unsuccessful attempt by the lovers to drown him. The play continues as the members of the fickle triangle align themselves in different combinations in bungled attempts to do each other in, Bucholtz said.

"Basically, the characters bungle the murder attempts as badly as they bungle their love lives," said Bucholtz.

Strathman said her character is a dissatisfied woman without a lot upstairs.

"She wants the excitement she gets from Mitchell and the stability she has known from Paul," she said.

Strathman said this is her first play with the Manhattan Civic Theatre and she has enjoyed the experience. She said both the director and cast have been supportive and worked rehearsals around her

Challenges

Rawson faces cuts on return to campus

By Lori Antrim
Staff Reporter

Although Tom Rawson is new to the University administration, he is not new to the University itself, and certainly not to the budget challenges he will face in his new position as vice president of administration and finance.

Rawson is a K-State alumnus and was the vice chancellor of administration and finance at the University of Kansas before accepting the position here.

Having received his bachelor's and two master's degrees from K-State, Rawson continued the tradition of his grandmother and father, who are K-State alumni. His daughter is a freshman here.

"Returning to K-State is like coming home," Rawson said. "While the buildings on campus have changed, the people haven't."

"The people are just good, solid friendly people here. It's always nice to come back, since I consider K-State my home."

Rawson said that although the positions at the two universities have the same title, the responsibilities involved are different. The position here involves a broader scope of duties, he said.

The campus areas under his supervision are facilities planning and maintenance, computing facilities and telecommunications, University police, and personnel. While at KU, he was in charge of the budget office, controller's office and purchasing functions.

In discussing the recent budget cuts, Rawson said the state is going through a difficult fiscal period and this year's expenditures will have to be reduced. The Board of Regents has made the cuts and the institutions will have to live with the reductions, he said.

With the current budget cuts, unit and equipment purchases will be deferred. For example, Rawson said, the physical plant constantly needs parts replaced, and those replacements won't occur as planned.

"Hopefully, next year the general enrollment adjustment we've earned will be given to us and restore our base budget," he said.

Some of Rawson's goals for the future involve the University's strategic planning process. Rawson said he is impressed with the goals that have been set and is looking forward to implementing them.

"I think K-State is on the move. It's a good solid institution with a solid reputation," he said. "The University has embarked on a significant effort to upgrade computing facilities. More faculty and student workstations are essential to have an appropriate level of computing necessary. A lot has already been done but a lot of improvements are still needed."

Tom Rawson, vice president of administration and finance and alumnus, worked in the KU budget office prior to coming to K-State.

He identified personnel and payroll as two areas that need to be closely watched.

"My job deals with the infrastructure of the campus," Rawson said. "We need to carefully analyze what our needs are."

Rawson is confident of his ability to handle the new responsibilities. His previous experience includes work in the institutional research office at the University of New Mexico and in the research office of the Kansas Board of Regents.

He was later promoted director of budget and planning for the regents, and from there became the director of physical affairs at KU.

Rawson said he has worked with the regents and state government on both the legislative and executive sides. He said his past work in these areas is a key part of his job.

"Knowing how to adhere to the guidelines of spending money is an aspect a lot of people overlook," he said.

Kansas provides spring break sites

By Todd Ubben
Collegian Reporter

While many students may be traveling to familiar spring break sites in Texas and Florida, others may find themselves staying in Kansas.

Mary Lou McThail, assistant director of the state department of travel and tourism, said these students can take in some impressive and inexpensive sites.

Noting the state's quality attractions, beautiful topography, wide open space and hospitality, McThail said there is a lot to see and do in Kansas.

"Young people really need a better feeling for their state," she said.

McThail said the Eisenhower Centennial in Abilene would be an ideal break idea for students as well as cities like Lindsborg, Hutchinson, Wichita, Topeka and the Kansas City area.

Atchison has a new visitor information center, and the Calvary Museum in Fort Riley is a popular place to visit, she said.

Topeka offers the Kansas Historical Museum and Combat Air Museum as a couple of options for students.

Events to attend during the week of spring break, March 10 through 19, include basketball tournaments and many St. Patrick's Day celebrations.

There will be a Region 6 junior college basketball tournament at the Bicentennial Center in Salina, the National Association of Intercollegiate ate Athletics tournament starting Tuesday at Kemper Arena in Kansas City, Mo., and the National Junior College Athletic Association tournament in Hutchinson.

George Sloyer II, senior in hotel and restaurant management, says he plans on attending all 26 games of the tournament in Hutchinson, which begins the Tuesday of spring break and lasts until Saturday night.

Sloyer said hotel rooms are usually booked up in advance for the five-day tournament.

Kansas has many lakes to offer as well, McThail said, including Perry, Melvern, Tuttle Creek Reservoir, Glen Elder, Wilson, Clinton and El Dorado.

Tuttle Creek Cove, Stockdale Park, River Pond State Park and Spillway State Park draw a few more students during Spring Break, Jim Franz, park ranger, said.

Windsurfing, water skiing and rappelling are the more favorite forms of recreation, Franz said, and Spillway State Park is the most popular spot.

Stockdale Park and Tuttle Creek Cove are U.S. Army Corps of Engineers' parks requiring no charge for entrance. The daily cost of staying in the state parks is about $5, including camping fee and vehicle permit, Franz said.

He said public service announcements and programs are used to promote the four parks during the year. These promotions are not usually aimed at students during spring break, Franz said.

Guerrillas threaten 'gringos' in Colombia

By The Associated Press

BOGOTA, Colombia — Americans hired extra guards and stayed close to home Wednesday because of a guerrilla "death to gringos" threat, and the government promised special measures to protect them.

"Every American client I've got was on the telephone this morning asking for more guards," the owner of a security company that protects several U.S. companies told the Associated Press.

A U.S. oil executive said his company had canceled all trips outside Bogota by American employees.

The National Liberation Army, known by its Spanish initials ELN, declared Tuesday that all U.S. interests in Colombia were its military targets.

It has kidnapped three Americans in a week. James Donnelly of Detroit and David Kent of Indianapolis still are held, but the guerrillas freed the Rev. Francis Amico Ferarri of Rochester, N.Y., a Roman Catholic priest.

Americans on the U.S. Embassy staff were told Wednesday to stay home except for necessary trips and were being escorted to and from work by armed guards, an embassy employee said.

The State Department already had considered Colombia so dangerous it would send only people who were single or married and willing to live apart from their families. Diplomats get hazard pay for service in Colombia.

Minister of Government Carlos Lemos, a member of the National Security Council, said after a council meeting Tuesday night the government was making special arrangements to protect Americans and U.S. business interests.

He said it appeared recent attacks by ELN guerrillas also were meant to discourage people from voting in elections March 11.

House rejects abortion bills

Parental notification voted unnecessary for teen-agers

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A House committee Wednesday rejected three bills designed to restrict the ability of teenage girls to get abortions, but the House still may debate the issue within the next few days.

The House Federal and State Affairs Committee refused to endorse two bills that would require doctors to notify the parents of minors who wish to obtain an abortion before the abortion is performed. One was a proposal from Gov. Mike Hayden.

The committee also refused to endorse a bill that would have required minors to get the permission of a parent or guardian before a doctor could perform an abortion.

Anti-abortion activists said the committee's actions were not unexpected, based upon their readings of its members' opinions. In fact, Pat Goodson, a lobbyist for Right to Life of Kansas Inc. called the committee a "black hole" for anti-abortion legislation.

The committee's action came only a day after hearings on the two parental notification bills concluded.

Chairwoman Ginger Barr, R-Auburn, defended the quick decisions.

"The committee members had made a decision, and we have other bills to discuss in our committee," she said. "I think the majority of the committee realized that you cannot legislate morality or certain religious beliefs."

Barr said the committee's actions showed that a majority of its members do not want to change the state's abortion laws.

"I think all other bills would have a difficult time passing out of the committee," she said.

The committee's actions came on voice votes on the two parental notifications and on an unrecorded 11-8 vote on the parental consent bill.

In each case, the committee voted to recommend to the House that it reject the measures. After such an action, a bill is put at the bottom of the House calendar, where it stays for a day before it dies.

However, the bills would go on the House's debate calendar if 70 of its 125 members vote to overturn the committee's decisions. Under the chamber's rules, a member must announce his intentions to ask for such a vote a day in advance.

Rep. Artie Lucas, R-Highland, the primary sponsor of one of the parental notification bills, promised to attempt to override the committee's decision on his bill. He said he thinks his announcement will come Friday and that a vote will follow Monday.

Lucas also said he and other anti-abortion legislators may attempt to amend other bills that reach the House floor.

"This issue is far from over," he said.

In a statement, Hayden expressed disappointment. His proposal was the less strict of the two parental notification bills.

"I believe there is widespread support among Kansans for such a measure, and I think the vote today is further evidence that the Legislature is out of touch with the people of this state," he said. "Parental notification of a teen-ager's pending abortion is sound and prudent public policy."

Under the governor's proposal, a doctor would have to notify one parent or guardian, orally or in writing at least 48 hours in advance, when a girl under 16 intends to get an abortion. However, a minor could go to court to avoid the notification.

Under Lucas' bill, doctors would have to notify, in writing, both parents of girls under 18 at least 48 hours in advance of a planned abortion. The bill contains no "judicial bypass" but has a provision for possible criminal sanctions against doctors. It has the unanimous support of anti-abortion groups.

The third bill, approved by the Senate but tabled by the committee last year, doctors would have to obtain the consent of at least one parent to perform an abortion on a girl under 18. It also had a judicial bypass provision.

"One way or another, this issue will be up for a vote on the House floor," Ms. Goodson said. "We will hold their feet to the fire before the election."

Kansas has one of the nation's most liberal abortion laws. It requires only that one doctor agree with a woman's decision to end her pregnancy and that the abortion be performed in a medical facility.

State law prohibits the use of state funds to pay for a woman's abortion directly, but otherwise it virtually allows abortion on demand.

Foreign enrollment increases

International graduate students work toward degrees

By Heather Stewart
Collegian Reporter

Foreign graduate students compose about one-fourth of the graduate student enrollment.

Out of 3,122 graduate students, 782 are foreign students. Many come to the University seeking a specific degree, said Donna Davis, director of the International Student Center. Programs with the highest number of foreign graduate students include agriculture and grain science, with 183 students, and engineering, with 170 students.

Last semester, foreign graduate students received 30 percent of the doctoral degrees awarded at graduation, said Lee O'Neill, assistant to the dean of the graduate school. They also received 25 percent of the master's degrees.

Foreign students chose to attend the graduate school for a variety of reasons, said Gerald Reeck, dean of the graduate school. They might have friends who have come to the University before and told them how much they liked it or personal contacts and referrals from their government and university, or they might come because of the financial assistance they receive from the University.

"I heard about K-State through books and films at school in Sri Lanka, so I applied to K-State and some other schools," said Gregory Asoka, graduate student in accounting. "I was accepted here first."

Davis said the University is on the way toward change.

"We are fairly reasonably priced and have a good standard of living," Davis said. "Our graduate program is very good, as well as our reputation."

"Foreign graduate students are often granted a graduate teaching assistantship or a graduate research assistantship after passing a English skills exam, which helps them by means of an income while getting an education," Reeck said.

To help with the cost of tuition, some graduate students apply for jobs as graduate teaching assistants or graduate research assistants. There are 317 foreign graduate students who are GTAs or GRAs at the University.

GTAs and GRAs pay the same tuition as a faculty member, $49 per credit hour plus fees, to take classes, Reeck said.

"Most foreign graduate students who do not have a GRA or GTA pay out-of-state tuition," Davis said. "However, some do get loans and grants."

Upon arrival at the University, foreign graduate students' initial expenses are much higher than American graduate students, Davis said. Sometimes, they are only able to bring a few suitcases containing their possessions and have to purchase everything else here.

Asoka said he doesn't have an assistantship, but was awarded a Fulbright scholarship.

"This campus provides me with less trouble and everything I need to concentrate on my studies," Asoka said. "I'm very happy here."

The graduate school receives approximately 20 inquiries a day about the graduate program, Reeck said.

"Out of all the foreign students who apply to K-State for graduate study, one-third actually show up for school," Davis said.

Space shortage plagues Calvin

Renovations scheduled in '94, construction to take 2 years

By Tim Clopton
Collegian Reporter

The renovation of Calvin Hall, scheduled to begin in fiscal year 1994, has been allotted $8.7 million.

Calvin, which is the primary building for the College of Business Administration, has insufficient space and lacks access for physically handicapped students, said Robert Hollinger, associate dean of the college.

"We have no empty space for anything right now," he said. "We expect to have two or three new faculty members and we do not have space for them currently."

"Another problem is meeting the needs of physically handicapped students. You can't go above the ground floor with a wheelchair because there is no elevator."

Only one classroom is on the first floor of Calvin Hall, so classes must often be moved to other buildings to accommodate the needs of physically handicapped students, he said. "We are always shuffling classes around to keep that room open so we can take care of the physically handicapped students," Hollinger said.

"It's a hassle to move out of the building when your office is here and all your stuff is here," said Penne Ainsworth, assistant professor of accounting.

Hollinger said the renovation, which will include the installation of an elevator as well as an addition on the south side of Calvin, should alleviate the problems.

"The big problem is that the State Education Building Fund is very small and it can only maintain one building under construction at a time," Hollinger said. "The plant science renovation and other things will probably take up the money for the next four years."

According to the five-year capital improvements plan, which lists the renovation of Calvin as its sixth priority, $230,000 in preliminary planning money will be available during the fiscal year 1994.

The following fiscal year $470,000 is budgeted for the final planning, leaving about $8 million for construction and miscellaneous costs.

be relocated during the renovation. "The renovation will probably take about 2 years to complete, and we would be out of the building," he said. "So the fall of 1997 might be the earliest we would be moving into a renovated facility."

Hollinger said the renovation will help to recruit faculty and students to the college.

"When students and faculty walk into a building it makes an impression," he said. "If it's a nice building they say, 'Gee, I'm interested in this.'"

International students leave behind traditional lifestyles for education

By Heather Stewart

Some K-State students sacrifice a lot more than home-cooked meals and their own beds for a college education. They leave their family, society, country and culture — all for an education.

"In order for me to come to school here from Nigeria, I had to first be accepted," said Cecilia Iboaya, graduate student in sociology. "Then I had to have enough money to pay for one full year of school — approximately $12,500. Then, K-State had to send me a receipt so I could show the U.S. Embassy in Nigeria and gain entry into the country."

Iboaya said her husband was already in the United States taking classes, so all she brought with her was a dress and one bag of possessions.

"When I found out that I was accepted, I quit my job at the Developmental Department of Social Welfare in Nigeria," Iboaya said. "I'm on leave without pay. When I go back home I can have my same job back, if I want it."

Some foreign students said the change wasn't that big a deal.

"It wasn't a very big change for me to come here," said Azfar Moazzam, graduate student in computer science from Pakistan. "The biggest change was when I went home for a visit and my room was gone. All I had was a cupboard for me to put my things in."

Moazzam said he went to undergraduate school in Cyprus for two years.

"In the beginning, I didn't like it here. I am from a very large city of 10 million, so I'm used to big-city life," he said. "For the first six to seven months I was very bored. But now when I go on a trip and come back here, I feel like I'm coming home to Manhattan."

Moazzam is the International Affairs Director for the student body president's cabinet.

He said his job involves interacting with the Student Governing Association and the International Coordinating Council.

He is also the public relations chairperson for ICC.

Cheesy one-liners highlight 'Hard to Kill'

Richard Jones

REVIEW

Once upon a time, two Warner Brothers big shots got together in a big-shot office, or so the story goes. "Let's make a movie," said Big Shot 1.

"Okay," agreed Big Shot 2. "What about?"

"Good guys and bad guys," suggested B.S. 1.

"Oh, like a cops and robbers kind of thing,"

"Exactly," said B.S. 1. "Those American fools come out in droves for those kind of movies. And best of all, we can just recast a movie that's already been made."

"Who will be in it?" asked B.S. 2.

"How about a tough-looking man and a brainless, twinkie bimbo?" suggested B.S. 1. "Maybe a girl like the one in the Pantene commercials."

"The one that says, 'Don't hate me because I'm beautiful?'"

"That's the one," said B.S. 1. "And we can throw in a lot of sex and violence and give the man a lot of exaggerated physical strength and chee-sey one-liners and destruction of material comforts, and we can drown the audience in sound effects of human bones snapping in two."

So it was that theaters came to be plagued with Warner Brothers' latest and most pathetic attempt at entertainment, "Hard to Kill."

Steven Seagal and Kelly Le Brock are the unfortunate actors who got trapped into making this film.

Seagal is a cop with the name of a modern-day superhero, Mason Storm. Couldn't you just blow chow? He's on the edge of solving this big case and, more specifically, boinking his wife. Suddenly, the bad guys bust into the room, deliver a couple of one-liners and shoot everyone.

The wife is Swiss cheese by this time and Storm is supposedly dead, but really just in a coma for seven years. His young son escapes certain death; but for his own protection is sent off to some boys' school.

As you might expect, Storm is really pissed when he comes out of his dorky coma thing. Within weeks he's a rival for Sylvester Stallone and in a tiff to get revenge on the bad guys for slaughtering his family.

Le Brock is the nurse who saves him from yet another close call only minutes after coming out of his coma.

Actually, Le Brock isn't a "brainless, twinkie bimbo." She was merely cast as one, and, being new to the industry, was all too willing to take the part.

Warner Brothers didn't hate her because she's beautiful. To the contrary, it is painfully obvious that she was cast in the movie because she's drop-dead gorgeous and has a body that would give any red-blooded male a serious case of thigh-sweats.

I do believe that, scantily-clad body aside, she does show a hint, though perhaps only a brief glimmer, of talent. "Hard to Kill" will get her more recognition, and she has enough talent that, depending on her immediate future in the industry, her career will make or break itself within the next couple of projects she signs.

If she demonstrates a little more selectivity in movies and characters, she just might emerge from this shell of a movie and prove something.

Steven Seagal? Well, we already have Sly and Arnold for the barbaric, blood and guts movies. We also have Rob Lowe for the pretty-boy, rom in the sack movies and, of course, Ted Danson for the sensitive roles. Why do we need Seagal?

Well, I do see a future for him; if one of two things happens. One chance for Seagal lies in the unlikely hope that American movie moguls will decide to bombard the country

Lady Cats fall into 1st-place tie

O-State gets surprising performances in victory

From Staff and Wire Reports

STILLWATER, Okla. — If someone had told K-State coach Gaye Griffin that Oklahoma State's Big Eight pre-season player-of-the-year selection Liz Brown would score just two points against the Lady Cats Wednesday night, the first-year coach probably would have thought she'd leave Gallagher-Iba Arena with a share of the Big Eight title.

Well, Brown did score just two points, but Oklahoma State got big games from some unheralded players to post a 75-66 win over K-State to

“We would have won by probably 20 points if someone would have told me Liz Brown would only score two points.”

— Gaye Griffin
interim Lady Cats' coach

“knock the Lady Cats back into a tie with Missouri for first-place in the Big Eight standings.

“We would have won by probably 20 points if someone would have told me Liz Brown would only score two points,” Griffin said. “But Althea Cox made up for both her and Brown, and you have to give Oklahoma State a lot of credit.”

The loss dropped K-State to 18-8 overall and 10-3 in Big Eight play, while Missouri gained a share of the lead with a 74-62 victory at Iowa State to raise the Lady Tigers' record to an identical 10-3 and a first-place tie with K-State.

O-State's junior guard Cox, who scored just six points in the first meeting between the teams, blitzed K-State with a career-high 26 points. The Cowgirls also got 20 points from Jodi Fisher, who tallied just five in K-State's win in Manhattan earlier this season.

K-State trailed almost the entire game, but made a run midway through the second half to tie the score at 51-51 on a basket by Nadira Hazim with 8:39 left to play.

Hazim's basket capped a 16-7 run by K-State as Oklahoma State had stretched a 38-33 halftime lead to a nine-point lead to start the half.

Oklahoma State regained the lead with two straight baskets before Hazim scored again to make it 55-53. Cox then scored in the paint, but Hazim answered to cut the deficit to 57-55, before Oklahoma State took control of the game for good.

Oklahoma State scored the next five points to open up a seven-point lead, but Hazim kept K-State close by scoring 16 of her 18 points in the second half.

Hazim hit her first three-point shot of the year with 1:31 left to close the deficit to 66-63, but K-State would get no closer as O-State hit 6-of-6 free throws down the stretch.

For the game, the Cowgirls connected on 31-of-38 charity tosses, including 17-of-21 in the second half.

“Oklahoma State really picked it up a notch,” Griffin said. “You have to give them a lot of credit after playing on the road at Arkansas State on Monday and then coming back to-night. They did a great job of getting the ball up and down the court.”

K-State led only twice in the game at 7-6 and 11-10 before Oklahoma State jumped out to a big first-half lead. The Cowgirls scored nine straight points for a 19-11 lead and then stretched that margin to 34-22 with four minutes left to play in the half. But K-State outscored the Cowgirls 9-2 in the final three minutes to cut the deficit to 38-33 at the intermission.

Mizzou holds off Cyclones

By The Associated Press

COLUMBIA, Mo. — Doug Smith scored 34 points and Nathan Buntin and Travis Ford hit pressure free throws in the final seconds as top-ranked Missouri held off Iowa State, 89-85, Wednesday night.

Missouri, which regained the No. 1 spot this week, spent the night trying to put away the Cyclones, who lost their seventh straight Big Eight game.

In other Big Eight action, No. 10 Oklahoma defeated Nebraska, 88-66, in Lincoln, and No. 2 Kansas downed Colorado, 103-71, in Boulder.

Iowa State's Terry Woods hit a 3-pointer to trim Missouri's lead to 82-79 with 1:49 left, but Anthony Peeler hit a free throw and, with 1:29 remaining, Buntin made two for an 85-79 lead.

With 50 seconds left, Doug Collins intercepted Buntin's bad pass and drove in for a layup to pull Iowa State to 85-83. But Ford, the Big Eight's leading free throw shooter, canned both ends of a one-and-one with 42 seconds left.

Missouri (25-2, 11-1) got 18 points from Buntin.

Iowa State (8-16, 2-9), got 24 points from Collins, 20 from Victor Alexander and 19 from Woods.

Every time Iowa State got close, the Tigers put on a run. Woods and Alexander scored to pull the Cyclones to 62-59, then a moment later Brian Pearson canned a 3-pointer to make it 64-62 with 8:59 to play.

But Ford hit two free throws to ignite an 8-1 surge by the Tigers.

Missouri led throughout the first half, settling for a 43-33 advantage at intermission, and led 52-42 early in the second half when the Cyclones went on an 8-0 run to get within two points.

Defense sparks Wildcats

By David Svoboda
Sports Reporter

Lost in the second-half performance by K-State in Tuesday's 66-60 win over Oklahoma State in Bramlage Coliseum was the effort of the Wildcats on the defensive end of the floor.

While the exploits of Ski Jones, Steve Henson and Jean Derouillere on the offensive end were obvious — right down to the box score — the defense may have been an even bigger key in the come-from-behind victory.

After watching Oklahoma State take a 21-10 lead when John Potter drained a three-pointer with 9:32 left in the first half, the Wildcats turned up the defensive pressure and started inching back into the contest.

The Cowboys shot 50 percent from the floor in the opening 20 minutes, but an active post defense and some better work on the perimeter got K-State back into the game.

Wildcat coach Lon Kruger said his team's defensive effort in the first half was good, but that the Cowboys'

— Lon Kruger
basketball coach

offensive execution was better.

“I thought the fight was there, but still they were pretty much just doing what they wanted to do,” Kruger said.

That changed in the second stanza. OSU shot just 35.7 percent against an aggressive group of Wildcats in the second 20 minutes.

“They're so quick that you can't take them away from everything, but I think we got it (defense) extended a little bit more,” Kruger said of his team's defensive effort following the intermission. “That puts a lot of pressure on the people inside, but they responded with pretty good effort.”

Those inside players — Tony Massop, Lance Simmons and Billy Ray Smith in particular — held Oklahoma State's big men relatively in check, especially after the halftime break.

Shannon set for return

Jumper's injury should be fully healed

By Dan Wicker
Sports Reporter

It's possible that steady improvement is what leads to success and championships on the track.

If this is true, senior Carla Shannon is in line for a strong performance at the National Track and Field Championships March 9 and 10 at Indianapolis, Ind.

Shannon became the first K-State athlete to qualify for the national meet way back on Dec. 2 at the KSU Open, when she triple jumped 41-2½ to break the qualifying mark by two inches.

After that meet, however, she sustained a hip injury, and she will be in action for the first time, since setting her qualifying mark, this weekend at the Big Eight Championships in Lincoln, Neb.

Shannon, a native of Atlanta, Ga., came to K-State as a junior college transfer from Highland Community College. After one year of major college competition, she may be ready to make her presence known at the national level.

Shannon failed to qualify for the national meet last year, but this season, in only the first meet of the season, she posted a guaranteed qualifying mark. Shannon attributes most of her early season success to her increase in training.

“The training I did over the summer helped me do well at the beginning of the year,” Shannon said. “Most of my weight training has made my legs a lot stronger.”

Assistant coach Cliff Rovelto, who coaches the jumpers, also believes Shannon's improvement in her jumps is closely related to her training.

“I think she is consistently jumping better than last year because she is stronger,” Rovelto said. “She has just worked more consistently and harder than last year, and done a better job in everything as training goes.”

Rovelto also believes Shannon has made strong improvements in her attitude and work ethic toward competition as compared with last year.

“She has a real positive mood in her attitude, and her work ethic is more in the line of someone who will be successful at the national level,” Rovelto said.

Shannon is not one of the typical limited college athletes. Besides the triple jump, she also competes in the long jump and high jump and is successful in all three. She sits atop the Big Eight honor roll in the triple jump and is second in the long jump at 19-6½.

Shannon has only competed in the high jump in one meet, but has a personal best that would rank her in the top five in the event.

In high school, Shannon was also competing in all three events and admitted high jump was her favorite. In college she enjoys still being involved in all three events, but her favorite has disappeared.

“I am comfortable doing three events,” Shannon said. “Now they are all about equal.”

Rovelto also admits to liking the three-event competition for Shannon. He believes the events help to improve one another.

“If people do one event, they become stagnant. If they work on a number of different events it helps a lot,” Rovelto said. “She does not work on high jump a lot — just a few approaches to get it down — but she will probably jump in the Big Eight meet.”

Shannon, like any other athlete, has set plenty of goals that she is going after this year, including her performance at the national meet in March.

“I hope to go 42-(feet) plus indoors and 43-plus outdoors,” Shannon said. “If you gave me a choice (for a finish at nationals) it would be No. 1, but I want to place in the top six. I know I can do it.”

Four players named all-academic

From Staff and Wire Reports

Four K-State basketball players were named to the Big Eight's All-Academic team Wednesday.

The Lady Cats placed three players on the squad, while the K-State men had one player qualify.

Lady Cats' forward Rita Matteucci was the only first-team selection, while teammates Dawn Stoehr and Amy Davidson made the second team, as did the Wildcats' Nick Weigel on the men's side.

To qualify for the first team, players have to be regular starters during the season.

Matteucci earned her second first-team honor by carrying a 3.03 grade point average in Life Sciences. Matteucci was inserted into the Lady Cats' starting lineup by interim coach Gaye Griffin and since then the K-State women have gone 11-3 in their drive to the conference title.

Reserve guard Stoehr actually had the highest GPA on the Big Eight women's team, posting a 3.90 in Pre-Medicine, while Davidson, a reserve guard/forward, carries a 3.38 GPA in Finance.

Weigel was one of only eight players to qualify on the men's All-Academic team. The reserve guard from Manhattan carries a 3.43 GPA in Business.

Weigel, has averaged right at one point per game, while Davidson averages two points, and Stoehr points.

Brian W. Kratzer/File

Lon Kruger's Wildcats have used solid defensive play in recent games to stake a claim at a possible NCAA Postseason Tournament bid.

Oil-man found guilty

Hershberger convicted on 25 charges

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A federal jury Wednesday found Wichita oilman James W. Hershberger guilty on 25 fraud-related charges in connection with what prosecutors said was a scheme to defraud investors and banking institutions.

However, the jury acquitted Hershberger on six other counts related to the operations of his now-defunct oil company, Petroleum Energy Inc. The jury also was unable to reach a decision on six other counts.

Hershberger had been charged with 37 counts, most of them related to mail and bank fraud. The jury delivered its verdict during the sixth day of deliberations.

As the verdict was read, Hershberger's wife, Sally, cried, and he comforted her.

Sentencing was set for May 7 in U.S. District Court before Judge Dale Saffels. Hershberger faces a maximum sentence of 130 years in prison and $70,000 in fines.

Hershberger, 58, left the federal court building without talking to reporters but his attorney, Thomas Haney, said the defendant and his wife, Sally, were "devastated" by the verdict.

"This is a client who has done wonderful things for his community and this state," Haney said, "so that makes it doubly tough. We're very disappointed. We're still in a state of shock."

Haney said he would have to discuss an appeal with Hershberger, and that decision will not be made quickly. "We'll decide within the time allotted under the court's procedures," Haney said.

Richard Hathaway, the assistant U.S. attorney who prosecuted the case, said it was "a tough decision for the jury."

But, he added, the verdict was in accordance with the testimony and an appropriate outcome. As to the no decision verdicts, he said he would study them.

As the first guilty verdict was announced by the court clerk, Sally Hershberger wept, and continued to sob into her hands which were clasped in front of her face.

Hershberger put his arm around his wife, consoling her, then stared into the table at which they sat while the rest of the verdicts were read.

He looked at the jurors as senior District Court Judge Arthur Stanley polled the jury individually to ask them if the verdicts represented their opinion. All said they did.

The eight women and four male jurors left the courthouse by a back stairway and did not talk to reporters, which was their choice.

Stanley, of Leavenworth, took the verdict in the absence of Saffels, who was in San Francisco attending a judge's meeting.

Stanley said the six counts on which the jury did not reach a verdict were "still pending," meaning the government could continue the prosecution if it chooses.

Stanley continued the bond that Hershberger has been free on.

Hershberger did not testify during his trial, which began Jan. 8, in U.S. District Court. The jury received the case Feb. 12, after hearing testimony from 71 witnesses during the five weeks of testimony.

In his closing arguments Feb. 12, Hathaway reiterated government charges that Hershberger had defrauded banks and investors by a variety of schemes, including charging investors to steal their own oil.

He also reminded the jury that Hershberger had submitted financial statements to two different banks on the same day that showed a net worth of $9.9 million and a debt of $243,000.

Hathaway also asserted that Hershberger knew of all the allegedly illegal transactions and directed others' involvement in them. Calling it a tedious case, Hathaway concluded that Hershberger's motive was "pure greed."

In his summation, defense attorney Haney warned the jury to discount what he called "red herrings" or diversions by the prosecution from real issues. Those diversions, he said, included an athletic contest that Hershberger was accused of fixing so he would win it, so-called ballot-box stuffing to get his picture on Wheaties cereal boxes and a 1981 story by Sports Illustrated of Hershberger's athletic career.

Haney reminded the jury that Hershberger's chief accusers, former employees Dyrk Dahl and Steve Levandowski, had made plea bargain agreements with the government to testify against Hershberger. Dahl and Levandowski will now be sentenced under their plea agreements.

Hershberger went to trial after a federal grand jury in Topeka indicted him last Oct. 5.

Seating made available for cabaret performance

By Todd Fertig
Collegian Reporter

Additional seating has been made available for the performance of Jury's Irish Cabaret of Dublin at 8:00 p.m. Saturday in McCain Auditorium following the rapid sale of tickets originally offered.

Only orchestra seating was originally offered for the performance, McCain Auditorium Director Richard Martin said. The limited seating was because of the typically intimate setting of cabarets and the uncertainty of the success of ticket sales. When available tickets sold quickly, tickets to the balcony were put on sale last week to offer additional seating.

Jury's Irish Cabaret of Dublin, a world-renowned entertainment company, blends traditional forms of Irish music, dance and comedy in a variety show style. The popularity of ethnic and folk entertainment like that offered by Jury's Irish Cabaret continues to grow, Martin said.

"They showcase fine Irish arts like dance, music, storytelling and folk humor," Martin said. "It's kind of like vaudeville in its setting and fast-moving variety entertainment."

Successful sales to such cultural shows are encouraging to Martin. He said that McCain occasionally schedules such lesser-known events to test the response of the public.

"We're trying to bring some interesting and different types of shows to McCain," Martin said. "This is a resource for students and the community, and we want to provide an opportunity for people to broaden their horizons."

Jury's Irish Cabaret began in Dublin's famed Jury's Hotel in 1964 where it has played to over a million visitors. As its reputation for family-style Irish entertainment grew, the company began a series of international tours and is now featuring a new cast in its sixth American tour.

The cabaret stars narrator Chris Curran, singer Tony Keney and musical director Noel Healy. The company also includes the renowned Inis Ealga Dancers, as well as Moonshine, a traditional five-piece Irish folk band.

Jury's Irish Cabaret has toured in Australia and Japan as well as in the United States and Canada and throughout Europe.

The McCain Auditorium Box Office is open Monday through Friday from 1 to 5 p.m. Information about upcoming McCain Auditorium productions can be obtained and tickets can be purchased by credit card by calling 532-6428.

Pet owners have many responsibilities

Vaccinations, adequate space necessary for animals' health

By Amy D. Hadlock
Collegian Reporter

It's hard to resist a puppy or kitten, but there is more to owning a pet than simply taking it home.

"Having the facilities for a pet, where to get the pet, feeding, grooming and training a pet are all things you should consider before getting the pet," said Jacob Mosier, professor of surgery and medicine.

"First of all, you must consider if you really want the pet," Mosier said. "You must also consider the long-term side of being a pet owner—the average dog lives about 12 years and a cat slightly longer."

Pet owners must realize they have certain responsibilities for the animal. Providing food, companionship, exercise, vaccinations and adequate space for the pet are necessities, Mosier said.

With all of these responsibilities, it may sound like a pet is a great deal of work, but pet owners say pets can be rewarding.

"I enjoy having a pet because it provides great companionship and entertainment," said Andrea Briggeman, junior in psychology. "I got my Siamese cat about a year ago, and I have no regrets."

Once the decision has been made to get a pet, the prospective pet owner must find the best place to get it, Mosier said.

"Pet shops, fullbreed breeders, occasional breeders and animal shelters are all good places to look," Mosier said.

Background information can provide clues to the pet's temperament, he said. Knowledge of a breed's disposition can help pet owners deal with behavioral problems, if any.

Prospective pet owners should also consider the characteristics of the breed and species of the pet. Pet magazines, dictionaries and encyclopedias are ways to find information on pets.

After getting the pet, it is important to take it to the veterinarian for a physical examination to ensure there are no health problems, Mosier said. The pet should have the examination within the first week of being with its new owner.

Choosing the proper pet food is another important decision the pet owner has to make.

"Most of the commercial brands are pretty good; however, there are some differences," he said. "Some are more digestible than others."

Canned pet food and dry food are both good, but the dry food can help keep tartar off the pet's teeth.

"There are different qualities of pet food," said Susan Nelson, veterinarian at the Westside Veterinary Clinic. "Premium pet food is sold at veterinarians or specialty pet stores and probably is the best. Commercial brands are sold at grocery stores and are pretty good. Then there are the generic brands, which are not very good."

"Price is a good determiner. The more expensive the pet food, the better the quality of nutrition," Nelson said.

Table scraps can be mixed with the commercial food, but the pet should not get hooked on the scraps because then it might not go back to eating the regular pet food, Mosier said.

"Water is very important for the pet," he said. "Fresh water should be put out daily."

Grooming, such as brushing and combing the pet's fur, is important for the pet's coat and also is a way of bonding between the owner and the pet.

House training is something else the pet must learn.

"Training a dog to paper is a good way to start," Mosier said. "If you are going to be gone during the day you can shut the dog in the bathroom covered with paper and then gradually take some of the paper away so the dog can become used to being trained to the paper."

Dog owners should just watch the dog and take it outside when it acts restless, Mosier said. Gradually it will become trained.

Fleas, ticks and tapeworms are pests to watch for, he said.

It is easy to spot a flea when brushing the pet's coat, Mosier said. The flea is dark brown in color and is flat from side to side. It is shiny and measures an eighth of an inch long. Fleas move fast and can also jump, he said.

Senate

All candidates now being considered have judicial experience except Stinchcomb, who has other student government experience. The experience factor was a major concern for senators last week when they voted to postpone the Tribunal appointments indefinitely.

Also of concern to Johnson was that Tribunal not be comprised totally of male members.

"We need at least one female," Johnson said.

Johnson said this experience has shown him that something should be done about the appointment process.

"I think we need to have two hearings on appointments," Johnson said. "People who make appointments need to know if there are concerns so we won't have all of them shot out of the water because of one concern."

Another issue to be debated will be the allocation of $1,507.10 to fund a lobby trip to Washington, D.C. for Johnson, the Associated Students of Kansas board chairman and the ASK campus director.

Johnson said the purpose of the trip is to meet with other student government leaders and lobby for financial aid programs. However, some senators have expressed concerns about the funding.

"I think the money could be better spent in Topeka," said Ray Kowalczycki, sophomore in biology.

"I think we should send two people, but they should meet the spending guidelines," said David McIntyre, junior in electrical engineering.

school schedule. She is the only student in the play.

This is Bucholtz's second effort as director for the Manhattan Civic Theatre, said Julie Davenport, publicity director for the organization. His directorial debut, "Present Time," led Manhattan Civic Theatre to a third-place award at the Association of Kansas Theatres' AACT/FEST last year, she said.

"Murder at the Howard Johnson's" will be presented at 8 p.m. on February 22, 23, and 24 and at 2 p.m. on February 25. Tickets for dinner and the show are $17.00 for adults and $12.00 for children 12 and under. the first half because of an injury sustained when he caught a Simmons forearm across the neck, Byron Houston played all 20 minutes of the final period and scored just five points. Houston ended the game with nine tallies.

Starting Cowboy center Mattias Sahlstrom played 21 minutes and failed to score, spending most of his time on the perimeter. Three of his five shots were from behind the three-point line.

Johnny Pittman, a 7-footer who saw eight minutes of playing time through the game — a great deal of it coming during the time Houston missed with his injury — scored two points.

After being outrebounded on the defensive end 11-9 in the opening half, K-State picked up the intensity in the second, winning the battle on the defensive boards 13-7. Overall, K-State outrebounded the taller Cowboys 35-29.

It was that hustle and fight that allowed K-State to stay in the game in the first half, Henson said.

"Coach told us after the game that if we hadn't hustled as well, or competed as well, that we might not have even been in the game (going into the second half)," he said.

with an entourage of bone-breaking movies. That's all he seemed capable of doing in "Hard to Kill," but, with any luck, that won't happen.

Seagal's more realistic chance at success lies in a huge image change on his part. Conan-type actors are becoming incredibly stale and are a dime a dozen.

Seagal must do the same as Le Brock and escape the pathetic image this movie has given him. Before that can be achieved, Hollywood is going to have to end its regression into the dark ages when men were domineering slabs of pulsating muscles and women were ditzy love slaves, ready and willing to be dragged by their hair into the cave.

Hollywood has succeeded in remaining ignorant of women's desire to be treated as equal. True, a lot of movies do feature women in important positions. "Hard to Kill" is an excellent example of this. In Le Brock's first five minutes of the film she has her hair pulled back and is apparently a somewhat respectable nurse, although she does look at the privates of male coma patients.

The film quickly changes pace as she lets her hair down and turns into gutter trash. Her character has no character. She is nothing more than Storm's love interest because all murder and no sex makes very dull movies, or so we are led to believe.

What I could hear of the film was boring, at best. Of course, I did make the mistake of going to the theater on bargain night, when all the loudest attention-seekers Manhattan has to offer came out. The Theater Tip of the week: pay the extra two bucks and go to the theater when you can actually watch the film in a manner somewhat resembling civility. Trust me on this one.

Obnoxious theater patrons aside, "Hard to Kill" is hard to stomach.

nians, spurred by a growing Islamic fundamentalist Hamas movement.

Israeli government guidelines to restrict use of force were violated and prosecution resulted only in a relatively small number of such incidents, the report said.

Rep. Gus Yatron, D-Pa., chairman of the House human rights subcommittee, complimented the State Department for a report that pulls no punches in assessing dismal human rights records of such dictatorial regimes as China and Iraq.

Yatron challenged the Bush administration to match the rhetoric of the annual review with a policy which places America's commitment to human rights and democratic institutions above offending ruthless regimes, which the administration is currently seeking to curry favor.

If a bill in the Kansas Legislature is passed, admissions could be restricted to allow only those students graduating with a C average in the regent's core curriculum or in the top one-third of their class, or who score a 21 or higher on the ACT exam to attend a regents school.

Many of the classes being transmitted throughout Kansas would fulfill requirements of the regent's core curriculum for qualified admissions.

bage," he said. "To me, an advertisement needs to be something that catches a person's attention. By using a take-off on a popular tune, it keeps that attention."

Choosing the music and the visuals for the commercials take about 10 to 20 hours, Peterson said. Then, Norm Burge, television specialist for the KSU Athletic Department, spends another four to five hours putting it together.

Peterson said he spends a great deal of time viewing highlight films of basketball and football games that make up the footage used to promote the athletic department. His goal, however, is to incorporate as many different organizations into the ads as possible.

This goal prompted him to include Rhodes Scholars, Mary Hale, senior in history, and Janelle Larson, senior in animal sciences and industry, in the most recent ad, he said.

Other universities usually use only footage from athletic events, Peterson said, adding that he wanted to emphasize all aspects of the University, not just sports.

"We're all in it together," Peterson said. The commercials are shown on network and cable stations. It was also shown during the University of Kansas-University of Missouri basketball game last Tuesday. Peterson said he's using the airtime to promote the University and to make people "feel good about what's going on here."

"Stairway to Heaven" really builds you up," said Andrea Wood, junior in apparel design. "It shows you can achieve anything you set out to do."

Chad Brown, sophomore in marketing, said he thought the commercial was a good marketing tool, but that the song didn't fit the images. "I think 'Stairway to Heaven' is a little extreme," he said.

Brown said he liked the visual, and he liked the song. He just didn't like them put together.

"It's a cool commercial. The song just needs to be a little more upbeat," Brown said.

Peterson said he is working on a new spot scheduled to air sometime in the next month. He is looking at using a Mike and the Mechanics song or "Wind Beneath My Wings" by Bette Midler as the theme.

options for supporting the program rather than a self-support system, the number and schedule of inspections, the appeal board representation, inspections of both private homes and rental units, and a sunset clause which would review the program in a certain number of years.

"I've seen a lot of places that are really unsafe and unhealthy to live in," said Sally Schorey, city housing inspector. "I am definitely in support of the program."

One of the main concerns of the committee was how to deal with the Building Officials and Code Administrators national existing structure codes, which already governs rental housing in Manhattan. Committee members were divided on whether to modify BOCA codes with the initiation of a new rental inspection program, or to let both programs run concurrently.

"Will our students, which is our most important industry, benefit? History says no," said Irmgard Dannatt, committee member and Manhattan landlord.

Renovations planned for '95

Fire-safe facilities in Seaton expected to cost $4.2 million

By Gregory A. Branson
Collegian Reporter

Improving fire safety is a major reason why Seaton Hall's $4.2 million east-wing renovation project is ranked No. 4 on the Long Range Building Request list.

The project calls for the east wing of Seaton Hall to be renovated into modern, fire-safe studios and office space for the College of Architecture and Design by 1995.

The east wing now has few fire safety facilities, and the building's construction makes it fire-prone.

"If there was a fire now, we would have to run up and down the halls yelling 'Fire!'" said Lane Marshall, dean of architecture and design. "All the stairways are made of wood, so if a fire started in one of the stairwells, then our way off the upper floors would be the first thing to go up."

Most of the money is to be used for sprinkler and alarm systems, better corridors for emergency exits and enclosed fireproof stairwells.

The only fire safety equipment in the building is a few fire extinguishers, some old fire hoses, a few non-operational fire doors and some chain-link emergency ladders made by the college.

"The fire doors are heavy, wooden doors recessed into the wall," Marshall said. "We can't even get them open anymore."

"We had our shop make some chain-link ladders about five or six years ago. If there is a fire now, the only way students on the second or third floors can get out is to break the windows and throw the ladders out, if they can find them. Can you imagine 85 students trying to climb out one window and down one ladder?"

Most rooms in the east wing are large studios with all of the corridors on one side of the building. Plans call for the corridors to be spaced more evenly through the building to allow for better emergency exits.

Larry Garvin, director of facilities planning, said the building was originally constructed as a shop area. Flooring and partitions have been added to create a space more useable for architecture, but the partitioning has been random.

"There are some two-story open spaces that were used to allow for the large testing equipment in there previously," Garvin said. "That would be like a chimney if a fire started."

Seaton was constructed out of load-bearing timber and wood masonry, he said. In a building as old as Seaton, the timber becomes dry and fire-prone.

"The wiring is also badly overloaded and nothing like code," Garvin said.

The east wing of Seaton was originally built about 80 years ago to resemble a modern industrial plant of the 1920s, so students could train in a realistic environment.

"It had very early engineering functions," Marshall said. "There were coal bins, a foundry and a

Edward Carney works in the information booth south of the K-State Union from early morning until mid-afternoon. Although it does get boring sometimes in the small cubicle, Carney manages to enjoy himself by listening to music and watching time go by.

Collegian Reporter

The first face that many visitors to the University see is that of Safety and Security Officer Edward Carney, who works in the information booth south of the K-State Union.

Sitting on a chair in the booth Monday through Friday, Carney answers questions from the curious, confused or completely lost.

"Oh, are they ever lost," Carney said. "I tell them if they get lost again. We're only four blocks long. You surely ought to run into something."

Carney said he began working in the old information booth in the faculty/staff section of the Union parking lot when it opened in 1979. Previously, Carney had spent 20 years with the Riley County Police Department.

Last semester, a new white booth was installed on 17th Street. The visitor parking permit rules changed as well. All-day permits, which had been free, cost $2. Carney said he used to give out about 300 permits per day, but now that number is down to about 25.

Carney has the task of informing drivers of the change in policy.

"Let's just say that you have to sit here and smile," Carney said. "I have to take the abuse. If you're not cool-headed, then you fly off the handle. I tell them I just have to follow regulations."

Not all drivers are irate, though. The new parking meters in the Union parking lot have been popular with visitors and with the spouses of students and faculty who park there during lunch, he said.

"(Students) like it because they don't have to buy a tank of gas to find a parking spot," Carney said. "I tell (visitors), 'Well, we're getting ready to change classes, you should be able to find a spot.'"

Work in the booth varies in intensity, he said.

"It goes in spurts," Carney said. "Some mornings I can't drink a cup of coffee, sometimes I can look out the window."

"People say, 'How can you stand to be cooped up in there?'" he said. "I'm not really cooped up. There's lots of interesting people."

Posters with parking regulations are taped to the inside of the booth for visitors to see, along with state maps and maps of campus parking areas and buildings.

Aside from helping him direct people, the taped-up maps help keep the sunlight out of Carney's eyes.

"In the morning the sun rises right there between Kedzie and Calvin," Carney said. "That's what I've got my cap for."

The cap, made of purple corduroy with "Kansas State Wildcats" in silver letters on its front, hangs on a hook on the window. Carney also tries to wear a tie with purple on it whenever he can, he said.

"I am the ambassador for K-State," Carney said. "I'm the first one they see."

Surrounding Carney in the booth are a small refrigerator, two heaters, a coffee pot and a telephone. A cassette player sits on one of two counters, playing soft 1950s rock.

Carney said over the years, he has transferred his collection of country and western, light classics and jazz records onto tapes.

"You've probably seen those ads for the '50s music on TV, right?" Carney said. "Every one you hear, I have. People call the radio stations asking for old music. They tell them, 'Call Ed Carney.' That's a fact."

"(People) say, 'Where do you have a catalog?' I say, 'Right here,'" he said, pointing to his head.

Carney said he has made a tape of music from the 1940s for his wife's upcoming class reunion in Walnut.

"That's a town about the size of a doorknob," Carney said, making a twisting gesture with his hand.

Carney said his wife of 51 years, Elnora, is a librarian at Woodrow Wilson School. His daughter, Carol, is sophomore in elementary education at K-State.

Carney said he used to coach slow-pitch base softball but gave it up after an accident. Since becoming an amateur radio operator in 1983, he has traveled across the country for Hamfests, where amateur radio operators meet face-to-face. But he has met many other operators by voice.

"I've talked around the world," Carney said. "You can talk to that guy up in the rocket," he said, pointing toward the sky.

"I like to chew the fat with someone," Carney said. "I usually say, 'I'm out here in Kansas, on the yellow brick road, in the land of Oz.' You know?"

A young woman walked up to the booth.

"Where's the police department?"

Minnesota senator under scrutiny by ethics panel

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Senate Ethics Committee said Thursday it would begin a trial-like hearing on Sen. David Durenberger because of "substantial credible evidence" that he violated Senate rules and federal law.

Most of the allegations concern a book-promotion arrangement under which the Minnesota Republican made speeches and accepted fees to promote two books he wrote.

During the trial stage of an investigation, the committee determines whether to recommend that the full Senate vote for punishment, which could range from a reprimand to expulsion in the most serious case.

The six-member committee said Durenberger may have:

- Violated outside income limits by accepting payments for speeches in 1985 and 1986. Durenberger made numerous appearances during that time which he characterized as book promotion speeches for his publisher, Piranha Press Inc. of Minneapolis.

- Failed to report on his financial disclosure forms for 1985 and 1986 "the acceptance of reimbursement" for travel undertaken in connection with the book publishing deal.

- Violated a rule by converting a campaign contribution to personal use, and violated federal election law by failing to report and deposit the contribution, which he transferred to his publisher. The check of $5,000 was made out to "Durenberger for U.S. Senate."

- Violated federal law and a Senate Rules Committee regulation prohibiting the commercial use of Senate space. The committee said he was paid an honorarium or other fee for six appearances in Senate-controlled areas.

Homosexuals say some statutes unfair

Partners desire insurance, health benefits for monogamous lifestyles

Gay Life In MANHATTAN

By Julie Andsager
Features Editor

Editor's note: This is the last in a series of articles about gay life in Manhattan.

Sexual preference has accepted a portion of Americans from being accepted by the rest of society.

"In a way, society's norms and values don't apply to homosexuals," said Chris, a K-State junior who asked to have his last name withheld.

Most problems stem from a lack of understanding about homosexuality, said Lydia, a K-State senior who also asked to have her last name withheld. She said some people seem frightened of gay men and lesbians.

"The people who are most homophobic are the ones who are fighting their sexuality the most," Lydia said.

Eunice Dorst, co-owner of Kindred Spirit Book Store, said ignorance often leads to biases against homosexuals. It is one aspect of being a lesbian that makes her angry.

"I'm being defined by my sexuality instead of who I am," Dorst said. "Sexuality is only a small part of a person. It would be the same as defining somebody who's black as black instead of the fact that they are a warm and caring person. I guess that's what prejudice is."

In the future, though, U.S. laws may evolve to include homosexuals.

Task forces on domestic partners have been formed in several cities to study the possibility of giving homosexuals some of the same legal benefits as married people, according to the Nov. 20, 1989, issue of Time magazine. Three California cities offer health benefits to domestic partners of employees.

Chris said most medical benefits and anti-discrimination laws do not specifically deal with sexual preference. In a Time/Cable News Network poll, 54 percent of Americans said homosexual couples should be permitted to receive medical and life-insurance benefits from a partner's policies.

Dorst said she does not personally care whether same-sex marriage becomes legal, unless it's the only way to receive benefits.

Richard Levy, associate professor of law at the University of Kansas, said an Equal Protection Clause in the Constitution says states may not deny any person equal protection under the law.

The clause does not specifically mention homosexuals, however. Levy said the omission leaves open the possibility that discrimination against homosexuals would still be legal under the clause.

While court cases involving homosexuality have not set any real precedents for national standards, Levy said, they do raise legal doubts about the extent of gay rights.

"Some cases have held certain kinds of discrimination unconstitutional," Levy said. "Others have upheld other kinds of discrimination."

For example, Levy said the courts upheld the right of the FBI not to hire homosexuals because of their sexual preference. A 1986 case in Georgia made it illegal for gay men to practice homosexual acts in the state, even in their own homes.

"(The cases) do suggest at least there's uncertainty in the law as to whether it's appropriate for states or governments to rely upon homosexuality to treat (people) differently," Levy said. "I don't think that goes so far as to say (the law) must allow homosexuals to marry or to receive benefits."

In Kansas, the Lawrence City Commission decided not to take action in January 1988 on the most recent legislation involving homosexual rights in this area, said Aaron Andes, director of the Gay and Lesbian Services of Kansas at KU. A proposed amendment to the city's Human Rights Clause would have made discrimination against sexual orientation or perceived sexual orientation illegal with regard to housing and employment, Andes said.

"The commission said they didn't have proof that discrimination existed," Andes said.

Although legal benefits for homosexuals are inconsistent, gay men and lesbians have fewer rights in terms of legal marriage. The only industrialized nation to allow registered gay partnerships is Denmark, according to Time magazine.

According to the Time/CNN poll, 23 percent of Americans think marriages between homosexual couples should be recognized by the law. More than two-thirds of the respondents in the poll — 69 percent — did not think same-sex marriages should be legalized.

"There's a long way to go (before homosexual marriages are legalized)," Chris said. "I think education would have to be the key. There would have to be a lot of people come out of the closet. There are a lot of gay people out there. It's just hard to identify them."

Chris said legalizing homosexual marriages would be a step forward for the United States.

"For one thing, it promotes monogamy, which is good," Chris said. "Homosexuals are just as capable as heterosexuals at loving. I eventually would like to form some kind of lifelong bond with someone."

"It's too bad there have to be laws," Chris said. "I personally just want to be a normal person and fit in. Basically, I do. There have to be laws, I guess."

U.S.-flag tanker explodes

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — A U.S.-flag Kuwaiti tanker loaded with naphtha and diesel fuel exploded Thursday in the Persian Gulf and two American crewmen were believed killed. The other 23 seamen, all Americans but one, abandoned the burning ship and were rescued by a U.S. Navy frigate.

U.S. sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, said remains had been found in the water but it was not clear whether they were of one or two people. A U.S. military spokesman said he could not confirm the report.

Other American military sources said the two men missing, and evidently killed, were the captain and first mate of the 81,283-ton Surf City but further identification would have to come from the owners, the Kuwait Oil Tanker Co. No one at the company was available for comment Thursday night.

Capt. Ron Wildermuth, chief spokesman for U.S. Central Command headquarters in Tampa, Fla., said there were no reports of mines from the Iran-Iraq war in the area and "initial reports indicate the explosion was internal."

The Surf City exploded 20 miles off the United Arab Emirates, said U.S. officials and shipping sources in the gulf.

"It was a huge explosion, the ship just blew up," said Wayne Cohen, 27, of Boston, who was standing watch on the bridge.

Airlines ask for seat mandates

WASHINGTON (AP) — The airline industry changed its position on infant safety seats Thursday and asked the government to require them for all passengers under 2 years old.

The proposal, if adopted by the Federal Aviation Administration, could require thousands of parents each day to buy tickets for children who now fly free. Airlines, however, still would have the option of offering free rides or reduced fares.

"If you buckle your children up at 50 miles per hour, why not at 550 miles per hour?" asked Robert Aaronson, president of the Air Transport Association, which represents major air carriers.

The association took the unusual step of filing a petition asking the FAA to impose a tougher requirement on airlines than the agency itself is considering.

Airlines had encouraged infant seat use but had opposed rules to require them.

Sheep deaths still mystery

BURBANK, Wash. (AP) — There are 270 dead sheep, 100 aborted calves, six sick people, traces of chemicals and sightings of a mysterious crop duster airplane.

And while some tantalizing hints have been raised, no one really knows the solution to this rural whodunit in southeastern Washington's cattle and potato-growing country.

"How to poison that many animals that fast is still a mystery," said Clarke Brown, a state Department of Agriculture investigator. "For that many to get poisoned without finding the obvious source is extremely unusual."

Investigators are focusing on two farm chemicals but say they don't account for all the problems. In fact, they say the animal deaths, which occurred in adjacent fields, could be unrelated.

According to the investigators, some evidence was initially withheld by witnesses, and so much time passed before a veterinarian was called after the mid-January cow abortions that any chemical traces had disappeared.

Medicare cuts face opposition

WASHINGTON (AP) — A majority in the House and Senate have lined up against President Bush's proposal to cut Medicare payments to hospitals next year.

Fifty-one senators and 227 House members signed letters to congressional budget committees expressing their opposition to the proposed cuts of about $4 billion.

"Many hospitals are already experiencing severe financial difficulties," the senators wrote in a letter released Thursday.

"Cuts in the Medicare program of the magnitude that the president is proposing can only make the situation worse and will pose a real threat to health care for the elderly and disabled."

Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., and Rep. Bob Whittaker, R-Kan., helped organized the letter-writing campaign.

Kassebaum said in a statement that the lawmakers wanted to clearly demonstrate widespread opposition to Bush's proposal as the House and Senate Budget committees prepare a spending blueprint for the 1991 fiscal year, which starts in October.

"With the average hospital projected to lose 8.4 cents on the dollar for care rendered to Medicare beneficiaries, and with nearly two-thirds of our hospitals suffering losses on such care, the administration's proposals are clearly unacceptable," House members wrote in their letter.

The cuts are part of a recommendation by Bush to trim $5.5 billion from Medicare spending, which would grow to $110.5 billion under the administration's 1991 budget.

Cameras banned from trial

JUNCTION CITY (AP) — Television cameras have been banned and other recording devices have been limited for the first-degree trial of the Rev. Thomas P. Bird next week.

Judge Melvin M. Gradert said in an order issued Thursday that television video filming would be prohibited during the trial that starts Monday in Geary County District Court.

"...the television camera is excluded from the courtroom during this trial...because of the space problems in the Geary County Courthouse and to insure that the defendant receives a fair and impartial trial as guaranteed by constitutional protections," Gradert said in the order.

He also said one pool audio recorder and one still camera would be allowed in the courtroom to be shared by all media.

Bird, 39, is charged with first-degree murder in the Nov. 4, 1983 shooting of his reputed lover's husband, Martin K. Anderson, in a Geary County farm field.

Bird is already serving a life prison term for killing his wife and a term of 2 1/2 to seven years for conspiracy in an earlier unsuccessful plot against Anderson.

Customers fax grocery lists

LEAWOOD (AP) — It's your turn to make dinner, but the cupboards are bare and you're stuck late at work.

Don't sweat it if you live near this Kansas City suburb — just fax the grocery list to the local Hy-Vee and zip by the store's drive-up window.

"We'll go around and pick all the stuff up, and put the frozen items in the freezer until you show up," said Rod Abel, assistant director of the Hy-Vee Food & Drug Store in Leawood. "We just get your credit card number and use that for payment."

Customers pay a $2 service charge per trip.

The store has been offering the service for about six weeks and promoting it the last three weeks by placing fax forms in shoppers' sacks.

Proposed garage may increase price of parking permit

By Amy Hadlock
Collegian Reporter

It could be two years before a decision on building a campus parking garage is made, said Charles Beckom, chief of the K-State Police Department.

Beckom said cost is the biggest factor in considering the garage.

"The garage that we are thinking about would cost some where around $7 to $12 million," he said.

The money to pay for the garage would have to come from its users, Beckom said. He said it would probably mean a higher price for parking permits.

Other costs in addition to the cost of simply building the garage will also need to be considered, he said.

"When thinking of costs for the garage, we must also think of maintenance and security, which are two of the biggest costs other than the main cost of the garage," he said.

Maintenance costs would be tremendous, Beckom said. Maintenance includes deterioration of the building and weather conditions such as snow in a partially open garage.

"Deterioration of the building starts from the inside," Beckom said.

"Therefore, you must hire experts to inspect the garage and make sure it is safe before the garage starts to deteriorate."

Weather conditions include removing snow buildup from a partially open garage. Special equipment would be necessary to remove the snow from the garage because regular-sized equipment would not fit inside the building, he said.

Security is another factor under consideration. This includes security guards or electronic security to ensure the safety of people using the building throughout the day, Beckom said.

"The parking lot south of the K-State Union is probably the most often thought of place to put the parking garage if we build one," Beckom said. "There is also the possibility of the lot east of McCain."

"There are some alternatives that we have to think about before actually deciding to build the garage," Beckom said.

"First of all, we can maximize what we already have by making more spaces in our lots. Next, there is a possibility of a bus transit system," Beckom said.

An ad-hoc committee made up of two faculty members, two students and two staff members did a study of the campus in 1987 and came up with a plan for improved University parking.

"We did the study and then hired two different consulting firms to review the plan and report back," said Larry Garvin, director of facilities planning.

The first consulting firm developed a parking management plan based on repairing or replacing surfaces, Garvin said. The second consulting firm supported the University's ad-hoc study.

However, parking plans have not been in a standstill.

"The parking meters were put in and seem fairly successful," Garvin said.

Taylor reflects on 33 years

Anthropology professor to retire in May

By Monica Marcotte
Collegian Reporter

Robert Taylor sits in his small cluttered office in Waters Hall. He looks uneasy. He is a little wary of journalists, he explains. He has been misquoted in the past.

Taylor, associate professor of anthropology, will retire in May after 33 years of teaching at K-State. Taylor was the University's first anthropology professor, starting before there was even an anthropology program.

"Most people probably think of archaeological digs or remote, irrelevant tribes when they think of anthropology, but that is a distortion," Taylor said. "People from tribal groups are now leaders of Third World nations. Many of them live within our own borders."

"The world is characterized by rapid cultural change, and anthropologists are specialists on change," he said. "Anthropology is as relevant to real human issues as you can get."

Taylor, who said he once wanted to be an agricultural missionary, was told he would have to know about cultures before he could be of any help as a missionary.

After taking an anthropology course or two, Taylor knew he wanted to teach anthropology to others.

Steve Wolgast/Staff

K-State's first anthropology professor, Robert Taylor, will retire at the end of the semester after teaching for 33 years. Taylor's area of specialty is the post-Columbian Indian cultures of Central America.

Taylor remembers his first teaching experience in 1951 at Wheaton College in Illinois. He had to teach in the same rooms in which he had been a student only a short time before.

"I ran around several blocks near campus to overcome my nausea before I could face my first class," Taylor said. "I looked like a college freshman. Some of the senior anthropology majors were older than I was. I overheard many an interesting conversation among students who thought I was one of them."

Taylor said he contracted polio early into his first semester of teaching, and graduate students had to take over his classes for the rest of the semester. Taylor later had surgery to correct muscles destroyed in his ankle by the polio, resulting in a dropped foot. The surgery was necessary to do field work in another country, he said.

Taylor's main area of interest is the post-Columbian Indian cultures of Mexico and Central America. He and his wife, Floris, conducted research in a small community in southern Mexico in the 1950s.

"While there, everyone got amoebic dysentery, and my wife came down with typhoid and malaria at the same time," Taylor said.

He credits an especially competent Mexican physician for saving her life.

In 1957, while still in Mexico, Taylor was notified of an offer to teach at Kansas State College, as it was known then.

Aggieville renovations feature improved lighting, banners

By Tammy Rose
Collegian Reporter

Coming soon ... a new Aggieville.

When the Aggieville renovation is complete, members of the Aggieville Business Association hope the community will enjoy Aggieville's new look.

Jon Levin, treasurer of the association, said the new look will be distinctive.

Light poles in the shopping district will be equipped for banners, and trash receptacles will be attached at the base. Shades on top of the lights will not only provide a unique look, but also use the light source efficiently by creating a larger illuminated area, Levin said.

Another phase of the renovation includes stone columns, which have already been placed at the north Manhattan Avenue entrance and west entrance into Aggieville. They will also be placed at the east entrance.

Levin said not many problems have been encountered during the renovation, but construction is running behind schedule. Oct. 1 is the date the association has set to have the renovation complete. Levin said the first block of renovation took longer than it should have.

"Some of the businesses were interrupted for longer than any of us would've liked," he said. "But, I think things are going as well as they can."

Ilene Adams, manager of Brentwood for Men and Women, said it did affect her business, especially since it happened during the first couple of months the store was open. However, Adams said the benefits of the finished product will outweigh inconveniences of the construction.

Funding for the $2 million renovation is provided in two ways. The city is paying 66 percent of the cost over a 10-year period, and the

Planetarium tours planned for educational purposes

By Laura Scroggins
Collegian Reporter

More than 600 people, including elementary school students, are scheduled to tour the KSU Spitz Planetarium this semester.

Barry Adams, assistant instructor of physics, said the planetarium shows are designed to get people interested in astronomy and science in general.

He said he is using this idea as a tool to draw teachers and students from all over the Manhattan area to the planetarium for educational presentations about astronomy. About 20 planetarium shows are scheduled for this semester.

"Astronomy is a great science motivator," Adams said. "Through it, many people are led to the sciences."

The presentations are designed as educational units or lessons, he said.

Before each group of students arrives, Adams contacts the teachers and assesses the knowledge of the group. This way, he said, the speakers can pinpoint what needs to be covered. It is also good for teachers, who then can plan before and after lessons in their classrooms.

Adams said he commissioned the help of two members of the Astronomy Club to create the lessons, present a maximum of four lessons a week and maintain the planetarium equipment. The two students are paid a salary of $50 per week from funds that the physics department was given through the Margin of Excellence.

The project budgeted $500 to cover the months of February through May, Adams said.

Marc Machin, junior in electrical engineering and one of the student workers, said that $200 went for each of the student workers' salaries. The remaining $100 was left to cover emergencies, he said.

The funds were approved by the College of Arts and Sciences in December, Machin said.

Of the 20 presentations, one was geared for senior citizens in the Manhattan area. Adams said they brought

Confusing traffic laws cause violation

"Tutti-frutti, oh Rudy, whop dah da da dah, clutch, shift down." Fantasy over, reflections of cherryballs are spinning in my rear-view mirror. That was a good song, too.

"What now?" I said. "It's 1 a.m. Tuesday and I just woke up. All I wanted to do was work on my column over here at dear old Kedzie Hall. Oh, I know, it must be the tread on my tires. I'm sorry officer, I can't afford Goodyears, but I heard the fine for insufficient tread is only $6."

I approached the officer — with various violations speeding through my head. I wasn't parked illegally, and my license plate has the new $35 stickers on it.

"Excuse me, Officer, I went up the north exit ramp in the Union parking lot? So, it's an entrance ramp, and I have to go down?"

Nailed again, this time with a $55 ticket, payable to the Riley County District Court.

A $55 citation (including court costs) for going the wrong way on a ramp is excessive. Officials from campus police say the fine is so high because the offense is classified as a moving violation in the state of Kansas.

The north ramp dumps onto a public roadway with moving traffic, if you drive up, the wrong way. If drivers drive down, the ramp dumps into the parking lot, not a roadway. What is the fine for dumping into a parking lot?

This ramp is not clearly marked and the sign isn't really noticeable at night. The average night driver probably won't see the "Wrong Way" sign until he or she is at the top of the ramp, where the sign is posted. It should read, "Too late, sucker." A sign should be planted about 25 yards in front of the ramp that reads "Don't go up, stupid." For you sly, nocturnal drivers, don't back down that ramp either. Even though you are going the right direction, it's still a wrong way violation, the police said. The hood of the car is still pointing the wrong way. Logic strikes again.

Many people have called me with complaints about this same scenario. Riley County officers do not regularly patrol the campus, they say, and campus cops still shouldn't be issuing their tickets.

One angry student called me and said she was going to protest the charges. I wished her luck, then gave her my lucky purple clover. She ended up with a smaller temper and a smaller wallet. The judge wouldn't even reduce the fine.

She told me citations issued by a campus policeman shouldn't be payable to the Riley County Court. If students must pay Riley County Court, violators should at least get cited by a county officer. (Makes sense, doesn't it?) But once again, those bizarre traffic regulations come into play throwing a monkey wrench into common sense.

The law says driving the wrong way, even in a parking lot, is a moving violation. Because it's a moving violation, the campus police can't handle the book work. It's all processed by the state and Riley County. The offense is even put on your driving record. They also rat to your insurance agent so he can hike your rates.

Campus streets, drives, lots and ramps are considered public property. Yet, the Riley County Police don't usually patrol the grounds. Campus cops get to do their dirty work. RCPD is denied the thrill of issuing campus parking tickets because the cars are parked on campus property. The hard reality is, all University grounds are public property. Being a student or being on campus doesn't make anyone exempt from any local, county or state laws.

Many students don't realize campus police are official officers of the law. They have the same authority on and off campus as any other police force. Officially, the RCPD has full jurisdiction on campus. Normally, campus police limit patrolling to the campus' surrounding grounds. This includes greek houses and apartment complexes adjacent to campus. Strictly out of courtesy, the county and city police force recognizes the boundaries of campus. Campus police are often called to assist their fellow officers of other forces and vice versa. The law is confusing and frustrates many motorists, but campus police are merely doing their duty.

The only way K-State could process moving violations would be to establish its own judicial system. The system would have to comply with all state and federal regulations. All the fines, sentences and penalties would have to parallel those in the Riley County.

The system would be costly, but it might work. They could issue driving permits for $20. Driving on campus without a permit would be punishable by a fine of $3 and a promise never to drive again. The police could hire nasty undercover agents for this, like they have for parking. Agents could zip around on little pink mopeds, disguised as nerds, handing out citations. They could even form a union and have a ball — the Nasty Undercover Ticket-Givers Spring Formal.

With our own judicial system, maybe a rape case would get investigated. Campus police could get rid of the magic sexual assault file — the one with the black hole in it. Then, cases of sexual assault and harassment might get out of file 13. They might even get a conviction — what a triumph.

In the meantime, watch out for up-down ramps, campus police in the city, city police on campus and Riley County police in Pottawattomie.

Rights of homosexuals should not be denied

The recent Collegian series "Gay Life in Manhattan" has given heterosexuals a glimpse into the lives of homosexuals in the community.

The people interviewed for the story talked openly about recognizing their sexual preferences, "coming out of the closet" and how they perceive their lives as homosexuals in a predominantly heterosexual world.

Out of fear of discrimination or retribution for being homosexual, many sources asked that their names not be revealed. It is unfortunate this fear even exists.

But anonymity is part of the point of the series. Homosexuals are forced to be selective in who they tell because society has yet to accept that sexual diversity is a reality.

The identity of a specific source isn't important; their struggle with intolerance is.

Sexual preference is not a visually apparent characteristic. Like skin color or gender, sexual preference has nothing to do with job performance, intelligence or the abilities of a person. The only difference between homosexuals and heterosexuals is with whom they prefer to have sexual relations.

Because of intolerance, homosexuals are often denied the rights a democratic society claims to offer all people. Only recently has the law even begun to consider recognizing the right of homosexuals to legal marriage. The Equal Protection Act covers race, gender, national origin and physical limitation, but excludes sexual preference.

Homosexuals can't change their sexual preference any more than heterosexuals can change theirs. Prejudice, however, is a learned behavior.

Prejudice can be corrected.

Argument weak

Editor,

I would like to respond to Brent Shaffer's letter on the wrong definition of racism. After reading his weak and contradictory letter in the Collegian, Brent's ignorance doesn't surprise me.

In his definition of racism, a racial joke is not racism. So, he believes that antagonizing and poking fun at certain races isn't racism! He assumes that this is acceptable in the work place. How absurd and even racist of him.

Also, Brent stated as his basic point that people shouldn't confuse racism with prejudice. Brent contradicted himself by the statement, and I quote, "the definition of racism that I understand is prejudice with the power to impose that prejudice on the individuals affected to their harm."

In that one statement, he refuted his whole argument. Not only did he manage to refute his argument but he leaped totally away from his basic point. Brent quickly pointed out that there are blacks that hate whites, also. He said "it is pictured as the little boy picking on the big bully." How many people have heard of a little boy picking on a big bully? Maybe his analogy stems from the fact that the little boy was antagonized first.

But, I will tell Brent, and the others like him, this: You can't define or even understand racism unless you experience it. For instance, how can you define something as basic as milk if you've never seen or tasted it?

So, unless you've been made the butt of a racial joke, harassed, or treated like you are sub-human because you're different, be quiet!

Pot should be legal

Editor,

I'd like to thank Kirk Caraway for describing Bush's desperate attempt to win his war on drugs by creating a barrage of propaganda. Creating a state of drug paranoia, by emotional appeals and unqualified statements, is not a solution.

Bush's attack on the common user can't be efficiently deployed within the framework of our Constitution. But national paranoia creates a great environment to bypass constitutional rights. A recent survey reported that over 60 percent of those surveyed would be willing to give up a few of their constitutional rights in the name of the war on drugs. This is not a solution.

America needs to hear the facts. Like the fact that all drugs aren't the same. Take marijuana for instance. The facts are it's not addictive, it has no lethal dosage, it doesn't cause its users to move on to harder drugs, and research has found no relationship between consumption and intelligence. Francis L. Young, Administrative Law Judge for the Drug Enforcement Agency, recently declared marijuana "... one of the safest therapeutically active substances known to man ..."

Legalization and taxation of marijuana could generate a tremendous revenue. This revenue could be used to educate America and treat users of more harmful drugs, like cocaine and alcohol. But all we hear is hype.

I'm not denying the fact that drug abuse does exist. I'm not advocating the use of any drug. I'm saying that propaganda and paranoia aren't solutions.

Bush can't tell us the facts. It would weaken his stance on drugs. He would be losing a battle in the war on drugs. I think losing a battle is worth winning the war.

Poor politics

Editor,

With all the recent controversy about the quality of education students are receiving at K-State, it's interesting to note that some individuals are gaining useful knowledge and experience in their area of interest — our student body government. The president is already attempting, at this early stage in his political career, to stack the deck and nominate friends who support his interests to be senators.

Could it be that our elected officials are playing to special interest and will disregard the feelings and opinions of the common student? It would seem so to me.

Way to go, folks! You've learned will from your models on Capitol Hill. I'm sure if the student senators were on salary they would vote themselves a pay raise.

Editor,

I would like to respond to the column written by Karin Dell'Antonia about physical education being unnecessary. Physical education is not a "pud" curriculum nor is it unnecessary.

Anyone knows that PE 101 is not a class intended to get you "fit for life" in eight weeks. It is designed to let you know about your initial fitness level and allow you to make an educated decision about how to pursue an exercise program if you wish to do so. If you don't want to exercise or maintain an average level of fitness, then that's your prerogative, but at least you were given the opportunity to explore the area and make a decision based on knowledge.

The common conception of physical education is still one of push-ups, sit-ups and game playing. But Principles of Physical Education is geared toward educating students about lifetime fitness and reducing the risks of health-related diseases. There are many Americans who die from cardiovascular disease, hypertension, cancer, diabetes and other diseases that could have been prevented if the victims had been knowledgeable about proper diet and exercise principles. Such knowledge would allow them to substantially reduce the risk factors related to the diseases. Physical education can provide that necessary education.

Few people give physical education credit for its curriculum and studies, which include many scientific-oriented classes. Physical education is just as reputable as any other required class and curriculum, and physical education majors and faculty are not given the respect they deserve for their hard work and studies. We have several professors that actively work on research questions ranging from neuromuscular activation in space to endocrine responses to exercise. My final suggestion is that you explore the opportunities physical education can provide instead of accepting the negative stereotype popularized by articles such as Karin Dell'Antonia's.

Pediatric obesity increasing

Study shows marked gain in number of obese children

By Shannan Seely
Collegian Reporter

Pediatric obesity is increasing nationally, said Joanne Ikelda, professor of nutritional sciences at the University of California-Berkeley.

According to a recent study of children's statistics compared in the '60s, '70s and '80s, obesity has increased 54 percent for children ages 6 to 11, Ikelda said. Super-obesity in children of the same age group has increased to 98 percent.

Obesity in adolescents ages 12 to 17 has increased to 39 percent, and 54 percent of obese adolescents have been found superobese.

Ikelda delivered a speech on concerns about children and weight as part of the 10th annual conference of the Kansas Nutrition Council Thursday in the K-State Union. The conference was titled "Children and Teens: Weighty Issues."

About 230 council members, including nurses, dietitians and home economists, attended the conference.

Ikelda talked about the steps health professionals can take to address the prevalence of child obesity.

ity. She said the health professional can be either effective or ineffective in interacting with obese clients.

"We all know professionals who are very, very good at helping others and others not very good at it," Ikelda said.

She said the most successful professionals think of their clients as able, dependable, friendly, warm and internally motivated individuals.

Ikelda said that during a lecture at the University of Berkeley-California, she asked students majoring in foods, nutrition and dietetics to write down three words describing slides they had just viewed of obese people doing several activities. Some students were objective by describing the people as "obese" or "fat", however, most responses were "lazy and sloppy," she said.

The negative attitude many future professionals have will not help clients get better, Ikelda said.

A negative attitude will not obtain faster results, she said. If all obese people were made to feel like they were not important until they were thin, they would all have slimmed down by now.

The positive reinforcement makes the clients feel good about themselves and puts them in a state of mind so they can have control over their lives and maybe their eating habits, Ikelda said.

Ikelda cited the results of a 16-year longitudinal study that dispelled common myths on the development of obesity in children. She said the study sampled 450 six-month-old infants living in Berkeley, Calif., 185 of whom were followed for 16 years.

■ Fat infants are not at a greater risk of becoming obese children than lean infants. Fat preschool children are at risk of becoming fat teenagers, however. Other researchers have shown fat teenagers are at very high risk of becoming fat adults.

"Recent statistics show that four out of five teens become obese adults," Ikelda said.

■ High predictability for adolescent obesity occurs between the ages of 6 to 9 for girls, and 9 to 12 for boys. Obesity can begin at any preschool or school age.

■ Physical activity levels of pre-obese children are somewhat lower than activity levels of pre-non-obese children, starting as early as six months of age. There was no significant difference in caloric intake of these two groups, however.

■ Many obese adolescents have a history of eating problems in the preschool years.

Malnutrition element in eating disorders

By Shannan Seely
Collegian Reporter

The three types of eating disorders have one common element that cannot be solved by medication or a change in weight.

"All are suffering from malnutrition. And no drug available can replace calories," said C. Alton Barnhill, director of the eating disorders program at the Menninger Foundation in Topeka.

Barnhill spoke about putting eating disorders in perspective at the 10th annual conference of the Kansas Nutrition Council Thursday in the K-State Union. About 225 nutrition professionals attended the conference.

Many psychologists realize that people with eating disorders also suffer from depression, Barnhill said. Doctors prescribe medication to resolve the depression.

He said that 95 percent of the people who seek treatment for eating disorders are women. Eating disorders have always been around, but are more prevalent today because a woman's appearance is heavily emphasized in society.

Barnhill said he believes malnutrition is a factor in eating disorders and constitutes special problems.

"Have you ever watched an obese person?" he said. "These people do not have any energy. The only thing they move is their eyeballs. It is a wonder how some are going to get out of their chairs."

"My mother was obese, and we lived out on a farm," he said. "She had a thing about finding baling wire on the ground. It wasn't until I was grown up that I found out why she was upset about it. She was afraid that one day she would trip on the wire out in a field, and no one would know and she wouldn't be able to get up. She was frightened and suffered from that fear."

Barnhill said some obese people cannot bend over to tie their shoes, so they wear slip-ons. Challenges also arise in getting in and out of cars. Some travelers are required to pay for two airplane tickets because they take up two seats.

Bulimics spend energy planning the next binge. Barnhill said one patient had a ritual of bingeing every day at 4 p.m. She would bring 10 pounds of food into her bedroom, lock the door and change into an old dress.

She would eat, vomit, clean up the mess and change into her professional clothes before her husband came home. She did not have much time to do anything else and vomiting used up a lot of her energy, he said.

Compulsive eaters consider food the center of life. They have a fascination with preparing and shopping for food. It takes up all of their thinking, Barnhill said.

It is not necessary to make sure the clients gain weight to be healthy, he said. The most important step to health is to help them eat a balanced diet.

"Then they can smile, talk to others and have interests outside themselves," Barnhill said.

Babies expected to learn, advance during early years

By Jan Puls
Collegian Reporter

Parents of the '90s are teaching their babies to read and recognize the paintings of Picasso and Monet. Infants are also participating in exercise classes and learning to swim.

As parents work to increase the intelligence and physical abilities of their children, they are falling into the "superbaby" syndrome.

When children are pushed to perform at unrealistic expectations, they become frustrated and angry, said Ann Murray, professor of human development and family studies.

Research shows that children can learn at a very early age, but some parents are going overboard, Murray said.

"Many of these programs ignore the developmental stages of the child, and we have no research that proves these programs work," Murray said.

Several instructional books on the market are being used by parents as guides for educating their babies.

"Parents who aren't sure what they're doing buy these books and take them as the gospel truth," Murray said.

"These books provide a nice, easy pattern for doing things, and that's not how it works," said Richard Clubb, visiting professor of psychology from Texas Christian University.

The best way to predict how a child will develop is to evaluate the expectations and values of its parents, Clubb said.

Children whose parents have realistic expectations and value educational and physical development will perform better in physical tasks and will have a higher IQ, Clubb said.

Both Murray and Clubb suggest reading to babies as an alternative to the "superbaby" education methods.

"The child who does best is one who is in a reading situation where the parent and child interact together," Clubb said.

Most children like to read and be read to, Clubb said. If they are pushed too much they find it work and lose interest in reading.

"Dual-career families start feeling guilty," Murray said. "They latch onto a book to make their babies smarter, trying to make up for lost time, and come home with a lesson plan in mind."

Murray said parents should concentrate on interactions that are fun. Instead of concentrating on teaching, they should focus on developing a good relationship with their child.

Not only are there books for raising an accelerated child, but toy companies are targeting parents with new products intended to be stimulating to babies. But toys with unique designs are priced excessively and can be used for a very limited amount of time, Murray said.

The emphasis on raising a superbaby can do more harm than good. Children may experience stress, become angry, and frustrated and some may become more reserved.

Clubb said most developmental problems are not the fault of the child, but instead involve the environment in which the child is raised.

"The superbaby syndrome has come about at a time when society is big on testing," Clubb said. "Children are being tested so they can enroll in the best preschools."

Parents take the abilities of their children very personally, he said.

"It's the old idea of keeping up with the Joneses," Clubb said. "Parents fear their child will be left behind."

Some of these early education methods start parent and child interaction off on the wrong foot, Murray said. Instead of being fun, the activities create tension.

"Parents are led to think they can mold the child," Murray said.

Capriotti: Big 8 to be tough meet

By Chris Hays
Sports Editor

K-State track coach John Capriotti said this year's Big Eight Indoor Championships in Lincoln, Neb., will be no different than the past.

The bottom line will be competition, and plenty of it.

In the pre-meet coaches poll, the Big Eight coaches tabbed the K-State women to finish a distant second behind Nebraska, while the K-State men were picked to finish third. Iowa State and Nebraska were tabbed to tie for the title.

Just like every other coach around the league, Capriotti has spent this past week comparing times and distances from around the league to see where his athletes might wind up, and he usually has a pretty fair idea.

"The way I doped the meet, it looks like a hell of a battle between us and Oklahoma for second on the women's side — maybe four or five points difference," Capriotti said. "As far as the men, Iowa State and Nebraska will be in a dual meet by themselves. The last couple of years we've been in there with them, but not this year."

"Oklahoma looks like third right now, and we're battling it out with the rest of them."

The K-State women will be looking to pile up points in the distance events. The Wildcat women boast four runners capable of breaking into the top three in either the 1,000-, mile- or 3,000-meter runs. Angie Barry, Janet Treiber, Janet Haskin and Paulette Staats all rank among the league's top 10 in one or all of those three categories.

Sprinters Markeya Jones, Joy Jones and Latricia Joyner could be instrumental as well. K-State also has two legitimate first-place contenders in Angie Miller and Carla Shannon.

Miller leads the league in the shot put with a toss of 52-8 1/4, while Shannon leads in the triple jump at 41-2 1/4 and is second in the long jump at 19-6 1/4.

On the men's side, sprinters and jumpers could carry the brunt of the load, unless Capriotti gets some solid performances from his distance and middle-distance people.

Freshman Thomas Randolph could pick up some big points with a high finish in the 200, while Tyrone Watkins should contend for the top spot in either the 400 or 600.

Freshman Jared Storm has come on strong as of late, and the Wildcats could use another performance like he turned in at the Husker Invitational two weeks ago in the 1,000 meters, as well as the 800 along with Marcus Wright.

Lady Cats eye championship

By David Svoboda
Sports Reporter

There will likely be no outright Big Eight Championship in 1990 for the Lady Cats, but a tie for the title is still possible with a win at 7 p.m. Saturday in Bramlage Coliseum against arch-rival Kansas.

Entering the week, K-State was in a position to control its own destiny. A loss Wednesday night at Oklahoma State, however, dropped the Lady Cats into a first-place deadlock with Missouri, and now the team finds itself very likely needing a win against the Jayhawks to hang on for a share of the crown.

Missouri plays Oklahoma Saturday afternoon in Columbia, and by the time the Lady Cats take the floor they'll know whether they will be playing for an outright title or a share of the crown. Counting on the Sooners for help would look to be a shaky proposition. Oklahoma is currently in the conference cellar, owning but a single league triumph.

But, despite having probably lost their chance for an outright championship Wednesday night in Stillwater, Okla., there were no long faces at the K-State workout Thursday afternoon in Bramlage, interim coach Gaye Griffin said. Pride and an intense rivalry made sure of that.

"Now, having lost our chance to win it by ourselves, it's more of a pride factor for us, really," Griffin said. "And there's no doubt that there would be no greater way to win the conference than winning it beating KU."

However, Griffin also acknowledged that the Jayhawks would come in with some incentive of their own. That incentive would come from a desire to prevent their intrastate rivals from winning something they couldn't have.

"I put myself in their shoes, and I know for a fact that I wouldn't want KU winning a thing against us," Griffin said. "It would give us a great deal of incentive knowing that if we lost we'd be having KU win a championship in our face. I think they're probably talking the same way."

If the Lady Cats are victorious against the Jayhawks, it will mark the first time they've won a Big Eight title since 1987. That year they shared the crown with Kansas and Missouri.

The 1986-87 season also marked the first in purple for current seniors Amy Davidson, Elyse Funk, Stephanie Lane and Rita Matteucci. Saturday's game gives them a chance to gain their second conference championship ring.

It's an honor the quartet — along with fellow senior Ameetrice Cobb, a transfer — richly deserves, Griffin said.

"Those five seniors are probably the five most dedicated people you'll ever be around," Griffin said. "When you represent someone or something, and you do it with the feeling that they have, it's easy to see."

There is also a possibility — though it's one K-Staters don't like to consider — that the Jayhawks will win and the Lady Cats will finish second after being so close to tasting the ultimate conference dessert.

"That's not any added pressure on us, that's a fact," Griffin said. "That's a fact, and it's a fact we've talked about."

In the first meeting between the two teams in late January in Lawrence, K-State took a 63-51 win. The Lady Cats had an 18-point half-time advantage and scored just 23 second-half points, but they held on for the win.

Diana Miller's 18 points led K-State, and senior guard Lisa Braddy had 15 to lead KU.

Stopping Braddy, whom Griffin said joins Lady Cat Nadira Hazim as the best two guards in the conference, will be a key to a K-State victory, the interim coach said.

"Kansas penetrates very well from the wings and from the point, and we've got to do a good job of stopping that penetration," Griffin said.

Defending-champ Shockers will have trouble surprising in '90

By The Associated Press

WICHITA — Shocker baseball coach Gene Stephenson can downplay his Wichita State team all he wants, but fewer and fewer people are buying it.

WSU opens its regular-season defense of the 1989 College World Series title with a Saturday doubleheader against Stephen F. Austin in Wichita.

The Shockers went 68-16 last year. They already have notched a preseason tournament title this year.

Four teams from last year's College World Series were invited to the American Baseball Coaches Association Hall of Fame Tournament in Haines City, Fla. Feb. 9-11.

Stephenson picked his team to finish last.

"I just hope we run the right direction on the bases and maybe run the right direction to catch a ball in the air," he said before leaving Kansas for the tourney.

With comeback wins over Louisiana State and preseason favorite Florida State, the Shockers took the title.

Stephenson said he wasn't too surprised.

He still thinks Wichita State is at a disadvantage because Kansas weather often forces January and February practices indoors. Prior to the Florida tournament, the Shockers hadn't even played an intrasquad scrimmage. Florida State had several games under its belt.

During the tournament, P.J. Forbes exemplified the team spirit and desire Stephenson and his staff try to instill.

"I think he represents pretty much the heart and soul of our team," Stephenson said.

The senior second baseman blew a double-play throw in the first inning against Louisiana State. Three runs scored. Forbes vowed to make up for the goof.

"It was a play that should have been made," he said. "We should have been out of that inning no problem."

Forbes stepped to the plate in the second inning after one Shocker run already had scored. He hit the first grand slam of his college career to put Wichita State ahead 5-3. The Shockers went on to win 13-6.

"I was just lucky to get an opportunity to make up for it," Forbes said of his throwing error. "That's what we're going to have to do all year. When we get an opportunity like that, we're going to have to take full advantage of it."

It has a young but talented pitching staff. But the three pitchers lost from last year's CWS team, Greg Brummett, Jim Newlin and Pat Cedeno, combined for a total of 36 wins and 20 saves their last season as Shockers.

Stephenson said he has confidence in the pitchers he has.

"The talent is certainly there, but it remains to be seen whether they can step up and be leaders," he said.

The talent runs deep on the Shocker bench, and that means Stephenson is plotting how to change his set-lineup philosophies of the past to give good backup players a chance to stay sharp by getting some playing time.

Forbes says it will take maturity on the part of the good younger players who have to sit the bench a lot and maturity from upperclassmen who may be asked to sit out to give the backups game experience.

This season's schedule is the toughest in Shocker history. It's the first time all of the opponents are Division I schools. Five games are scheduled against 1989 CWS participants and 17 games are on tap against eight of last year's NCAA tournament teams.

Stephenson believes in his players, but grouses about being ranked in the top three in most early season college baseball polls.

"Your kids get a false sense they're doing well," he said. "We need to make sure their attention is on a lot of things we need to do better."

Baseball team plays host to Friends in home-opener

By Scott Paske
Sports Reporter

K-State baseball coach Mike Clark has the same problems that most of his peers have to deal with in the early stages of a season.

He's seeing plenty of pitching and not enough hitting.

"The things we worked on defensively in practice we were able to carry on the field in the games," Clark said of his team's performance last weekend against the Arkansas Razorbacks. "Offensively, the pitchers are going to be a little ahead of the hitters, but we've got to improve our discipline at the plate."

"With the cool weather we've had this week, we've spent a lot of time inside working in the batting cage."

After capturing one win in the three-game series at then-No. 9 Arkansas, K-State begins the home portion of its schedule with a doubleheader Saturday against Friends University. The first of two seven-inning contests is set for 1 p.m. at Frank Myers Field.

Saturday's games will be two of eight this season in which the Wildcats will not play an NCAA Division I opponent.

"We didn't play Friends last year, so we don't know a whole lot about them," Clark said. "At this point in the season, our main concern is within our ball club and the things we need to work on."

The Falcons have only beaten K-State once in 18 career meetings. Last season, Friends finished 16-22 under Coach Mark Henrion.

Senior ace David Hierholzer will take the mound in Saturday's first game. Hierholzer, an all-Big Eight performer last season, allowed just four hits and two earned runs in the season opener against Arkansas. However, the two runs came on a Texas League triple and gave the Razorbacks a 2-1 win.

Despite the loss, Clark was pleased with Hierholzer's complete game effort.

"He's usually going to go against the other team's No. 1 pitcher, so the games are typically going to be low-scoring," Clark said. "He did everything we wanted him to do and did it perfectly. Arkansas just made some spectacular defensive plays to beat us."

In Hierholzer's loss, the Razorbacks turned in three double plays to halt K-State rallies. The 'Cats had a team batting average of just .198 for the series.

"Like I said, we have a lot of work to do on our hitting," Clark said. "But Arkansas has great pitching. Most of our kids have never seen an 87 or 88 miles-per-hour slider like (Razorback pitcher Doug) Bennett had."

One 'Cat who did find his hitting stroke was designated hitter Kevin Kaufman. Kaufman, who also alternates with sophomore Chris Hmielewski at first base, was 4-of-8 in the series, including his first home run in a K-State uniform.

"Kevin had a good offensive series," Clark said. "Whenever they made a mistake, he hit the ball hard."

Right-hander Kent Hipp, a junior college transfer from Barton County, will start Saturday's second game.

Assistant coach Phil Morgan analyzes a hitter's swing at the Brandeberry Indoor Complex Thursday afternoon. The Wildcats were preparing for their home-opener Saturday at 1 p.m. at Frank Myers Field, when Friends University visits for a doubleheader.

'Cats, 'Hawks to square off

By David Svoboda
Sports Reporter

K-State looks down barrel No. 1 of the double-barreled shotgun this weekend in Lawrence.

Or should we call it barrel No. 2? After all, Kansas is ranked second in the country, and Missouri — next Wednesday's Wildcat opponent — is ranked No. 1.

Enough with the numbers game, already.

The two-game road swing for the 'Cats against the nation's best begins at 3:10 p.m. Saturday in Allen Fieldhouse.

For those who have selective memories, you've probably chosen to block out Kansas' 85-57 lashing of the Wildcats on Jan. 27 in Bramlage Coliseum.

The loss was K-State's worst of the year, and the 60 percent field goal shooting by the Jayhawks was the best-ever mark posted in Bramlage.

The Jayhawks, K-State coach Lon Kruger admitted, have several weapons in their arsenal.

"Kansas, as its record would indicate, does a lot of things well," Kruger said of the Jayhawks, now 26-2 overall and 9-2 in the Big Eight. "The matchups they present are particularly difficult for us."

"They go 6-10, 6-9 and 6-6 across the front line, and (Rick) Calloway's leaping ability makes him a big 6-6."

The front-line players Kruger spoke of include center Pekka Markkanen and forwards Mark Randall and Calloway. As good as those three players are, Kruger said the play of KU's senior guard tandem of Kevin Pritchard and Jeff Gaudner may be an even bigger key to Kansas' success.

"Those two have helped their team a great deal because of their consistency," Kruger said. "They have the experience of having been there two years ago (during KU's national championship season), and the knowledge of what happened last year when they lost eight straight."

Kruger said Kansas' high national ranking makes this game take on a different flavor than most battles between the Jayhawks and Wildcats.

"Rarely when these teams meet is one a top-ranked team in the country," he said. "That's really more our focus now than them being an in-state rival."

When that rival has lost two consecutive home games against the foe it's about to face, the task is even tougher for the visitor, Kruger said.

"The fact we've won two straight there will probably have them a little extra fired up," he said.

If K-State, 16-11 and 6-5, is to overcome the odds and take a third-consecutive win on the Allen floor, the Wildcats will have to continue doing the things they have been doing well as of late.

— Lon Kruger
basketball coach

"The effort throughout our lineup was very good against Oklahoma State," Kruger said of the win over the Cowboys Tuesday in Bramlage. "Against Kansas, we need to lock in on the things we want to do and make sure we're doing them well."

A couple things K-State has been doing well as of late are shooting free throws and hanging onto the basketball.

In the last nine games, the Wildcats have hit 152 of 202 charity tosses for 75.2 percent. And in the last 18 contests, K-State has a takeaway advantage of +55.

In their two most recent come-from-behind wins, K-State has turned the ball over just a combined seven times during the second half of both games.

Netters again face tough road matches

By Dan Wicker
Sports Reporter

Traveling is a big part of inter-collegiate athletics. Sometimes it seems like an athlete just gets back from one road trip, when there's another one beginning.

This is probably the feeling of the K-State tennis team, which returned from Utah last Sunday, then had to leave at 10 a.m. Thursday for Kalamazoo, Mich., for a three-day road trip.

At Kalamazoo, the 'Cats will face Western Michigan today and then travel to Notre Dame, where they will have a triangular meet with the Fighting Irish and Drake on Saturday and Sunday.

Coach Steve Bietau is excited about this weekend's competition and said the team has overcome the tough losses in Utah last weekend.

"They have reacted well in practice and competed well last weekend," Bietau said. "We took a day off on Monday to stay fresh, but their response has been good."

K-State is coming off of a highly competitive meet in Utah where they squared off against Nevada-Las Vegas, Brigham Young and Utah.

Overall, Bietau was pleased with the team's performance in Utah, however, he is looking for improvement in certain aspects of the team's matches.

"Having a competitive match, as we did with Brigham Young, was a good step for us," he said. "We learned playing against Utah that it is not easy to stay at that level."

"I want to be able to improve on what we did last weekend. One of the things we need to do a better job of is competing through the whole weekend."

Bietau is also concerned with all the traveling and playing the team has been doing, but he does not see his squad getting tired and weary.

"The travel and amount of matches is a concern. That is the reason we took Monday off," Bietau said. "They don't seem to be tired. We had a good practice session yesterday (Wednesday)."

As far as the teams stacking up against K-State, he said all three matches will be challenging ones for the Wildcat women.

The tennis team has never faced Western Michigan, and Bietau said he has yet to see any results from K-State's first foe of the weekend. However, Notre Dame's coach has told Bietau that

Sailing club to begin practicing, competing following spring break

By Amy D. Hadlock
Collegian Reporter

Kansas is not a state known for sailing. But K-State does have its very own sailing club.

The Sailing Club was started in 1983 and now has about 25 members, said Rob Swenson, commodore of the club.

Swenson said the club has weekly meetings throughout the school year during which the members discuss club business. They also use the meeting times to teach members how to sail. Sailing is taught by Mike Duff, junior in business and a member of the club.

"During the learn-to-sail meetings the members learn different parts of the boat, how to tie certain kinds of knots and about boat right of way," Swenson said.

"After they have accomplished these skills they take a written test and then a sailing test," Swenson said. "You can take the test whenever you are ready and as many times as you want."

Once they have passed the test and can sail, they become a skipper. After they become a skipper they can take the boat out whenever they want, Swenson said.

"It is hard to keep a club going when it has such a short season, because you can only actually sail in spring, summer and early fall. However, the club has done really well. It has several active members that really keep it going," said Mark Eckberg, fleet captain.

"We usually go sailing every weekend, starting after spring break," Swenson said. "We go out and roast hot dogs and then sail. It's really laid back, and we have a good time."

The club owns four sailboats, two sail boards and a motorboat. They also own some lasers, which are one person boats. The equipment is stored at the Blue Valley Yacht Club at Tuttle Creek Reservoir.

William Jahnke, assistant dean of the College of Architecture and Design is the club's faculty adviser and is in charge of handling the keys to the equipment, Swenson said.

The club also competes with other schools. The club belongs to the South Eastern Intercollegiate Sailing Association and competes with other schools in the association.

"We've competed with Kansas University, Oklahoma University, Oklahoma State University just to name a few," Swenson said.

"The competitions are a lot of fun, and you can meet people from other schools," Swenson said.

"About four members compete at the different competitions at a time, depending on how many boats will be competing," he said. Different people can compete at different competitions if they wish."

The club works on fund raisers and also putting together the newsletter that each member receives at the meetings, Swenson said.

Opera production moves

Nichols Theatre to house Mozart production

By Erica Yenni
Collegian Reporter

K-State's production of Così fan tutte next week will be a departure for the opera program, as it will be the first opera presented in Nichols Theatre.

To accommodate the small space of Nichols Theatre some changes have been made in Mozart's comic opera, said Lewis Shelton, stage director of the show and associate professor of speech.

The chorus, which isn't a prominent feature, has been eliminated, and because there is not room for an orchestra, the music will be a piano and accompaniment only.

"I'm hoping that the intimacy of the theater and the ensemble nature of the production will make up for not having an orchestra at all," Shelton said.

Così fan tutte is a satire about the artificiality of emotions, he said.

The story revolves around two gentlemen, their fiancées and an old philosopher named Don Alfonso.

Don Alfonso declares to his young gentlemen friends that no woman can be trusted and wagers that he can prove his point in 24 hours. Enraged at his suggestion, the men take the bet.

Under Don Alfonso's instruction, the young men disguise themselves as wealthy Albanians and set out to woo their unsuspecting fiancées.

These young women are romantics. In love with the idea of love, they easily transfer their affection to the "new" suitors.

In the end, all concerned learn the folly of artificiality.

Shelton said the appeal of doing this opera was the size of the cast. They needed something small enough for Nichols Theatre. Also, with this piece the chorus could be eliminated with no problem.

K-State's opera program has student voices that can handle Così fan tutte, he said, which is a major consideration in opera.

Shelton said the lightness of the music and the situation of the opera should make for an entertaining presentation.

Jerry Langenkamp, musical director and head of the opera program, said making the costumes for Così fan tutte has been a large project for the costume shop.

Langenkamp said the opera is one of Mozart's greatest works.

"It's a great ensemble opera with a lot of action done in duets, trios, quartets, quintets and sextets," he said.

Così fan tutte is scheduled to run at 8 p.m. Tuesday and Wednesday and March 2, 3, 5 and 6.

metal-working shop."

When the wing was turned over to architecture after phase two of the Durland Hall project was completed, floors and wall partitioning were added so the building could be used by the college for studios.

Marshall said two-thirds of architecture's teaching functions are housed in the Seaton's east wing. Design studios, classrooms, the student's lounge and some offices are all in the building.

For the building to become fire-safe and useable, the building will have to be gutted and all new floors and walls installed. A heating and air conditioning system would also be installed.

"Only about a half million of the $4.2 million planned for is marked for amenities such as paint," Marshall said.

The project is planned to start in 1993 and end by August 1995, but the project has already been bumped back several times.

"The original intent was to renovate the space right after it was vacated by engineering in 1984," Garvin said. "Now it's not going to be done until 1993."

Some plans are being made to possibly install a sprinkler and alarm system in the next year. The University is hesitant about installing the systems because it doesn't want to spend a large sum of money before construction starts.

"The idea to spend $100,000 over there just to tear it out in two or three years is a very tough choice," Garvin said. "Especially when money comes so hard to the University."

Marshall said an alarm system could be installed for about $40,000, and could be designed so at least part of it could be used after construction is done.

He said at the minimum they would have smoke detectors and alarms to warn people of a fire in the building.

Aggieville merchants pay 33 percent over a 20-year period.

Maintenance and promotional costs that arise will be paid for through the Benefit Improvement District program. The program is designed to provide money to keep the area clean, including trash and snow removal.

The program will also provide money for promotional items, such as the banners. Funding for the program is provided by merchants, who pay up to $130 a year as members of the business association, depending upon the square footage of their building.

Levin said he hopes Aggieville's new look will attract more people to the area.

"We believe it will be a pleasant area for people to visit," he said.

interesting questions and seemed to enjoy themselves very much.

"We're focusing on anyone who'll give their attention," said Adams.

Education researchers say fifth and sixth graders are best for science introduction, he said.

The program is on a trial basis, Machin said. Two similar projects have been tried in recent years.

Adams said promotion of the planetarium show by the Kansas Association of Science Teachers has increased the awareness of the astronomy presentations.

The funding from MOE makes it possible for the presentations to be free of charge to the participating schools, Adams said. But if these presentations are successful, he said he would like to start charging for them.

"Our primary function is to educate, not to give community service," Adams said.

Students have also noticed Aggieville's new look. Jolene Hessong, junior in elementary education, said the improvements will benefit the entire shopping district.

"It's making Aggieville more attractive, and when finished, it will be more fun to visit," Hessong said.

Aggieville's face-lift should create a change, Levin said.

"It will set off the area and say 'This is Aggieville,'" he said.

Cardwell Hall was built in 1963. The building and the planetarium were dedicated April 29, 1964, by President McCain.

The planetarium is located on the fourth floor of Cardwell.

Adams said that in the early and mid-1970's, the planetarium was host to several thousand people each semester. Shows at that time were of a general type, picturing the universe and the alignment of the stars.

Adams says he hopes to regain that amount of patronage in the future, however, for the present time, tours of the planetarium can only be arranged by appointment.

Distance veterans Pat Hessini and David Warders could well be the difference between third and fourth for the K-State men. Capriotti also said his high jump duo of R.D. Cogswell and Chris Samuelson have not yet reached their potential this year.

Meanwhile, triple jumpers Orlo Berry, Dwayne Murphy and Clifton Etheridge could be looking at a possible 1-2-3 finish in their event with outstanding performances.

Eight Women's Postseason Tournament, to be held March 3-5 in Salina.

Missouri, with whom the Lady Cats would share the title, has a better record head-to-head against Colorado and Oklahoma State, the teams likely to finish third and fourth, and will thus be the top seed.

If, by chance, Missouri were to lose against Oklahoma and K-State wins, the Lady Cats are then the top seed as the league champ. If the Tigers lose and K-State wins, the outright title would be K-State's first since 1983.

Western Michigan will be competitive.

K-State has not faced Drake in the last two years, but Bietau said they have upgraded and have a much better team, which will give the 'Cats some good matches.

Notre Dame is always a tough match, he said, and this year will be no different. Notre Dame's No. 1 player is ranked in the top 50 in the nation individually.

Bietau does have one question mark heading into the weekend competition. Marijke Nel, K-State's No. 1 singles player, has had the flu this week and is probable for the squad's three matches.

Taylor

Taylor originally taught anthropology in the Department of Economics and Sociology. After leaving for a brief stint at the University of New Mexico, he returned to K-State and began developing an anthropology major. Economics and sociology were separated. A new department combining sociology and anthropology was formed.

Although Taylor has taught several sociology courses for the department, he still gets annoyed when he is referred to as a professor of sociology.

"I know very little about social work," he said.

Taylor said he would like to see more developments in the Department of Sociology, Anthropology and Social Work, such as a small, high-quality master's degree program in anthropology.

After 39 years, Taylor has learned that student interest in anthropology seems to go in cycles.

"The '60s were a wild and exciting time," Taylor said. "Back then everyone was clamoring to change the world. I'm not sure I'd like to go through that again."

Taylor's plans after retiring include marketing and revising his book, "Indians of Middle America," one of several published works. Catching up on his bird watching, relaxing and visiting his three children, who live out of state, are also priorities.

Propose mixed economy
Released political prisoners

Cons: Weak economy

United National Opposition

Cons: Fractious coalition
Resentment of U.S. influence

The impact:

Fair elections may relax hostile U.S. trade policies, helping the lagging economy.

Carter: Nicaragua voting 'fair'

Millions turn out to determine future of 10-year-old regime

By The Associated Press

MANAGUA, Nicaragua — The ruling Sandinistas and the opposition both predicted victory in Sunday's elections after Nicaraguans voted on whether to continue a decade of leftist rule or hand power to a U.S.-backed coalition.

Voting was peaceful and the turnout was heavy.

"It was very fair," former President Jimmy Carter, one of 3,000 international observers, told The Associated Press after the polls closed at 6 p.m. CST.

Voters flooded the nation's 4,394 polling stations during the morning hours in balloting that was considered a referendum on Nicaragua's battered economy under the Sandinistas and the U.S.-backed insurgency of the Contras.

Votes from the first four stations to report were released by the Supreme Electoral Council two hours after polls closed, and showed President Daniel Ortega's Sandinistas with 98 votes to 40 for Violeta Barrios de Chamorro's United National Opposition.

The head of the Electoral Council, Mariano Fiallos, told reporters at the central computer center that those results, all from rural areas, had been released as a "symbolic gesture" by agreement among the parties. He said they had agreed that no more official returns would be released until 15 percent of all precincts were in. There was no indication when that would be, but the results of 14 individual tables were flashed on a closed-circuit television at the press center showing UNO leading 2,313 to the Sandinistas' 2,002. The television was connected to the central computing center.

Voters also selected 90 National Assembly members and representatives to 146 regional, city and town councils.

In Washington, President Bush said whoever won the election would "find a better climate" with the United States, as long as the vote was certified as fair and the government maintained a democratic system. Fair elections would be "very, very helpful," Bush said.

The Sandinistas already were organizing a victory celebration. A notice posted at campaign headquarters urged supporters to gather at midnight, when Ortega would proclaim victory.

About 1.75 million of Nicaragua's

3.5 million people were registered to vote, and the turnout was expected to be high.

The lines appeared clearly drawn for voters: a weak economy was the Sandinistas' Achilles' heel, while resentment of the U.S.-supported Contra rebels was hurting the UNO.

"Lots of times we don't have enough food for three meals a day," said a woman whose husband is an unemployed bricklayer. She said all eight people in her household were voting for UNO.

In the same poor barrio of western Managua, Socorro Neira Padilla said she was for the Sandinistas; her daughter had been wounded in the Contra war.

"I don't want any more war. Imagine if your beautiful, intelligent, educated 19-year-old daughter was a cripple," Padilla said.

There were hundreds of people at some polling stations by 7 a.m., but there were no reports of fraud or violence during the morning hours.

Ortega, seeking another six-year term, cast his ballot early to applause from fellow voters.

"I expect that the government of the United States will recognize the results of the elections and work for peace with Nicaragua," said the 44-year-old incumbent, who waged a campaign aimed at attracting the substantial youth vote.

The Sandinistas, desperate to revive one of the worst economies in Central America, are hoping that an election certified as fair by international observers will prompt President Bush to relax hostile U.S. policies.

The Sandinistas admit they made mistakes after coming to power in 1979 following the revolution that ousted dictator Anastasio Somoza. Their mistakes included expropriating private property in the early, radical stages of the revolution.

Wichita State forced to close ROTC program

By Ingrid Erickson
Collegian Reporter

While the Army ROTC program at K-State is not in danger, the program at Wichita State University will end in the spring of 1991, after 71 years, because of low enrollment.

Failure to keep enrollment at quota has kept WSU's ROTC on probation for the past three years, according to a story in the Wichita Eagle.

The quota is different at each university depending on the size of the school, said Capt. Fred Bucher, assistant professor of military science. He said Army ROTC at K-State does not have any problems with enrollment.

This spring, K-State's Army ROTC will commission about 20 cadets as second lieutenants in the U.S. Army, Bucher said. About 50 percent of these newly commissioned cadets will go on active duty and undertake a full-time military career. The other 50 percent will enter the National Guard or Army Reserve programs.

In order for the program at WSU to continue, it had to produce 15 commissioned officers each year and have 17 cadets in its junior class, Eagle said.

WSU cadets not completing Army ROTC by 1991 must transfer to another university if they want to continue in the program. WSU students on ROTC scholarships must transfer to another ROTC program in order to retain their scholarships.

"We will probably send letters to WSU cadets on scholarship," Bucher said. "We could receive one or two WSU transfers."

At WSU, Lt. Col. Fred VanPeer must approve the transfer of each student, Bucher said.

K-State's program has 136 cadets, 19 of whom are women. These figures are average in comparison to Army ROTC programs at other universities, Bucher said.

Army ROTC at K-State dates back to the fall of 1863 when the University was founded as a land-grant university under the Morrill Act. Universities established under the Morrill Act were required to teach agriculture, mechanical arts and military science.

Prior to 1965, ROTC enrollment was required for all freshman and sophomore males, according to an Army ROTC fact sheet. Women became eligible to enroll in Army ROTC in 1973. K-State commissioned its first female lieutenant in 1976.

Army ROTC recruits students under a general awareness plan called the "Umbrella Program," Bucher said. Under this program, mailings and brochures are sent to current and potential students.

K-State's Air Force ROTC program has been a part of the University since 1949. Prior to that date it was called Army Air Corps, said Capt. Lawrence Everett, assistant professor of aerospace studies.

AFROTC has 110 cadets, Everett said. All AFROTC commissioned officers will serve active military duty after graduation.

Army ROTC scholarships draw many students, Bucher said. At K-State there are 40 students receiving National Guard scholarships of $650 each. These are used toward tuition.

Federal scholarships good for two-year and four-year programs have been awarded to 18 students, Bucher said. Each of these students receives $2,000 a year toward books, fees and tuition. Students receiving the federal scholarships may apply for an additional $100 a month toward additional expenses.

Army ROTC participates in several campus activities, Bucher said. Cadets participate in intramural basketball and football. They present the Color Guard at games and assist in parking cars at Bramlage Coliseum during basketball season.

"The People's DJ," Cliff Clifford, junior in marketing and industrial psychology, and Mekonen Kahssay, freshman in business, dance to music during Sunday afternoon's "Reggae Extravaganza," a program on KSDB-FM.

DJ creates 'Reggae Extravaganza'

Music holds roots in Jamaican culture; pays tribute to Rastafarian religion

By David Freese
Collegian Reporter

When people asked Cliff Clifford why he's called "the People's DJ," he laughs.

"It's catchy," Clifford says. "Yeah."

Clifford, junior in marketing and industrial psychology, along with Mekonen Kahssay, freshman in business, spends his Sunday afternoons conducting "Reggae Extravaganza" from noon until 3 p.m. on KSDB-FM.

Though the details are sketchy on the origins of his trademark nickname, Clifford said he is pretty sure it all began during the student uprising in Beijing, China in June 1989.

"One of my professors said there were a lot of 'People's' in the news — like the 'People's Army' and the 'People's Uprising' — and he said that I should call myself 'the People's DJ,'" Clifford said. "The rest is history."

Clifford is a native of Zambia in southern Africa. He has lived in the United States for five years. When he lived in London for six months, Clifford had a chance to mingle with some Jamaicans who introduced him to reggae music.

Reggae music pays tribute to the Rastafarian religion, Clifford said. Rastafarianism is a black Jamaican religious cult whose members worship the former Ethiopian Emperor Haile Selassie, whom they believed to be Jesus Christ in his second coming. Selassie's name was originally Ras Tafari, and he is also frequently referred to as "Jah."

"Rastas believe that the true redemption for the black people is through complete repatriation to Africa," Clifford said. "It should be made clear that you don't have to be Rasta to listen to reggae, and not all reggae music is about Rasta."

"Some people think that reggae music is about marijuana and getting high, but that's not true," Clifford said. "There's a lot more. It's about people living together and avoiding separatism. 'People living in unity' — it's that message that attracts me to the music."

Most reggae musicians come from Jamaica, but Americans

Housing director plans to meet with students

Student ideas encouraged for improvements in social issues, safety for residence halls

By The Collegian Staff

The office is still stacked with unpacked boxes, but for Chuck Werring, his new job as director of housing is underway.

Werring said he has been occupied with becoming acquainted with the housing department staff, but he plans to meet informally with students in the residence halls this semester.

"I'm going to put my jeans on, we're going to sit in the lobby ... and say 'hey, what's on your mind,'" he said.

Before meeting with students, Werring said he is already aware of the major issues students face in today's university environment. Before coming to K-State was an associate director of housing and student affairs at Texas Tech University, in Lubbock, Texas.

"I think some of the social issues are fairly common from one university to another as far as AIDS, date rape, acquaintance rape ... all the kinds of social issues that you would deal with here are being dealt with at other universities, and that's because of the age group and social environment in which we operate," he said.

In addressing issues concerning residence hall safety, Werring said that ideas and proposed solutions should be generated by the students according to what they feel will be a safe environment for them.

Werring said he plans to reach all of the residence halls in his informal meetings, and be as accessible as possible to the more than 4,000 students in the halls.

At Texas Tech, Werring was involved in a quality of life survey to improve that department's effectiveness. He said he considers the improvement of the quality of life for K-State students to be one of his main objectives. He said that by meeting with students personally, he hopes to gain a better understanding of their true opinions on everything from safety to food service.

The University's residence halls are running at 97.5 percent capacity. Werring said he sees no need for the expansion of current facilities, despite the growth of the University.

"The demographics show that there is going to be somewhat of a 'tailing-off' of demand for a couple of years," he said. "I don't think, financially, building additional facilities at this point would be wise. You just have to monitor the supply and demand of the number of projected students that would be coming to Kansas State."

The Van Zile renovation is still scheduled to be completed by the start of the coming fall semester, Werring said. No further changes or expansion are expected in the immediate future.

Werring graduated from the University in 1974 with a bachelor's degree in biology. He 66

—Chuck Werring
director of housing

said he lived in a residence hall while in college, and he values that experience greatly.

"I wouldn't be sitting here talking to you today if it wasn't for the experience that I had as a student living in K-State residence halls," Werring said. "My wish and my desire is that we continue as a department to have those kinds of impacts on students. I don't think people understand how residence halls can make a difference in a person's life."

The rewards a student gains from living in a residence hall depend upon what the student puts into the experience, he said. "It ties back to who you are, how you interface with other people and where you want to go," he said.

"We are here to help them look at alternatives, give them information — resources with which to make better choices and decisions that will be answers to the questions in those three dimensions," Werring said.

Werring considers himself a "management by walking around" type of manager. He said his main concern is that the staff develops and maintains that same sort of relationship with the student-clients of the residence halls.

The greatest drawback in the job, Werring said, is that his family is still in Lubbock. He said his wife and two children will move to Manhattan as soon as their house in Lubbock is sold.

North Korea denounces U.S.

TOKYO (AP) — North Korea said Sunday that a U.S. State Department report accusing it of violating human rights is full of slander and "whopping lies."

"The U.S. imperialists are exploiting every means and method possible to impair the high international prestige of (North Korea) and block worldwide support and sympathy for its unique socialist system," said a commentary in the official Communist Party newspaper Rodong Shinmun.

The commentary, broadcast in part by Pyongyang's Korean Central News Agency, monitored in Tokyo, followed a U.S. State Department report last week on human rights around the world. The report's section on North Korea said that country "continues to deny its citizens the most fundamental human rights."

Rodong Shinmun said, "The United States is a graveyard of human rights, and U.S. imperialism is the most heinous violator of human rights in the world and the ringleader of state terrorism. It is ridiculous, indeed, for them to charge others with 'violation of human rights.'"

U.S. to drill for oil in Laos

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — An American company has signed an agreement to search for oil and gas in Laos, according to a report monitored Sunday in the Thai capital.

The official KPL news agency of Laos said the Communist government on Friday concluded the agreement with the Texas-based Hun Oil Co., which is to conduct surveys and exploration in southern Laos.

Hun is believed to be the first American company to reach an agreement with Laos to help exploit the country's considerable energy and mineral reserves.

Hun, which in Laos will operate as the Lao Hun Oil Co., is to explore an area of 10,000 square miles around Pakse City and in four southern provinces, the dispatch said.

Unlike Vietnam and Cambodia, the United States has maintained diplomatic ties with Laos and relations between the two countries have shown some improvement in recent years.

Shuttle launch rescheduled

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — The countdown resumed Sunday for the nighttime launch of shuttle Atlantis after technicians fixed a computer problem that caused a fourth postponement of the secret military mission 31 seconds before liftoff.

But forecasters said a cold front was expected to bring clouds and high winds, reducing to only 40 percent the chances that weather would be good enough to launch the shuttle with its spy satellite early Monday.

Despite the gloomy forecast, shuttle managers in midafternoon gave the go-ahead for the launch team to pump 528,000 gallons of liquid hydrogen and liquid oxygen into Atlantis' cavernous fuel tank for another try.

The four delays were the most in a shuttle launch since the Challenger, which was postponed seven times and launched on the eighth try to explode shortly after lift-off Jan. 28, 1986, killing all seven astronauts.

Contributing to the decision to load fuel was the fact that Monday offered the best weather odds of the next three days. The odds drop to 20 percent on Tuesday and Wednesday, forecasters said.

New marijuana figures higher

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Bush administration confirmed Sunday that it has determined marijuana production in Mexico is much higher than it previously estimated but downplayed reports of a tenfold increase.

The Los Angeles Times on Sunday reported new U.S. figures, to be released this week, concluded Mexico produces 10 times more marijuana than was previously estimated.

The newspaper said the official U.S. estimate — derived from CIA spy satellite photographs — concluded that Mexico produced 47,500 metric tons of marijuana in 1989. In 1988, it was estimated that Mexico's production was 4,750 metric tons.

Katherine Shaw, spokeswoman for the State Department's international narcotics section said the agency would release an annual report on foreign narcotic production and anti-drug efforts later this week.

House to debate abortion bill

TOPEKA (AP) — The House will today debate Gov. Mike Hayden's proposal to require doctors to notify a parent in advance when a girl under 16 seeks an abortion.

Rep. Artie Lucas, R-Highland, told the House Friday that he will ask it today to override the House Federal and State Affairs Committee's decision to reject the bill.

His motion will be to have the House debate it in spite of an unfavorable recommendation from the committee. That will take 70 votes in the 125-member House.

Lucas and other anti-abortion legislators did not attempt to save another, more strict, parental notification bill that had the unanimous support of anti-abortion groups.

They also did not attempt to save a bill requiring girls under 18 to obtain the consent of a parent for an abortion. That means both of the latter bills are dead.

Hayden's bill would require doctors to notify at least one parent, orally or in writing, 48 hours in advance when a girl under 16 seeks an abortion. However, a girl could go to court to avoid the notification.

Lucas' bill would have required doctors to notify both parents in writing at least 48 hours in advance when a girl under 18 seeks an abortion. His bill contains no "judicial bypass," and it includes criminal penalties against doctors who do not comply. It has the unanimous support of anti-abortion groups.

The third bill was passed by the Senate last year. It requires girls under 18 to obtain the consent of at least one parent before they can get an abortion. However, it also has a judicial bypass provision.

Woman to run for governor

TOPEKA (AP) — A Topeka woman said Friday she would form a third-party to run for governor.

Nancy Claggett said she needed 16,000 signatures to get her name on the November ballot as a third-party candidate for governor. She said the name of the party has not been chosen.

"We are going to offer a full-slate of candidates on a comprehensive ticket, a ticket which I shall lead," said Claggett, 49. "When you can't tell the difference between the two parties it's time to try something new," she said at a Statehouse news conference.

Claggett worked briefly for Shawnee County Treasurer Rita Cline last year. She also worked for Treasurer Joan Finney, a candidate for the Democratic nomination for governor, from 1975 to 1978. She said she also was Stevens County treasurer from 1971 to 1975.

She said she presently works as a beauty consultant.

Business world mourns death

Multimillionaire Forbes dead of heart attack at 70

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Malcolm Forbes, the multimillionaire magazine owner, motorcyclist, balloonist and self-proclaimed "capitalist tool" who reveled in life and free enterprise, died of a heart attack at age 70.

Forbes died in his sleep Saturday afternoon at his 40-acre estate in Far Hills, N.J.

"Death happens to everyone but we never believed it would happen to him; he always defied the odds," said Forbes' son, Malcolm Jr., who will succeed his father as editor in chief of Forbes magazine and chief executive officer of Forbes Inc.

"What he wanted inscribed on his tombstone says it all: 'While alive, he lived,'" the son said at a Sunday news conference with his sister and three brothers.

Elizabeth Taylor, a frequent companion of Forbes, said Sunday: "I feel like a great light has been turned off. He was one of the best friends I ever had."

"The whole world will miss Malcolm, who brought humanity to the capitalist system," industrialist Armand Hammer said in a statement released from Los Angeles.

"I don't know anyone who enjoyed life so much or gave so much back," said Barbara Walters. Walters was a guest along with billionaire developer Donald Trump, Chrysler Chairman Lee Iacocca, former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger and 1,000 others at Forbes' $2 million 70th birthday bash last fall in Tangier, Morocco.

Various estimates placed the worth of Forbes, chairman and chief shareholder of Forbes Inc., at anywhere from $400 million to $1 billion.

Whatever the amount, Forbes gleefully relished his riches.

He made the first free flight over Beijing in a hot-air balloon and set six world ballooning records. He owned 68 motorcycles and made the first motorcycle tour of China. He globe-trotted with movie stars and heads of state aboard his gold-fixture, helicopter-equipped yacht, the Highlander.

But he was also gracious to everyday folks, like Libby Rook, a management consultant from Vienna, Va., who marked her 44th birthday aboard the Highlander in 1987 after writing to Forbes on a dare from co-workers.

"It's not how much money you have but what you do with it," Forbes once said. "The joy of living is incredible. We work hard at the things we have to do, so why not take time to enjoy the things we want to do?"

Forbes was a tireless collector, accumulating toy soldiers by the battalion and buying up a dozen Faberge eggs, the hand-crafted artworks of Imperial Russia.

He was an enthusiastic champion of free enterprise and emblazoned his corporate slogan, "The Capitalist Tool," on his helicopters, balloons, even his clothing and luggage.

"He was a real free spirit," said opera star Beverly Sills, who sang "Happy Birthday" at the Morocco party. "He had such a joy of life. I think he would have had it if he had been a poor man."

"Malcolm was an extraordinarily positive force in America's business and social life," said Trump. "His loss takes excitement, creativity and genuine business leadership from every American businessman."

"Malcolm Forbes was someone who lived life to its fullest and in doing so made all of our lives a little more colorful," said Iacocca.

"He was the quintessential American — optimistic, buoyant and lots of fun," said Kissinger. "He was a very good friend and I'll miss him."

Forbes was born in Englewood, N.J., on Aug. 19, 1919, two years after Forbes magazine was founded by his father, Scottish emigrant Bertie Charles Forbes.

After his father's death in 1954, Forbes became publisher and editor in chief. The magazine rode the 1980s bull market and the pro-business Reagan era to the greatest success since its founding.

Experts valued the company's flagship business magazine as high as $600 million, while its American Heritage magazine, suburban newspapers, real estate and art holdings al-

Senate accepts Tribunal appointees

By Kirk Caraway
Collegian Reporter

After a week of controversy, Student Body President Todd Johnson's new list of Tribunal appointments was unanimously approved by Student Senate Thursday night.

The list included two new names, which seemed to quell the protests of senators who postponed the appointments Feb. 15 because of their concerns about the inexperience of those selected.

"This group is a substantial improvement over last week," said Travis Stumpf, arts and sciences senator and the main opponent to the previous appointments.

Some questions were raised in debate about changing the system by which judicial appointments are made. These included reserving seats for previous Tribunal members and having second readings on appointments to allow senators more time to study the slate of nominees.

"I really don't agree with the system we have now," said David McIntyre, engineering senator.

Also approved was an allocation for $1,386.44 to send Johnson, Associated Students of Kansas board Chairman Troy Lubbers and a yet-to-be-named ASK campus director on a lobbying trip to Washington, D.C. during spring break.

The allocation was opposed by a group of senators led by Ray Kowalczyk, sophomore in biology, who tried unsuccessfully to cut out funding for the ASK campus director and eliminate the $30-per-day food and ground transportation provision. John McIntyre, the current ASK campus director, said sending the ASK campus director on the five-day trip was a waste of money.

"In order to be an effective lobbyist, you need to have contact year-round," McIntyre said.

Shuttle disaster shamelessly exploited

January 28, 1986. This is a day most, if not all, Americans remember. I was sitting in the Stateroom cafeteria, slamming some coconut donuts and Bubble-Up when this person we affectionately refer to as Captain Cosmo sat down and told us the space shuttle had exploded. "Yeah man, the #&%*ing thing just blew up!" she said while trying to light her third cigarette in five minutes. We didn't believe her at first, so we wandered over to the TV room and found it packed with people, watching in stunned silence as the whole thing was re-played in living color.

At first, I was more surprised and curious than saddened. I went home and watched TV all day as they tried to figure out from the film what had happened. But with TV news being mostly about entertainment, they couldn't resist rubbing in the drama and tragedy of the event. They showed the reaction of the family and friends of the astronauts as they exploded in the sky. It was a low moment for television morals.

While some of the news coverage was necessary and justified, a good deal of it bordered on exploitation. The networks milked the tragedy for all it was worth, selling commercial time in between replays of the explosion. They had America captivated; advertisers love to aim at sitting ducks.

All of this is flashing back to me now because of the movie about the event, which was on television last night. Just for the record, I did not watch the movie. I didn't want to watch it. I would just as soon watch film footage of executions or animal experiments as see this piece of exploitative trash.

So there I was, Sunday night, well past deadline. My editor told me he absolutely, positively needed my column then or I could forget about tomorrow. I was all set to write about the irony of George Bush and West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl arguing for a unified Germany under NATO while the Soviets wanted a neutral Germany. It's a good topic and I'd like to tackle it sometime just to see the reaction of one of my German friends.

But I saw this movie starting and the rage just built up to a boil. How dare they stick this piece of exploitative trash in front of my face!

Kirk Caraway

Collegian Columnist

They bring a couple of semi-obscure actors in and hype the hell out of the melodrama on a cheap budget that will guarantee them maximum profits.

Profits. This is what they're after. They aren't shooting for some high moral goal. They're not trying to get the facts out. I'm sure any real criticism of NASA will be excluded in return for cooperation in making the movie. They made it for money — money off the blood of those who died. Profits off their memories.

We all need to be extra aware of exploitation like this. This is such a clear example there is little that can be said in its defense.

There are so many topics in the world that deserve to be made into movies. Thousands of people were being tortured and killed in places like Afghanistan, Angola, Chile and Guatemala in 1986. Yet they were all overshadowed by seven astronauts exploding in the Florida sky.

I know this column isn't going to do a thing about stopping this trash. I have, on occasion, written columns that border on exploitation. Some say I pick on George Bush and Dan Quayle too much. I would pick on Dukakis if he weren't so boring. But I'm also trying to point out some serious problems the world is experiencing, and these two figures always seem to be knee deep in the slime.

Since I'm not watching this movie, I'm really taking a few shots in the dark. If I'm wrong, I'm sure someone will let me know about it. In the meantime I'll just watch the show that is on the pinnacle of good taste, "Married ... with Children." At least they don't over-dramatize dead people.

Proposed profanity bill will not stop stickers

The big guys in Topeka are at it again.

Kansas Senator James Francisco has decided that Kansas bumper stickers have become entirely too dirty. He feels that seven words banned by the Federal Communication Commission should not be printed unless they are too small for others to read — as if children's vision was worse than that of adults.

The Kansas Senate apparently likes the idea, but it is hesitating because it would be a pain to enter the words into state statute books.

Francisco's bill makes the seven words printable, but only if they are illegible from a distance. One wonders if this is in the spirit of "bleeping" words on television, allowing viewers to lip-read only if they are close enough to the screen.

Senator Bill Morris points out that if the law is passed, Kansans must know which words are involved. According to the FCC, and thus the bill, shit, piss, cunt, fuck, motherfucker, tits and cockucker are the seven dirty English words. It is interesting to note that small printing definitely removes the offensiveness from the selection.

But why choose these words? Comedian George Carlin has listed many other words that can be considered offensive — the above seven do not even approach being the worst words in the English language. Perhaps those seven words are the only dirty ones that bumper sticker printing machines will accept.

Loopholes in the bill abound. Die-hard bumper sticker makers will probably realize the benefits of pig latin; the bill makes no mention of itshay, isspay, or even othermayuckerfay.

If the object of Francisco's bill is to forcefully protect innocent Kansans' eyes from crude humor, the bill is useless. Kansans' humor may be cleaned, but vile citizens from other states cannot be prevented from flaunting their words to the world.

Clean up our act

Editor,

Brad Seabourn's comments about our government's hypocritical drug policy toward Colombia and the other Andean nations are well-founded, although his example of the U.S. tobacco industry does not begin to cover the extent of our profit-oriented motivation to dump anything we can on the Third World, if we can make a buck doing it. Our pharmaceutical and pesticide industries regularly sell products abroad which have been banned in the United States for years. Impoverished workers who have no other job are then set to spreading these products on mass-export agriculture landholdings without adequate protection. Our weapons and aircraft industries (yes, even Beech and Cessna in Wichita) cause misery worldwide by regularly selling assault rifles, rocket launchers and light aircraft (perfect for dropping napalm on civilian populations), with no strings attached, to brutal right-wing capitalist governments like that of Guatemala and brutal left-wing governments like that of Ethiopia.

"Yes," we say, "but those countries provide a market for our products. If the market were not there, we would not sell them." Well, this hemisphere's most important drug market, by far, is the United States. We are the reason for the enormous capitalist success of brutal power of the scum druglords who have essentially taken over the economies of desperate countries like Colombia whose elected officials risk heroic odds just getting to work every day to fight them. As we work to alleviate the misery caused in our country by the international drug problem, we need to respond in kind and clean up our own act as well. And we need to stop blaming our problems on everyone else.

Bouncer didn't

Editor,

Without going into much detail, I would like to let this campus know something about Baystreet. You may think that if you go to Baystreet and an individual does harm to you, a bouncer will remove him or her from the premises. I believed this too, until recently.

On one recent occasion, someone involved me in a disagreement he had with my friend. I had met this individual one time, and had never exchanged any words with him. However, he deliberately overturned my table, breaking five full glasses and getting me extremely wet. When I pointed him out to a bouncer, the bouncer said that if something else happened, he would be removed. The offensive individual proceeded to throw a drink on my friend. This must not have been important enough, because he was still not removed.

The dictionary definition of "bouncer" is "a person employed to expel disorderly persons from a public place." Baystreet employs at least one person who does not fulfill his job description. Although I was completely innocent of wrong-doing, for my peace of mind I had to leave.

If you go to Baystreet, you should be prepared to remove anyone who does you harm. At least one "bouncer" will be expecting you to handle such an individual by yourself.

Letter uninformed

Editor,

Regarding the "Poor politics" letter to the editor in Friday's Collegian by Terry Wunder and 75 others:

Terry, you seem confused about the election process here at K-State. I'm "wondering" why after taking the time to get 75 others to sign your letter, none of you realized that Student Senators are elected in the fall by their respective college constituents. Your letter was completely uninformed. I "wonder" why a graduate student who is so concerned with "the quality of education that students are receiving" wouldn't take the time to research how the election process works before embarrassing himself and 75 others.

Safety improved

Editor,

Regarding the Feb. 20 editorial: In July 1990, the University will begin the third year of a life and fire safety program funded through the Special Maintenance budget.

Started in fiscal year 1989, by the end of fiscal year 1994 the University will have committed $962,000 in Special Maintenance funds for fire safety projects consisting of fire alarms, exit lights, emergency lights, fire escapes and fire doors. This will bring the University up to standards that meet current life safety codes and fire marshal recommendations. These projects provide a safety factor for people, but do not guarantee a building will be saved from fire. No alarm system can do that.

The University administration is deeply concerned about the safety and well-being of students, faculty, staff and visitors to the campus.

Meters frustrating

Editor,

Wanted: someone to feed quarters to the parking meter.

After I drive 60 miles to K-State, sit in class one hour and fifteen minutes, go to the library, go to my teacher's office and eat lunch in the Union, I forget that two hours have passed. I now have three parking tickets from the last three times I have had class. Thank you for reminding me why I don't live in Manhattan. At my house, there is lots of parking space, and no meters.

Live a little

Editor,

This is directed to Garry Harter's letter to the editor about the appalling strippers and death-causing beer-drinking game articles. If you think all people who play beer-drinking games are at college simply to party, you're wrong. I drink alcohol. I also drink responsibly. Part of being in college is learning some responsibility. I realize that education is the reason we're here. However, you cannot lock yourself in a room and study 24 hours a day.

So, I have some advice for you Garry — lighten up! Live a little! This is college; the fun years of your life. If drinking and strippers don't appeal to you, that's fine. But if you're truly a "live and let live" person, as you claim to be, then you'll climb down from your pulpit and quit preaching to those of us who like to have a little fun.

Cheerleaders rate in nation's top 15 to compete at San Antonio in finals

By Todd Fertig
Collegian Reporter

The K-State cheerleading squad was selected Friday as one of 15 squads that will compete in the Universal Cheerleader Association's national competition April 6-9 in San Antonio, Texas.

Cheerleading coach Michelle Thiemert, senior in elementary education, said she and the squad were informed Friday morning that the videotape they made of performances at basketball games was chosen by UCA instructors as one of the 15 best tapes submitted by NCAA Division I squads.

The announcement also awarded Willie the Wildcat fifth place in a national competition for mascots, Thiemert said. Willie will accompany the cheerleading squad in its performance of a two- to three-minute routine at the national competition, which is scheduled for broadcast on ESPN.

To enter the competition, the squad submitted a video tape of performances including a cheer, a chant, a routine to a fight song and a demonstration of crowd participation. In the selection process, the judges look for practicality of material, strong fundamentals, precise execution and advanced level of difficulty, Thiemert said.

"This was the best tape we've sent in three years," Thiemert said. "I felt very confident when we sent the tape to be judged. We've faced a lot of adversity through injuries and changes in the squad, so to complete the tape and do so well made us very proud."

Also taken into consideration in the selection process was the squad's enthusiasm and overall crowd appeal, Thiemert said. Each squad receives ratings on the participation of the crowd on its videotape. These ratings carry over into the national competition.

"Much of the judging is crowd-oriented," Thiemert said. "Good crowd support and participation make a big difference and are very important when the scores carry over to nationals."

"The crowd really was great support," Reynel Porter, sophomore in foods and nutrition and exercise science, said of the response K-State fans gave. "Crowd participation was a big part of the tape, and our fans were great."

Thiemert said the K-State cheerleading squad is known to have a classy appearance and that this squad is talented in gymnastics and stunt performing. The K-State squad qualified for nationals two years ago, finishing in the top 12 in the country. Two members from that squad will make the trip this year.

To prepare for nationals, the squad will have two- to three-hour practice sessions every day until it leaves for San Antonio, Thiemert said. She said the squad is considering hiring a choreographer to help coordinate the routines for the national contest.

"It takes a lot of time to prepare for a competition like this," Thiemert said. "We'll also work very hard on

Study examines social bias towards house husbands

By Sandy Hegarty
Collegian Reporter

For 15 years, women have been going through gender role changes, moving from working in the home to working outside the home. Now it's men's turn to change.

"Men are the last large chunk in our society to wrestle with changing roles," said John Robertson, psychologist at University Counseling Services.

Robertson said women, homosexuals and all minorities have been changing their societal roles for many years. It was not until the late 1970s that men found out what it meant to be male in our society.

"Men have been fairly reluctant to see the possibility of expanding what's appropriate for men to do," Robertson said.

Robertson recently conducted research to find what licensed therapists thought about men who choose to stay home instead of working full time outside the home. The results were published in an article in the Journal of Counseling Psychology.

"The article concerned men who chose to stay home and take care of the house and the children," Robertson said. "We found there are many biases that exist among men and even in therapists."

Forty-seven practicing therapists were randomly assigned to one of two versions of a videotaped simulation of a depressed, white male client, portrayed by a professional actor.

The tapes were identical except for the client's occupational and family roles, which were portrayed as either gender-traditional — working outside the home — or nontraditional.

During specified pauses in the videotape, the therapists responded verbally as if they were conducting a counseling session with a client, and their responses were recorded.

After the viewing session, the therapists evaluated the client on various dimensions, assigned a diagnosis and proposed a treatment plan.

"In the nontraditional role, the therapists gave a more severe diagnosis and saw the man as severely dysfunctional," Robertson said. "This suggests something about the attitudes toward men who stay home."

Robertson said the study has many implications. When men decide to expand their understanding of being male in our society, they are facing a somewhat different opposition than women have faced.

"Women get a monetary payoff when they change their roles," Robertson said. "There is also a social support network because other women are changing also."

"It's almost a penalty for men," Robertson said. "Men don't talk to other men about their feeling and struggles. There is no payoff in terms of money or socially. Men often receive ridicule from other family members."

There are two groups of men who stay home, Robertson said. Men in the first group make an agreement to stay home for a specified period of time. For example, they may take care of the home and family while the woman is finishing school.

The second group are men who are displaced, fired or laid off for a specified period of time, requiring the woman of the household to go to work to support the family. This also includes men who find themselves out of work and too old to be retrained for a different job.

'Niagara,' nude photos launch Monroe's career

By Richard Jones
Collegian Reviewer

Editor's Note: This article is part of a series dedicated to reviewing some of Marilyn Monroe's greatest movies, as well as the details of her life. Information about the actress' life comes from "Goddess: the Secret Lives of Marilyn Monroe," by Anthony Summers.

"An iron butterfly, some people called her. Butterflies are very beautiful, give great pleasure and have very short life spans." — Susan Strasberg, speaking of her friend, Marilyn Monroe.

The first movie in which Marilyn Monroe appeared was "Scudda Hoo! Scudda Hay!" Although she completed her small part in 1947, the film wasn't released until March 4, 1948. Coincidentally, "Dangerous Years," a film Marilyn started after "Scudda Hoo! Scudda Hay!," was the first of Marilyn's films to be released.

Marilyn appeared in 18 movies before becoming a star. Although these films were important stepping-stones, none provided as much potential for Marilyn's career as did "Niagara." No other film can boast of giving her the much-earned recognition that "Niagara" provided.

It was 1952 when Marilyn joined the cast of "Niagara" as Rose Loomis, an unfaithful wife vacationing with her husband in Niagara Falls. Joseph Cotten played George Loomis, her suspicious husband.

Casey Adams and Jean Peters appeared as Ray and Polly Cutler, a recently married couple spending their honeymoon in Niagara Falls.

As the scheming wife, Marilyn joined forces with her lover Ted Patrick, played by Richard Allan, to devise a plot to kill her husband.

"Niagara" is a tension-building film, full of ironic events and plot twists that leave three characters dead. One doomed character is, in fact, Rose. This film is the only one I've seen, as well as the only one in the series, in which Marilyn has a death scene.

"Niagara" was, without a doubt, one of the most controversial films of its time. Criticized for its sexual overtones, many women's groups protested the film and seriously jeopardized its release in various U.S. cities.

Complaints stemmed largely from a scene in which

Marilyn croons the lyrics to "Kiss," a song being played on a nearby turntable. Clad in a skin-tight dress described as the type you have to start making plans to wear when you are sixteen, Marilyn sang and moved for an audience of teenage boys, as well as co-star Casey Adams.

"Niagara" also featured what was then, and possibly still, the longest walking shot in movie history. The shot lasted for 150 feet and earned Marilyn recognition as the only actress who could make an entrance by walking out of a room.

If the film didn't give the public enough to complain about, Marilyn's personal life did. In 1952, her famous nude photographs resurfaced in calendar form. Although the photos were taken three years earlier, the publicity placed Marilyn's career in peril.

Scrutiny turned to sympathy when the public learned that she had posed for the pictures in an act of desperation when she was broke and out of work.

Public controversy has always been a quick road to success and the scandal raised with "Niagara" was no different.

In March 1953, shortly following release of the film, Marilyn received two awards: Redbook magazine's Best Young Box Office Personality and Photoplay magazine's Fastest Rising Star of 1952.

"Niagara" was the first film in which Marilyn's name appeared above the title. Despite vast disapproval, the film made a profit of five times what it cost to produce.

The film's success may not have been as great had the industry stuck with its original plan. The filmmakers' initial idea was to cast Jean Peters in the part of Rose. This move would doubtlessly give the same film an entirely different meaning. After the lead was given to Marilyn, Peters was cast in the role of Polly, in which she nonetheless proved her talents.

Prior to joining the "Niagara" cast, Marilyn had taken a home in Hollywood Hills with another actress named Shelley Winters and her personal life was thriving as steadily as her career, but not without upset.

In late 1950, Marilyn was introduced to playwright Arthur Miller. At the time, she was still in mourning over the death of her lover and agent Johnny Hyde. In addition, Miller was married at the time of their first meeting. If either had intentions of a relationship, it

Netters go 1-2 on trip

Staff and Wire Reports

K-State snapped a six-match losing streak Sunday as the women's tennis team edged Drake, 5-4. The win improved K-State's dual record to 3-6.

The match went down to the wire, and until junior Thresa Burcham and freshman Suzanne Sim won at No. 3 doubles, the match was up for grabs.

"Suzanne and Thresa's performance at No. 3 was critical," Coach Steve Bietau said. "They started out poorly and did a good job of hanging in there and winning a crucial match for us."

Other Wildcats who won against Drake were seniors Helen Schildknecht and Sara Hancock at No. 2 doubles, Sim at No. 6 singles, Hancock in No. 5 singles, and Schildknecht in No. 2 singles.

Schildknecht drew special praise from Bietau for her performance on the three-dual trip, which included losses to Western Michigan and Notre Dame.

"Her performance the last two weeks has been the most consistent all year," Bietau said. "She is continuing to show improvement in singles and doubles. She has developed as a rallying point for the team and is taking a role as a leader."

Bietau said the team is also making progress.

"Teamwise, we still have a long way to go. We overcame some big obstacles by playing three matches in a row on the road," Bietau said. "It's important to continue to play hard, and no one is backing down. After the loss to Western Michigan, it was very important that we come out and play well on Saturday and finish the trip with a win on Sunday."

The 5-4 loss to Western Michigan Friday preceded a 6-3 defeat at the hands of Notre Dame Saturday.

K-State will travel to Fayetteville, Ark., next weekend.

Lady Cats fold, lose Big 8 title

KU women spoil celebration with 73-70 win at Bramlage

By Dan Wicker
Sports Reporter

For the third year in a row, the home court advantage has not been much of an advantage in the K-State-Kansas rivalry.

Kansas posted a 73-70 victory over the Lady Cats for its third straight victory in Manhattan, and, in the process, dashed any hopes K-State had of clinching a tie for the Big Eight title.

However, it looked as though K-State would put an end to the home court jinx with a Kristie Bahner lay-up at the 3:11 mark to put K-State up by five.

From that point on Kansas went on a 10-2 run to capture the victory and drop K-State to 10-4 in Big Eight play and a second-place finish in the conference, tied with the winner of the Oklahoma State-Colorado game.

"We just didn't do a very good job at the end," Lady Cats interim coach Gaye Griffin said. "We had a play set up at the very end. We just did not run it."

Neither team could get the upper hand during the contest, and the game stayed nip and tuck the entire 40 minutes. The lead was never more than five for either team and was exchanged 18 times.

"The difference was that every time we had a chance to put them away, they would shoot and get their own board and then shoot and finally score," Griffin said.

The 'Hawks dominated the offensive boards, outrebounding the Lady Cats 24-15. They got quite a few follow shot attempts in the process. Terrilyn Johnson led Kansas, grabbing 10. Lynn Page added eight.

"We did not do a good job of execution and blocking off the boards," Griffin said.

Just as in so many basketball games, this one came down to free-throw shooting in the final three minutes, and Kansas was able to convert on 8-of-12 charity shots.

The Lady Cats, up by five before the three-minute mark, began to see their lead dwindle. Johnson closed the gap to three with a bucket with 2:49 left. Kay Hart then cut it to two by converting the front end of a bonus, and Lisa Braddy hit two more throws to knot the game at 68 with only 1:23 remaining.

After taking a charge on Misti Chennault's baseline drive to the goal, Bahner hit two free throws for the Lady Cats' final points of the game. Up by two, K-State got the ball back on another foul by Chennault, but the Lady Cats turned it right back over with a stolen inbounds pass by Hart.

Hart made a quick pass to Braddy in the lane, who was fouled by Kelly Moylan. Braddy iced the first throw and missed on the second attempt, but Rita Matteucci was whistled for a foul on the rebound to send Johnson to line. She hit the first throw to tie the game at 70.

With 13 seconds left, Matteucci missed a shot just inside the paint, and, in the fight for the rebound, Bahner was called for a foul. Johnson was again sent to the line and converted on only the front end to give Kansas a one-point lead.

Instead of working the ball to the play that Griffin wanted — a shot by Diana Miller, who all scorers with 23 points — Mary Jo Miller shot an off-balanced three pointer with eight seconds remaining that rebounded towards the sideline.

Mary Jo Miller was then called for a foul diving after the loose ball. Hart went to the line and converted both charities with only 1 tick left to put Kansas up by three.

The loss rounded out the regular season for the Lady Cats, but they will prepare this week for the post-season tournament March 3-5 in Salina's Bicentennial Center.

"If you are any kind of a competitor, you are going to get back up," Griffin said.

K-State, the second seed, will play Nebraska Saturday at 6 p.m.

Etheridge leads men to 3rd-place finish

By Chris Hays
Sports Editor

LINCOLN, Neb. — K-State's Clifton Etheridge, the Big Eight's defending long jump champion going into the weekend's conference indoor championships, got his title snatched from him Friday night.

Oklahoma's Russell Adams outdistanced Etheridge by 4 1/4 inches to dethrone the champion from last year, and Etheridge then decided he had something to prove.

And Saturday he did just that, blowing away the triple jump field by almost two feet to nab the gold medal in that event.

Etheridge's performance highlighted the meet for the K-State men, who finished in third place with 73 points, behind Iowa State's 156 and Nebraska's 120.

The junior jumper from Hendersonville, N.C., led a K-State parade through two sandpit events on the weekend. Behind Orlo Berry, Dwayne Murphy, Charles Armstead and Etheridge, K-State racked up 31 points in the long and triple jumps.

"The guys did a good job in the jumps," Coach John Capriotti said Friday after the long jump competition. "We picked up 12 points and then Steve Fritz (eighth place) almost sneaked in there. I only picked us for 10 in that event so they helped us out there."

Then, Saturday, Capriotti added, "The men's triple jumpers were outstanding. To go 1-2-6 is great. I thought Clifton Etheridge really came through to win it."

Friday night also provided probably the gutsiest performance of the meet. K-State's David Warders, who had been battling the flu all week long, was still not feeling up to par when the Wildcats' team doctor diagnosed him as having a slight temperature, but he still left it up to Warders to decide if he would participate in his scheduled 5,000-meter event.

Well, Warders shook off the symptoms he was feeling and turned in a third-place performance that had even Capriotti, in rare form, searching for words.

"Gosh," Capriotti said. "What a gutsy performance. I felt so bad. I wasn't going to make him run, but

Women's track squad takes 2nd in league

By Chris Hays
Sports Editor

LINCOLN, Neb. — All the K-State women's track team had worked for almost went for naught Saturday at the Big Eight Indoor Championships at the Bob Devaney Sports Center.

One little red flag nearly cost the K-State women an outright second-place finish.

Here's the scenario: After Connie Teaberry picked up six points in the high jump with a third-place finish, K-State needed only to place in the final event of the meet — the 4x400-meter relay — in order to take sole possession of second place.

But after K-State's Tammy Leach, Nebraska's Ethel Edwards and Oklahoma's Lenell Miller got tangled up with each other when they all went to cut into the inside lane, the turn judge ruled that Leach had pushed off and disqualified the K-State relay team, which had finished the relay in fourth place.

That disqualification would mean that K-State and Oklahoma would tie for second, but the ruling was reversed and the results stood, as the K-State women edged out Oklahoma, 93-89, for the No. 2 spot, behind first-place Nebraska's 128 points.

"We would have got second still, but the girls really tried hard, and that would have just taken all of that away from them," Capriotti said of the possibility of the K-State women having to share the second-place trophy. "But that kind of stuff (contact on the track) happens at a competitive meet when you get people really racing hard. There's gonna be some incidental contact."

The first track event of the day helped set the tone for the K-State women. Capriotti had told his distance medley relay team that they could provide the emotional lift he thought his squad would need with a big performance to start the day, and the four-member squad responded — in a big way.

Laura Ostmeier, Markeya Jones, Becky Ives and Angie Barry cruised to the Big Eight meet record in the distance medley with a time of 11:43.20, and from there, everything started to fall into place for K-State in the beginning.

"I thought the women's distance runners did a fantastic job," Capriotti said. "I got them together in the (motel) room and told them that they

Final 2:06 dooms Wildcats at Kansas, 70-58

By David Svoboda
Sports Reporter

LAWRENCE — Second-ranked Kansas scored the game's final 12 points Saturday and downed K-State, 70-58, in Allen Fieldhouse.

It was a game that the visiting Wildcats had molded in their tempo from the outset. K-State was attempting to take its third consecutive win in Allen, but Kevin Pritchard and Jeff Gueldner combined for a one-two punch that floored the Wildcats.

Pritchard got the ball rolling with a three-pointer from the right side with 1:49 left that gave Kansas a 61-58 lead.

"I always want to take that shot," said Pritchard, who was playing with a slight concussion suffered when he took a Lance Simmons elbow with just 2:40 gone in the contest. "I look forward to it because that's the fun part of the game. I was confident it was going in."

KU coach Roy Williams said he was glad his captain and floor leader had the basketball. He was also glad Pritchard was able to return to play at all.

"I didn't think he'd be able to play, but that little rascal came back in, closed one eye and shot with the other open," Williams said. "He just gutted it out today. It was a heck of a performance by Kevin."

On the ensuing possession, Steve Henson was hounded by Pritchard on the defensive end, and his attempt to get a pass to the wing for Ski Jones was stolen by Gueldner, who kicked the ball forward to Rick Calloway for a dunk that brought the house down.

That, for all intents and purposes, was the ballgame. It was 63-58 and 1:30 remained. That's plenty of time, but the momentum was with the home team.

"Pritchard hit a three, we came down with our chance and I threw it away," Henson said, recounting the swing. "That was pretty much the game. One weak play turned the game around."

"That was a big swing right there," K-State coach Lon Kruger said. "We had a chance to get even if we hit a three, and it ends up a five-point lead the other way."

The Jayhawks hit five of six free throws the rest of the way and Alonzo Jamison added a dunk for the icing on the cake.

Though the score had Kansas the winner by 12, the game was, in reality, much closer.

K-State, a 15½-point underdog, slowed the tempo at times to a crawl and fought and scraped for every loose ball in attempting to rebound from a 28-point thrashing when the Jayhawks visited Bramlage Coliseum earlier in the season.

The "fight" Saturday led to several players joining Pritchard on the floor for the count. Gueldner left Allen with a cut, a bloodshot eye and a ringing in his ears as the result of two elbows to the head he received at times throughout the contest.

However, he had the final five rebounds of the game and was KU's second-leading scorer. Gueldner had 13 to Pritchard's 20. Henson led all scorers with 21.

"Jeff got the last rebounds of the game, and there were nine guys up

David

OFF THE BENCH

LAWRENCE — If there is such a thing as a "good loss," K-State suffered one Saturday in Allen Fieldhouse.

Most veteran basketball observers gave Lon Kruger's Wildcats little chance of overcoming the "Phog" and handing KU a defeat on its home floor for the third straight year, but K-State came within 2:06 of playing a near-flawless game.

The 70-58 outcome is not at all indicative of the way the game was contested.

The Wildcats, for the most part, made the Jayhawks play what can only be termed a "typical K-State game."

"Our defense didn't take them out of what they wanted to do," KU coach Roy Williams said. "Their offense dictated most of the game."

K-State's ability to dictate allowed the Wildcats to make this a much closer game than installment No. 1 of the rivalry for 1989-90, a 28-point Jayhawk win in Bramlage.

"This was about 100 percent different from that game," said Steve Henson, who led all scorers with 21 points. "We weren't playing well in that game, and we weren't competing."

"Today we competed, hustled for loose balls, hit the boards. We worked hard, and it showed."

Indeed, if one were to remove the unanswered 12-point Jayhawk run that led to the final score, the Wildcats played head-to-head against the team that will likely be the No. 1 club in the country later today.

They were that good. And, several KU players said, that ugly as well.

"This team (Kansas) gets ready for every game, and there was no let down here," KU forward Mark Randall said. "So you have to give K-State a great deal of credit. They dictated most of the day."

Guard Kevin Pritchard agreed with Randall.

"We didn't have the fire we needed when we came out for the first half, and a lot of that was as a result of K-State's play," he said.

"They're such a controlled-tempo team, and it seems like you're never in it. That results in an ugly game."

If only ugly could have been a bit uglier for Kansas and a bit prettier for K-State.

A win in the contest for K-State would have most likely removed the 'Cats from the NCAA tournament "bubble" they've been on much of the year.

Beating KU in Allen would have given K-State a nifty trifecta against the top three teams in the conference — Missouri, Kansas and Oklahoma — and would have given the Wildcats their first quality road win in quite some time.

But, for now, K-State is still on the bubble, though Pritchard, Randall and guard Jeff Gueldner aren't quite sure they should be.

"Yes, this team is most definitely an NCAA tourney team," Pritchard said. "I think they can be competitive in any game. They're not fun to play against because of the tempo, but that doesn't mean for a second that they're not good."

"They all fill their roles so well," Randall added. "And they gave us the kind of game here we haven't had but twice this season (in a win over OU and a loss to Mizzou)."

Gueldner pointed to leadership as the thing that makes K-State a likely member of the NCAA's field of 64.

"Right now, I think K-State has a lot of leadership, and any team that has Steve Henson has a chance," Gueldner said.

The Wildcats' chances of making the field of 64 would be greatly improved if, by chance, Kruger and Co. can go into Columbia, Mo., Wednesday and emerge with a win.

That will prove to be a tall order, however. Mizzou has won 31 straight at home, has its early-season loss in Bramlage as incentive and is likely to be still smarting after a 107-90 spanking Sunday in Norman, Okla., against the Sooners.

Barring the unexpected, the Wildcats' chances of making the tourney will apparently come down to winning the regular-season finale at home Saturday against Nebraska. That win, barring an upset at Columbia, would give K-State a 17-13 regular season mark.

In the past three seasons, K-State has had no fewer than 18 wins entering play in the postseason conference tourney. That was the scenario in 1986-87 and again last year.

A win total of 18 then, including a first-round conference tourney win over Oklahoma State, would appear could set the tone for the entire team in the first event, and they dug in deep."

From there, the first-place finish in the day's first event provided a kind of domino effect.

Carla Shannon won the triple jump, Angie Miller won the shot put, freshman Paulette Staats finished third in the 1,000 meters, Joy Jones took second in the 400 and the K-State women had jumped out to a big lead early in the team standings.

Nobody, however, not even the team itself expected to wind up the way it had started. Nebraska was too overpowering and too stacked.

For example, Miller gave the Wildcats 10 points with her shot-put win, but four Nebraska women were behind her — 20 points. Nebraska pulled off point totals like that in several events Saturday and there was no dethroning of the 'Husker women, who won their 11th straight Big Eight indoor title.

But K-State wore the runner-up crown proudly.

Others picked up points for the K-State women on the weekend: Joy Jones took fourth in the 55 meters, Ellarie Pesmark was fourth in the 600 yards, Janet Haskin was second in the 5,000 meters and third in the 3,000 meters, Barry was third in the 5,000 meters, Karen McGaughey was fourth in the pentathlon, Shannon was third in the long jump and Jennifer Hillier was sixth in the 3,000 meters.

weekend and that made a big difference. Now I can go home and sleep well tonight (Saturday) knowing that we did everything we could."

K-State finished right where the Big Eight coaches picked them to finish in the pre-meet poll. Last year, K-State tied with Iowa State for second.

Others who scored points for the Wildcat men: the fourth-place distance medley relay team of Marcus Wright, Corey King, Jason Goertzen and Warders; Tyrone Watkins was second in the 600 yards; Pat Hessini was second in the mile; R.D. Cogswell was sixth in the high jump; Jared Storm and Goertzen went second and sixth in the 1,000 meters; Chris Carter was fifth in the shot put; and Wright was fourth in the 800.

'Cats down Friends in doubleheader

By Scott Paske
Sports Reporter

Solid pitching and a pair of big innings were enough for K-State to win its home opener over Friends University Saturday.

But K-State coach Mike Clark said he wasn't particularly pleased with the Wildcats' 9-3 and 8-2 doubleheader sweep of the Falcons at Frank Myers Field.

"You're always happy to get two wins," Clark said. "However, we've still got some things that good teams like Oklahoma, Wichita State and those people are going to take advantage of if we can't get our offense in better shape."

After posting a .198 team batting average in last week's series at Arkansas, the 'Cats improved to .327 against Friends. K-State, 3-2 overall, had to rely on a six-run second inning in the opener and a seven-run third in the nightcap after stranding 11 runners in the two games.

"It seems like there's one inning each game when we put it all together and do a really good job," Clark said. "Other than that, we looked awful at the plate. We were very undisciplined and didn't execute."

K-State overcame its offensive problems with good pitching efforts from senior ace David Hierholzer and junior college transfer Kent Hipp. Hierholzer, 1-1, worked four innings in the opener, giving up three hits and recording eight strikeouts. The righthander struck out six straight batters and eight of 10 during a stretch in the middle innings.

Freshman Dan Driskill, pitching in his first collegiate game, and senior Steve Scoville tossed the final three innings to preserve the win.

Hipp spun a three-hitter over six innings for his first K-State win. Friends' leadoff hitter Duane Drones 99 scored in the first on an infield single by Deon Allen, and again in the third on a single by Will Johnson.

Sophomore lefthander Greg Laddish worked the final inning in relief of Hipp, striking out two of the three batters he faced.

"Our pitchers were really strong," Clark said. "Dave had great stuff, and Kent threw a nice game. They scratched two runs off of him, which is unfortunate because he threw well enough to get the shutout."

"It was Dan Driskill's first experience in Division I baseball, and I don't care who you're playing, you've got to come out, throw strikes and keep the ball down. He got burned a little bit, but hopefully that'll be a learning experience."

Centerfielder L.J. Twynier led the offense with four hits in eight at-bats in the two games. His RBI single in the second inning of the opener contributed to the 'Cats' six-run rally.

First baseman Kevin Kaufman, who collected four hits in the opening series with Arkansas, had a four-game hitting streak halted in Saturday's second game.

K-State plays host to Illinois State and Colorado State Saturday and Sunday at Frank Myers Field. The teams will play each other in a round-robin format both days.

Company donates genetic material

K-State, wheat producers reap benefits of research on hard red winter wheat

From Staff and Wire Reports

A "priceless" donation of hard red winter wheat genetic material has been made to the University by a seed company that has developed the varieties for the past 20 years.

Pioneer Hi-Bred International Inc., based in Des Moines, Iowa, made the announcement Thursday at the annual meeting of the Hard Winter Wheat Quality Council.

Pioneer, the nation's largest agricultural genetics and seed company, announced in November that it was discontinuing development, production and sales of hard winter red varieties this year.

George Ham, associate dean of the College of Agriculture and associate director of the Kansas Agricultural Experiment Station, called the donation an important contribution "not only to KSU but to wheat breeding programs and wheat producers across the Great Plains."

"It's really priceless," Ham said of the donation. He said Pioneer has invested several million dollars into development of the varieties.

Ham said a diverse source of genetic material, or germplasm, is the "lifeblood of wheat improvement programs."

Mark Iwig, now director of corn breeding and most recently director of cereal breeding, said there are not enough sales in hard wheat to support the type of genetics research Pioneer had been conducting.

Ham said Pioneer was leaving the hard wheat field because of a lack of profitability, caused in part by grower violation of the Plant Variety Protection Act. The act allows growers to save seed for planting the next year's crop in their own fields. However, some growers are selling seed wheat to others, a violation of the act, Ham said.

Iwig said the donation assures the U.S. wheat industry will have unrestricted access to Pioneer's hard red winter wheat germplasm and keep the varieties developed by the company available through K-State.

"The University research staff has pledged willingness to share the germplasm and varieties with regional public institutions," Iwig said. "We urge them to do all possible to make this germplasm available to

Museum recreates independent variety

By Robert Clark
Collegian Reporter

The unique flavor of the history of independent telephone systems is captured by the Museum of Independent Telephony in Abilene.

The museum, which opened in spring 1973, recreates through its exhibits the wide variety of the more than 6,000 independent companies that were in operation at the turn of the century.

The curator of the museum is Peg Chronister, an expert on the independents.

According to Chronister, the early Bell telephone company didn't provide service in the smaller communities and rural areas. Private citizens formed small companies which had a single exchange. Today, independent companies serve half of the U.S. geographical area. Most of these companies are in the central section of the United States.

Chronister's expertise has been called upon many times by researchers.

"I do a lot of the research for the Smithsonian in Washington. They have a lot of the very early telephones, but they don't have the information on the later ones," Chronister said.

"After Bell's patents expired off in 1893, then the independents could set up their operations," Chronister said. "And as far as equipment, there were 233 manufacturers or suppliers by that time."

The ingenuity and spirit of the early independent companies is illustrated by the numerous displays at the museum. Exhibits feature the changes and improvements in telephone equipment over the years.

The museum also contains a large collection of telephone publications and company histories. A program of slides and narration relates the history as well as some of the amusing acts of the early linemen and operators.

A special collection of the first commercial phones is on loan from the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, D.C. The collection illustrates the evolution of the telephone. A replicated business office circa 1900 fills one corner of the museum.

The Dickinson County Historical Society and Museum and the Museum of Independent Telephony share a building in Abilene just east of the Eisenhower Center.

"United Telecommunications started here in Abilene as United Telephone in 1898 and that's why they built the museum here," Chronister said.

"We have hands-on things for the children so they can experience what it is to be an operator. The telephones are hooked up so they can talk back and forth with each other," Chronister said.

Chronister said the museum gives guided tours which last approximately 45 minutes.

Admission is $1 for the general public and admission is free for school tours.

But the ruling party blames most of the country's economic troubles on a U.S. embargo and the war with the Contras.

In an effort to win votes, the Sandinistas have released political prisoners, said they wanted a mixed economy and pledged there will be no more expropriations of private property.

Chamorro's main drawing cards were the economy and her status as a symbol of democracy. The assassination of her husband, Pedro Joaquin Chamorro, triggered the Sandinista revolution that toppled Somoza.

Chamorro heads a fractious coalition of 14 parties from far left to far right whose only common interest was getting rid of the Sandinistas.

Eight other presidential candidates were on the ballot, but only Erick Ramirez of the Social Christian Party was expected to get a significant number of votes.

Pioneer's action does not reflect a dwindling market for hard red winter wheat, Ham said.

there jumping for it every time," Williams said of Gueldner's effort. "He really came through for us."

Joining Pritchard on the injury list in the first half was K-State forward Billy Ray Smith, who hit the back of his head on a press table as he made a save of an errant pass. He left the game but returned after five minutes.

K-State's effort earned the praise of both coaches.

"Give K-State some credit," Williams said. "They're a good possession ballclub. They had a great game plan today. Henson is one of the best you can have to run a possession-type game, and Derouillere and Jones complement him well."

"I'm really proud of the way our kids played," Kruger said. "We locked in and did a good job."

As good as the K-State effort was, that of Kansas gained equal praise.

"Credit Kansas," Kruger said. "They shot the ball well (58.1 percent for the game) and did what they had to do down the stretch."

"I think we really needed this one, and it says a lot about our team that we were able to get it," said Pritchard of Kansas, which will likely return to No. 1 following Oklahoma's trouncing of Missouri Sunday in Norman.

Soft winter wheat is primarily grown in the Corn Belt region of Indiana and Ohio, Ham said. No soft wheat is grown in Kansas, he said.

Pioneer also discontinued research in triticale, a wheat-rye hybrid used primarily as a poultry feed. The triticale germplasm and its varieties were sold to Goldsmith Seeds, Inc., of Gilroy, Calif. Terms of that sale were not disclosed.

At one point this season, this team appeared to have little or no chance of playing anywhere after Kansas City's Big Eight tourney — anywhere, that is, except in the NIT tourney.

Now, it's come down to a two-week series of games and the decision of a committee to determine whether the Wildcats will add $250,000 to the K-State athletic department budget.

Conference coaches have insisted all year that the Big Eight is the best league in the nation and deserves to have five teams in the big dance. It's getting close to the time we'll find out if anyone has been listening — and paying attention to entire games, not just the final score.

The squad anticipates stiff competition from the other schools at nationals. Porter said most of the squads at nationals will be from large schools and will be talented.

Opposition wins Nicaragua election

President accepts decision

By The Associated Press

MANAGUA, Nicaragua — President Daniel Ortega assured the world Monday the Sandinistas will accept the voters' verdict and surrender power after more than a decade to an opposition alliance formed only six months ago.

"We leave victorious because the Sandinistas have sacrificed, spilled blood and sweat, not to cling to government posts, but to bring Nicaragua something denied since 1821," he said in a dramatic dawn speech broadcast nationwide.

Ortega spoke hours after it was clear the electoral tide was against him and Violeta Barrios de Chamorro, publisher of the opposition newspaper La Prensa, would be the next president of this battle-scarred nation, which has in the past decade become one of the poorest in the Western Hemisphere.

"People wanted a change," she said as she headed for a victory celebration at her campaign headquarters.

With 82 percent of the precincts counted, Chamorro had 633,357 votes, or 55.2 percent, to 468,040, or 40.8 percent for Ortega, the Supreme Electoral Council said. The coalition also won a majority in the National Assembly.

Chamorro is to take office April 25 and the transition could be difficult, given the bad blood between winners and losers.

"It's going to be a bit harder than the normal transition," said Alfredo Cesar, one of Chamorro's closest advisers and a former leader of the Contra rebels. "That means the two sides ... will sit down and make sure the transition is accomplished in a peaceful manner."

There was elation at the White House. "In this year of political change, democracy won another victory," President Bush said in a statement, and officials said lifting the U.S. economic embargo was under discussion.

Under the Sandinistas, Nicaragua became a self-proclaimed revolutionary state and adopted portions of Marxist and Leninist ideology to remake its economic and social structures. It won strong support from the Soviet Union and Cuba, and was accused by the United States of trying to foment a Communist revolution in neighboring El Salvador.

The Sandinista loss to the UNO, which favors Western-style representative government, followed by months the movement toward democracy in a several Soviet-aligned nations of East Europe and democratization in the Soviet Union itself.

Both Ortega and Chamorro presented

Manhattan residents predict difficult period of transition

By Tomari Guinn
Staff Reporter

Nicaragua may be facing a difficult transitional period after Violeta Barrios de Chamorro upset President Daniel Ortega in elections Sunday, some students say.

Wilfredo Gutierrez, graduate student in sociology, said it is important that the United National Opposition, Chamorro's party, include the Sandinistas in the new government.

"A big mistake will be made if UNO doesn't cooperate with the Sandinistas," Gutierrez said. "They must be incorporated into the political system of Nicaragua because they still represent 41 percent of the political force."

"If UNO doesn't share the power, they will be ruining the country because it will be difficult to govern without the help of the Sandinistas," he said.

John Exdell, coordinator of the Manhattan Alliance on Central America and associate professor of philosophy, said the Sandinistas will maintain some power because of the wide range of political issues in the UNO party.

"The UNO is just a coalition thrown together for the sole purpose of winning the presidency," Exdell said. "It's not likely to hold together for long and could splinter."

He said the election outcome was a victory for U.S. foreign policy.

Had Chamorro not won the elections, Exdell said, Nicaragua would have experienced a slower pace of normalization of relations with the United States or that normalization may never have occurred.

Gutierrez said the UNO is made up of more than a dozen political parties, all with differences on many issues.

"They don't represent one party; each will have specific concerns about state policy," he said. "There is a wide range from the left to the right. It will not be a simple change."

Both Exdell and Gutierrez said they consider themselves supporters of the Sandinistas.

Gutierrez said the Sandinistas were trying to establish peace for Nicaragua and were working to develop projects to help the poor.

He said he wonders if the UNO can run Nicaragua without the aid of the United States if Bush decides not to give them money.

"I am a supporter of the Sandinistas," Exdell said. "I believe they have the best pros-

Officials to review inspection program

By The Collegian Staff

The City Commission will get its first look at the rental inspection program for Manhattan at 4 p.m. today at the Headquarter Fire Station.

The open meeting will allow the commissioners to discuss the program and then hear public comments on the plan.

"We have not formally discussed it as of yet," Commissioner Richard Hayter said. "I don't think we will have a finished document."

Hayter said the meeting will probably not decide the final program. He said the options for the program range from dropping it completely to accepting it as is. Hayter said comments from the public could cause the commission to send parts of the draft back to the citizen's committee for revisions.

"We will try keep the discussion organized, so that the audience doesn't repeat any points," Hayter said.

Wade Whitmer, director of Consumer Relations Board at K-State, said a van will be available to take interested students to the meeting. The van will leave campus near the Student Governing Association offices at the Union at 3:30 p.m. The van will also be available to transport students after the meeting.

"At this point, we have not been given the chance to speak," Whitmer said. "We want to impress on the City Commission that the students are present and do want to speak."

Whitmer said many campus areas will be represented at the meeting, including the Off-Campus Association, the President's Office, the College of Arts and Sciences and graduate students in regional and community planning.

Steven Woodard, Junction City, is assisted by Mike Loreg, Mobile Intensive Care technician, after receiving injuries resulting from a one-vehicle accident Monday afternoon. He was admitted to Memorial Hospital.

According to police, Woodard lost control of his van near the junction of Stagg Hill Road and Kansas Highway 18 and hit the culvert.

Tire blowout leads to wreck

By Anne Krauss
Collegian Reporter

A 41-year-old Junction City man received multiple injuries in a one-vehicle accident Monday south of Manhattan at the intersection of Stagg Hill Road and Kansas Highway 18.

A Riley County Police Department officer at the scene said Steven Woodard was westbound in a Matco Tool van when a tire apparently blew out on his vehicle. Woodard crossed the median and left lanes of K-18 and struck a concrete culvert.

Woodard's van flipped over after striking the culvert, coming to rest in the bottom of a creek bed on the south side of K-18, he said.

"I just thought he was changing lanes," said Jack Nix, a witness. "Then he crossed over and rolled into the ditch."

Woodard suffered injuries to his side and leg, paramedics at the scene said.

Sgt. Larry Freeby, an officer for the Riley County Police Department, said the accident occurred at 12:55 p.m.

A spokeswoman for Memorial Hospital said Woodard was admitted following the accident.

Rural firefighters sprayed water on the engine compartment of the van to prevent gasoline from the ruptured tank from igniting.

Paramedics initially requested rescue equipment, including the jaws of life, but were able to free Woodard before Manhattan Fire Department rescue workers could arrive.

Abortion opponents protest House decision

Representatives reject plan to require parental notification

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A few short hours after the House killed Gov. Mike Hayden's abortion bill on Monday, anti-abortion forces rallied to force a debate on a measure requiring doctors to notify parents in advance when minors attempt to obtain abortions.

The House rejected a motion from Rep. Artie Lucas, R-Highland, to override the Federal and State Affairs Committee's decision last week to reject Hayden's parental notification proposal. It voted 65-58 in favor of the action, but House rules require that such a motion receive 70 of 125 votes to pass.

Hours later, the House Transportation Committee, whose chairman, Rep. Rex Crowell, R-Longton, supports parental notification, endorsed a stricter proposal, amended an unrelated bill and sent it to the House.

The move is unusual because the Federal and State Affairs Committee traditionally has handled all abortion legislation. In addition, the Transportation Committee basically took a bill and substituted a completely different measure and put it under the same number.

Still, House Speaker Jim Braden said the House will debate the measure, possibly as early as Wednesday and probably by the end of the week.

"I have said if a bill came out of committee, I would run it," said Braden, R-Clay Center. "I've never seen this happen in the 16 years I've been in the Legislature."

The bill the Transportation Committee endorsed is identical to a proposal that Lucas sponsored and the Federal and State Affairs Committee rejected. It applies to girls under 18.

The measure would require doctors to notify both parents, in writing at least 48 hours in advance, when a minor seeks an abortion. It contains provisions for criminal sanctions against doctors who do not comply, and the proposal has the support of the state's two largest anti-abortion groups.

Hayden's proposal applied to girls under 16, required notification of only one parent and allowed the notification to be given orally. Also, Hayden's plan had a "judicial bypass" provision, allowing a girl to go to court to avoid the notifying one of her parents.

Lucas' proposal was basically amended into a bill that increased the service fee county treasurers could charge for registering vehicles from $1 to $2.50. The amendment removed all provisions of the transportation bill, including its title.

The action, which came on a voice vote, left some Transportation Committee members flabbergasted.

"It's really incredible," said Rep. Cindy Empson, R-Independence.

"It's a poor way of doing business."

The action also raised questions about House rules. Under the state's constitution, a bill may have only one subject. Thus, amendments must be germane to the general subject of a bill.

"I guess you can do just about anything you can get away with in committee," Braden said.

Abortion-rights groups and legislators were caught off-guard by the Transportation Committee's actions. Still, despite their surprise, they said they hadn't expected the issue to die easily.

Army exits Czechoslovakia

FRENSTAT, Czechoslovakia (AP) — A brass band struck up the "Internationale" Monday as the Red Army began leaving Czechoslovakia 22 years after it arrived to crush a reform movement.

Karel Micek of the Civic Forum said the presence of Soviet troops had meant "empty shelves in stores, polluted water, an occasional fight in the pub and a reminder that we are not a free country."

"Their main problem was that they were here," said Micek, whose group played a central role in the peaceful revolution that ousted the Communist Party from exclusive power in November.

Twenty-two Soviet T-62 tanks loaded on flatcars left the northern town of Frenstat, beginning a negotiated, three-stage pullout of the 73,500 Soviet military personnel, scheduled for completion next year.

A second train, laden with 33 armored vehicles, left a few hours later from the Domasov nad Bystrici station near a Red Army base at Libava in eastern Czechoslovakia.

It is the first time the Kremlin has removed its soldiers from the territory of a Warsaw Pact ally.

Father tracks down daughter

WELLINGTON, New Zealand (AP) — The father of seven-year-old Hilary Foretich, whose mother went to jail for 25 months rather than disclose her whereabouts, said Monday that he had come to rescue his daughter.

"My daughter deserves to come back and have a normal life," said Dr. Eric Foretich, 45, as he arrived in Auckland.

The mother, Dr. Jean Elizabeth Morgan, who claims her ex-husband sexually abused the child, accused him of hunting down their daughter like an animal.

Foretich denies he abused the child. Last week, the Falls Church, Va., dental surgeon traced his daughter to New Zealand, where she has been living with her maternal grandparents.

Hilary reportedly hasn't seen either of her parents in two years.

Nation

Jackson will not enter race

WASHINGTON (AP) — Jesse Jackson announced Monday he will not run for mayor of the "dispirited" nation's capital but he refused to rule out a third bid for the Democratic presidential nomination in 1992.

"I want to continue to serve, but not as mayor," Jackson said. "At present I believe that I may best serve by continuing work at a national level to change the direction of this country."

Jackson's political plans have been the subject of much conjecture since he moved to the District of Columbia last April. Speculation about a Jackson mayoral candidacy increased after Mayor Marion Barry's arrest last month on a cocaine possession charge and subsequent enrollment in a substance abuse treatment program.

Jackson said he would continue to support the district's efforts to become a state, but he also said his Rainbow Coalition would press for action on issues at the national level.

Barry's re-election plans remain on hold as the mayor battles an eight-count indictment on cocaine possession and perjury charges filed against him earlier this month.

Valdez testimony continues

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — Exxon Valdez Capt. Joseph Hazelwood tried to move the grounded tanker off a jagged reef, endangering the engine room crew and risking the loss of the ship, a prosecution witness testified Monday.

George Greiner Jr., who analyzed shipboard recordings of course changes during the ship's disastrous passage into Prince William Sound, said it was obvious Hazelwood attempted to move the tanker after it ran onto Bligh Reef early March 24.

Under questioning from Assistant District Attorney Brent Cole, Greiner said that moving the 987-foot ship off the reef threatened further damage to the vessel and could have hurt or killed people in the engine room.

The prosecution contends that Hazelwood was reckless in trying to move the Exxon Valdez off the reef minutes after it ran aground, creating the nation's worst oil spill.

Grissom murder trial begins

OLATHE (AP) — Richard Grissom Jr., who is charged with killing three young suburban women who disappeared last summer, "virtually conceded" the women's deaths in police interviews, Johnson County District Attorney Paul Morrison said Monday. Grissom is a former K-State student.

Morrison said in an opening statement at Grissom's preliminary hearing that the 29-year-old house painter had offered to make a deal with the prosecutor in exchange for information about the case.

"Mr. Grissom told officials that the girls would be found in Kansas and in Johnson County. He told them on three different occasions that they would dig them up sometime," Morrison said.

The bodies of the women have not been found. He is also charged in the case with aggravated kidnapping, four counts of aggravated robbery, two counts of aggravated burglary, burglary and theft. He was ordered last week to stand trial in an unrelated case on six forgery charges.

Grissom is also a suspect in the June 7 slaying of Terri Renee Maness, who was found dead in her Wichita condominium a day after she was thought to have seen Grissom.

Jury selected for Bird trial

JUNCTION CITY (AP) — The murder trial for the Rev. Thomas Bird, who is accused of killing of his lover's husband, began Monday with jury selection.

In a day of hearings, 13 jurors were selected from among 25 people interviewed. A total of 96 prospective jurors were scheduled to be interviewed.

Prosecutors were expected to begin presenting evidence in the case sometime Wednesday.

Bird, 39, is charged with first-degree murder in the Nov. 4, 1983, shooting death of Martin K. Anderson in a Geary County farm field. Anderson's wife, Lorna, served as Bird's church secretary at Faith Lutheran Church in Emporia.

Lorna Anderson, who recently was divorced from another man, pleaded guilty in November to a reduced charge of second-degree murder in Martin Anderson's death. She testified that Bird was the masked gunman who shot Martin Anderson with a gun she had given him.

Her admission led to Bird being charged with Martin Anderson's murder. He is already serving life in prison for the death of his wife, Sandra, and 2 1/2 to seven years for an earlier, unsuccessful plot to kill Martin Anderson.

Paul Montague describes to veterans how narrowly enemy bullets missed him when the helicopter he piloted in Vietnam was shot down. Montague spoke at the American Legion in Junction City Monday.

Veteran recalls trials

Montague: 'I was looking into the eyeballs of Satan'

By Steve Franzen
Staff Reporter

March 29, 1968. This day marked the death of Paul Joseph Montague and the birth of a survivor.

Somewhere to the west of the city of Hue in South Vietnam, Montague's helicopter was shot out of the sky as he tried to pull troops out of a secure area.

Montague, a 1959 K-State graduate in business administration, was declared dead by the Armed Forces. A death certificate was sent to his wife, Shirley, on April 1, 1968.

Jan. 23, 1973. This day brought new hope to Shirley and the three Montague children. They were notified Montague was coming home.

"I'm just a country boy, and that man upstairs brought me back," said Montague, who now resides in Derby.

Montague discussed Monday night his five years as a prisoner of war in a guest appearance before the Vietnam Veterans of America Chapter 344 in the American Legion Hall in Junction City.

About 50 people listened intently as the veteran told the stories that affected a generation of young Americans.

Montague, a Marine captain, was on his second tour of duty when he was shot down and captured by South Vietnamese troops. In his first tour in 1963 and '64, Montague had flown resupply, medevac, troop insertions and extractions, general emergencies and night exercises.

On March 28, nine other soldiers went down with Montague while he tried to extract them. Although the copilot made it back to the United States eventually, Montague does not know what happened to the others.

"On that day, I felt the breeze of bullets next to my skin," Montague said. "I saw the flight of bullets, and that is impossible."

Montague said he lived nearly three years in solitary confinement, suffered numerous interrogations and withstood months of torture.

Montague spent days on his knees on concrete floors with his hands tied above his head and nights in shackles. He visited death row and had his circulation to his arms and feet cut off. He survived days without water or bread.

At one point during his imprisonment, Montague said he weighed less than 100 pounds. He had graduated from high school weighing 205 pounds.

While a prisoner of war, Montague nicknamed his regular interrogator the "Big Cheese" or "Farnsworth." The nicknames came from cartoon characters. He gave accounts of the many instances in which "Farnsworth" tried to break him.

After one period, when Montague had been kept on his knees for 72 hours without food, "Farnsworth" told Montague to worship him.

"When I looked up at that moment, I was looking into the

Reforms ahead

Hochhauser returns from Chilean visit

By Jan Puls
Collegian Reporter

The political attitude in Chile is optimistic, Rep. Sheila Hochhauser said Monday at a program sponsored by the Manhattan Alliance on Central America.

Hochhauser visited Chile as part of a political exchange offered through the American Council of Young Political Leaders two weeks before the historic Dec. 14 election that ended the 16 year dictatorship of Gen. Augusto Pinochet.

Patricio Aylwin, 71, of the Christian Democrat party, won the presidential election with 56 percent of the votes. He was supported by a coalition of 17 leftist parties.

"He projected a fatherly image and convinced the people that he would be able to keep that coalition together," Hochhauser said.

Most of the Chilean citizens had never experienced democracy, Hochhauser said. Because of the young age of the nation, Chile had its work cut out to educate people about democracy, let alone educate the people about a very difficult election, she said.

Hochhauser

An organization resembling the League of Women Voters in the United States was established in Chile. The group remained neutral in the December presidential election, but was active in supporting the end of Pinochet's dictatorship in the October 1988 plebiscite. A majority of 54 percent voted to remove Pinochet from power and reform the Chilean government.

"There was real excitement in that country when we were there," Hochhauser said. "It was democracy and they were just totally excited about it."

"Voter registration in Chile is compulsory. The voter turnout for the December election was 97 percent. That puts (the United States) to shame."

Hochhauser said she and the three other U.S. representatives asked a Chilean citizen how the people in the United States could decrease voter apathy.

"The citizen told us maybe we needed a Pinochet," she said.

"From the chambermaid up to the government and the people in the highest business positions, everyone

Ban on homosexuals passes Supreme Court

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The U.S. military's general ban on homosexuals survived two Supreme Court appeals Monday.

The court rejected appeals by a woman denied re-enlistment in the Army Reserve in Wisconsin because she is a lesbian and a California man released from active duty in the Navy because he is gay.

The court's refusal, without comment, to review the Pentagon ban leaves open the possibility the justices could agree in some future case to review a policy that says "homosexuality is incompatible with military service."

But groups seeking expanded gay rights said they have a better chance of getting help from Congress.

"There are other remedies for us to take care of this deeply irrational policy," said Peri Jude Radecic of the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force. "We've had a great deal of congressional interest in this. Within the next year, you'll see some good things coming from Congress."

Nan Hunter of the American Civil Liberties Union said, "The refusal to allow lesbian and gay Americans to enlist in the military constitutes what is probably the most blatant example of official discrimination by the federal government today."

The high court rejected appeals by Miriam Ben-Shalom, 41, who has been a sergeant in the Army Reserve in Milwaukee, and James M. Woodward of Spring Valley, Calif., who was ousted from active duty by the Navy.

Ben-Shalom joined the Army Reserve in 1974 but was discharged in 1976 because she is an acknowledged lesbian.

A federal judge ordered her reinstated, and she served out an enlistment that ended in August 1988.

Debaters capture 1st place

By The Collegian Staff

Members of the debate team captured first place at the prestigious University of Kansas Heart of America tournament in Lawrence this weekend.

The tournament concluded Monday.

"Short of nationals, this is the most prestigious invitational tournament in the country," said Ed Schiappa, director of debate.

The No. 1-ranked squad had four two-man teams qualify for elimination rounds, out of a field of 58 competitors. Three of the teams placed in the top 16.

K-State's squad was the only one to have four teams go to elimination rounds.

Winning first place for the squad was the two-man team of Bill Boggs, senior in sociology, and Dan Molden, junior in speech.

Boggs and Molden have worked successfully together during the season.

"We've been colleagues pretty much all year," Molden said. "I think for us, this is our fifth win together as a team. We've both won six as individuals, but one tournament was with other colleagues."

Schiappa said the win in Lawrence will be important later in the season.

"This is the toughest tournament of the year so far," he said. "A strong showing here bodes well for a strong showing at nationals."

Molden said he expects the team to improve before nationals.

"I think right now we're still growing," he said. "We're not as good now as we can be."

Steve Collins, senior in speech education and debate team member, said the team will be concentrating on in-depth research and reorganization before nationals at Southwest Missouri State in Springfield, Mo.

The topic for the team this semester includes the pros and cons of foreign investment in the United States.

Local radio in dire need of rock'n'roll

Z xzxshxiss ... ip beezhs ... Shoes! ... zzxshxissip ... (I am flipping across the radio dial in case that is not apparent — it's hard simulating static and quickly passed stations in this medium.)

Anyway ... zzxshxissip ... etc ... "Rooom if you want toooh, Rooom around th—" No, I've heard that before. Many times, I might add. (More flipping) "Rooom if you want too—" God! Same bat song, same bat time, different bat channel.

I have really been getting tired of Manhattan-area radio lately. Every station either plays country, cheesy pop, repeats songs to the point of no return or combines any of the above. What happened to no-repeat rock 'n' roll?

Manhattan's late KSKT-FM, The Kat, was the epitome of the great rock 'n' roll station. It rarely played songs over again, and it never played pop. Toward the end, the Kat started getting into that wierdo acid stuff, but all the same, the demise of 95.3 has left me on the verge of radiocide. I don't have a tape player in the old go-cart, so now if I want music, I have no resort but to pretend I like country. Because I hate pop music.

And even the country stations repeat too much.

Topeka's 100.3 FM comes the closest to rock'n'roll in this area. "If you want bubble gum," the dude says, "go to a candy store. But if you want real rock'n'roll, keep it tuned to V100.3." Great! I used to say — me don't need no stinkin' bubble gum.

Hah! Don't let 'em fool you. V100.3 will follow the bubble gum announcement with something good. Like old Foreigner, Genesis or the Police. But that's just to get you hooked. The next song will be something along the lines of "Cold-hearted Snake," or a fine selection from the Madonna archives. The station plays upon listeners' laziness to keep them tuned in. It hopes listeners will just wait until a better song comes on, rather than waste precious energy changing channels.

What makes V100.3's pop methodology worse is that the disc jockeys don't even ease into it. Just all of a sudden, pop. Then just as suddenly they're back playing good ole Eric Clapton. They could at least put some of that new Phil Collins in between.

Candy store? Rock 'n' roll? It's beyond me. The only thing I haven't heard on V100.3 is New Kids on the Block. The station seems proud that it doesn't play New Kids, but I don't know why. It might as well stick New Kids in along with everything else it airs. I don't think V100.3 has a format.

John Mussman

COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

It doesn't matter what music Manhattan-area stations play though. If you hear "Pretending," "Like a Prayer," or "Mama" in the morning, you can bet you will hear it again before that time next day. Usually before the afternoon.

"Stations, stations everywhere, and nary a one worth listening."

What Manhattan needs is a station (just one) that plays good, solid rock 'n' roll, and plays each tune not more than once a day. Kansas City has one — KCFX-FM, the Fox. Now that is a rock 'n' roll station. No wierdo-Vietnam-stoner music, no pop, and no repeats. They're serious, too — if you catch the Fox playing a tune twice in one day you can win a whole bunch of cash.

I always like having an excuse to drive to Kansas City and listen to the Fox. When I come up over that hill just past Topeka I flip the dial over to the Fox. There it is — kind of static, and the stereo light keeps blinking on and off. But, God that is great listening. Genesis, Clapton, The Birds, maybe even some old R.E.M.

In Kansas City I find myself actively listening to the radio. I can't get enough before it is time to drive back to Manhattan. Here I just try not to listen too closely as I suffer through the endless country and pop.

The point of this column, one might say, is moot. Maybe it's all just "Media pop." The Kat is dead, and the other stations are not going to change. Well ...

Not that it is confidential or anything, but the Kat is for sale. Hmmm! What if someone was to buy the Kat and start up again?

Some say the Kat was just targeting the wrong audience. Its music was for one listening group, but its advertising was for another. It seems that if one started thinking real hard, one might be able to target music and advertising to the same group of people and have a successful radio station.

Oh, please, please! Let the new 95.3 be no-repeat rock 'n' roll. It seems like that would be a logical format, considering the current lack of Manhattan rock. Then again, perhaps there really aren't enough rock 'n' roll fans in Manhattan to support a rock 'n' roll station.

I hope not. But now I am curious. What kind of music do the citizens of Manhattan want to hear? Country bars around town are experiencing an incredible attendance boom. I hear the Ranch Saloon now sports a "members only" policy. Does this mean Manhattan likes country music? Or is country merely a fad? Perhaps people like to listen to rock'n'roll most of the time, but escape to country bars for a change of pace.

You can't tell what music people like based on Aggieville bars. While country is dance music, good rock'n'roll is not. Thus, Aggieville bars play pop.

Whether you like country, pop, rock 'n' roll, acid, alternative music or whatever, write your preference on anything paper — besides dirty toilet paper, sanitary napkins, used Kleenex, or other nasty you-know-whats — and put it in my mailbox in Kedzie 118A (next to 103). No letter bombs, please.

It'll be more fun than a barrel of monkeys, I tell you! Enquiring minds want to know.

Chairman takes steps to end Senate arguing

Student Senate Chairman Chris Kern last week took the extraordinary step of calling for a special Senate meeting to help soothe tensions between the senators and the student body president.

This action was taken because Student Body President Todd Johnson and several senators were engaged in open warfare on the senate floor. A clash over Tribunal appointments brought the situation to a boil. Personal attacks and ego clashes turned the Big Eight Room into Lebanon West. Something had to be done.

Many people had their doubts about the student body president and the senate chair, the two most powerful positions in student government, actually being roommates. Some worried this would lead to a monopolization of power.

Selective admissions denies right to learn

The quest for higher learning at major universities in Kansas may be denied to some if the Board of Regents is successful with its support of a selective admissions bill currently before the Legislature.

If approved, the bill would limit admissions to only those students who have a C-average or better in the regents core curriculum, who rank in the top one-third of their class or who score a 21 or better on the American College Testing entry exam.

With selective admissions, administrators argue, universities could cut back on the number of remedial courses being offered at many of these institutions.

Ideally, universities across the state then would have an improved intellectual gene pool — a population in harmony with the academic goals of the regents.

But, realistically, what is the point?

Why not cut back on remedial courses without using the excuse of selective admissions? This would allow the colleges to weed out the less-qualified students naturally, but not before giving every student a chance.

It seems that members of the

They were wrong.

Kern did what his role required him to do, even if it meant siding against his roommate. He gave an impassioned plea to Senate Executive Committee for an end to the infighting and belligerence, and took great pains to set up the special meeting. He invited several former student government veterans to speak to Senate on how to get along with each other and still do their jobs. They got a lesson in how to debate each other and not take it personally.

Hopefully the peace will last and Senate can go about its appointed duties undisturbed by the petty bickering of the recent past. And after Kern has finished his peace-keeping mission with student government, maybe he can try his hand at world peace.

Board of Regents do not realize that high schools across Kansas vary as much as the colleges and universities.

A valedictorian or salutatorian from a small high school may not have had the opportunities to take the same upper level courses offered at larger schools. This person may also graduate with 10 other students.

A high school student in Kansas City can quiz out of Calculus I at K-State, but may have poor grades, less than a 21 on the ACT or be ranked in the middle of his class. This person may have graduated with 600 other students.

So many variables exist in creating a selective admissions policy that it seems ludicrous to continue supporting such a measure.

The university or college campus presents many opportunities to experience culture, as well as higher learning — opportunities that, for most, occur once in a lifetime. To keep these opportunities from anyone is not only unfair, but unwise.

Colleges and universities are traditionally the proving grounds for America's youth. Anyone who wants to learn deserves the chance.

Backbone lacking

Editor,
Re: Student Sen. David McIntyre's letter to the editor in Monday's Collegian.

David, thank you for attempting to clear up the "uninformed" letter submitted by Terry Wunder, in doing so you have provided insight into the methods and manners of our Student Senate.

The spirit of Wunder's letter was obvious; the practices of favoritism and rubber-stamp approval in the process of government appointments cannot and will not be tolerated by the students at this University.

Your resorting to petty name calling in an attempt to defame this position does little to credit yourself, and sends a clear message that perhaps the rumors of character assassination and clique-forming within Student Senate are true.

It takes backbone to stand up for an issue or appointment which may be controversial. Judging by your weak attempt to diffuse this issue, this backbone is lacking in your office.

Support added

Editor,
I wish to add my strong voice of support to those of Mary E. Hale and her co-writers, and Phyllis Bixler and the Faculty Women's Caucus (Collegian, Feb. 19 and 21). Their letters and comments about the hypocrisy of our institution's attitude toward teaching are well taken. We advertise K-State as a fine teaching institution, and, by and large, it is. But too many of our departments weigh accomplishments in research or success in grant acquisitions far more heavily than those in teaching. Others do not consider teaching at all. Tenure is regularly given to fine researchers, as it should be, but not to the best of our teachers who are not (yet) successful researchers. In the Feb. 12 issue of Newsweek we read that established faculty in the applied sciences and engineering are lured to institutions with

"start-up packages." These can include such non-monetary but highly sought-after bonuses as guarantees never to have to teach an undergraduate.

I would be the last to suggest that all science and engineering (or philosophy, or music, or language) faculty place such abhorrent conditions on their university job descriptions. Our faculty includes many who are both excellent researchers and superb teachers (chemistry professor Bill Fately is but one example). But I also know many who consider teaching, especially undergraduate teaching, to be demeaning to the true intellectual enterprise.

Boy, do I disagree with them. In the Department of Modern Languages, teaching is the most important category in our annual evaluation of faculty contributions. Research is No. 2. That, and not the pitiful support shown Kansas' universities by our Legislature, is why I am at K-State and not elsewhere. My research and publications in contemporary Spanish poetry and my graduate courses keep me intellectually alive and responsive to new developments in the field. But it is my Spanish I class that keeps me young and tied to the outside world in which we must all live, and therefore intellectually and ethically honest. I would not have it any other way.

Douglas K. Benson
associate professor of Spanish

Stop segregation

Editor,
This problem is probably found in every university. As a high school student, I saw the same kind of problem. It seems the problem was carried over. I am mainly referring to the African-American students at K-State.

The problem usually becomes obvious at lunch time. When everyone is eating lunch and the cafeteria is full, blacks would be sitting in one corner, while whites sit on the other side. I am seeing the same thing I learned in history — about the '60s being repeated. But this time there are no signs and the whites are not doing the segregation. The black students are doing it to themselves. This is what I call self-imposed segregation.

As a black student I am very concerned about the problem. A lot of black people fought against segregation and some even died in the process. Every time we segregate ourselves, we are being ignorant to the fact that people fought against segregation. This kind of attitude can only hurt black's progress in society.

The different views and cultures of students is what makes college life unique. College is supposed to be the melting point. It is a place where you can meet different people without having to travel. It is good to identify oneself to his or her own kind, but to limit the interaction to only one group will greatly limit one's view of society.

The only solution to this problem would be to encourage the African-American to interact with other races. After all, this is college and we do not have to struggle by ourselves or within ourselves. We should try to operate in a wider circle, in the cafeteria or in classrooms. K-State has a variety of students. There are students from all over the United States and around the world. There are international students who are a great help in academic or other aspects of life. They are very friendly people and easy to converse with. The best way to find out about current events would be by talking to one of the international students. There are also white students who are usually seen running between classes and parking lots. This kind of activity seems strange to us, because they have a slightly different culture and background than African-Americans but they are nice people and easy to work with.

African-American students do not have to go through college alone. If we do not change our ways, it is going to be one lonely road. So, for the sake of friendship, love and peace, let us extend our hand and join the other races. Then we can stop self-imposed segregation and keep progressing in our society.

Military may put spider silk to use

By The Associated Press
 BOSTON — Until recently, the Army has kept quiet about a scientist's success in engineering the gene for spider silk into a bacteria that produces a fiber stronger than a silk-worm's silk — indeed, far stronger than steel.
 Now the secret is out.
 The military hopes to use the new fabric for bulletproof vests, helmets, parachute cords and other strong, light equipment. And the folks on New York's Seventh Avenue may want to take notice — silk stockings may come back, too.
 The silk industry has long relied on the costly and time-consuming farming of silkworms, a cultural and commercial tradition in China and Japan, where the creatures have been domesticated for centuries.
 But the mass production of spider silk may someday mean a decline in the cost of commercial silk, according to Stephen Lombardi, the 28-year-old civilian molecular biologist credited with the invention.

"Right now they're still using the old way of doing it, with a lot of man hours spent babysitting silkworms," Lombardi said. "This process is very simple and cheap. Our intent was to mass produce large quantities of silk cheaply and there's no reason why the general public shouldn't have access to the technology."
 That technology refers to Lombardi's success in isolating the gene that produces silk in the Golden Orb weaver spider and engineering the gene into bacteria. The bacteria in turn produces a spider silk protein.
 Until now, spiders have never been an efficient source of silk production. Unlike silkworms, they have not been domesticated and rarely can be kept alive long enough to produce quantities of silk. But with Lombardi's process, no spiders are needed.

Police say backpack theft not big problem

By Bill Sier
 Collegian Reporter
 Backpack theft is primarily a "crime of opportunity," and thus is preventable, said Charles Beckom, K-State Police chief.
 Beckom said although such thefts are of major concern to the victims, they don't constitute a serious problem on an on-going basis for the police.
 "We do not have a large volume of such cases every day," Beckom said.

The two busiest times for backpack theft are during enrollment and just before the end of a semester.
 "At the beginning of a semester, nobody knows anybody," Beckom said. "So if someone picks up a backpack and walks off with it, it's not suspicious."
 Victims tend to make it too easy for thieves as well, he said. Students tend to leave their packs lying about in eating or study areas, in residence hall television rooms or in one of the libraries.

 "People will leave their backpacks on a table or on the floor while they go to get something to eat or to get another reference," Beckom said.
 If students have their backpacks stolen in the K-State Union, they can fill out an incident report in the Union office, said Jack Connaughton, associate director for building services.
 A copy of the incident report is provided to the campus police, but ■ See BACKPACK, Page 10

Brett, Royals have peaceful meeting

By The Associated Press

LEAWOOD — George Brett said Monday his unhappiness over his contract was cleared up in a meeting with Kansas City owner Ewing Kauffman and that he was ready to play baseball.

Brett, in the last year of a five-year contract, was told in the meeting Sunday that the Royals would not renegotiate the deal. But he said he was glad simply to have had the meeting with Kauffman.

"It's against club policy to renegotiate contracts, I can tell you that right now," Brett said with a laugh during an unusual session at his home when a reporter asked General Manager John Schuerholz about the policy.

The Royals' first baseman, who got the 2,500th hit of his career last September, acknowledged that an outburst last month in Spokane, Wash., probably ended any chance the Royals would adjust the contract.

"I thought something was going to be done until I sounded off," Brett said. "Then I really tied their hands. The Royals have always had a policy against renegotiating contracts. If they would do something for me now, then every player on the team would be in there."

Brett signed a third five-year contract, a so-called lifetime contract because it included real estate deals with co-owner Avron Fogelman, in 1986. After this year, the Royals have options on Brett for the next two seasons.

The $1 million salary in the contract now seems paltry compared to the recent $3 million free-agent signings, including the signing of reliever Mark Davis by the Royals.

"It's not the money, it's the pride," said Brett, who called reporters together to apologize for his earlier statements. "Everybody would like to make more money. Everybody knows how much I make and I know I'm not going to get any sympathy. I just wanted to be treated better."

"I've signed three five-year contracts. Every time, for the first two years it's been great and the last three it hasn't."

Brett mentioned unhappiness with his contract at the end of his annual meeting with Schuerholz in November, Schuerholz said. Brett said he understood that the Royals would call him after the holidays, but never did.

"They said we'll call you after the holidays," Brett said. "I thought that meant Christmas. I found out it was Valentine's Day."

Schuerholz apologized to Brett for not calling, but said he did not think that Brett was very serious. He also said the timing was wrong to speak with Brett because Kauffman and Fogelman, who would have to approve any new deal, were in negotiations over the club's ownership in an attempt to help Fogelman out of his financial problems.

"When you deal with these things and deal with them honestly, you put them behind you and that's what George has done, and it's helpful for him, and it's helpful for the team," Schuerholz said.

Brett missed 35 games last season with a knee injury and ended up batting .282 with 12 home runs and 80 runs batted in. It was the first time in 13 years that he was not named to the All-Star team.

"I've been in the organization 19 years, in the big leagues 16 years. I just thought I deserved to be treated, not necessarily financially better, but better," he said.

Lady Cats must prove themselves

Chris Hays

IT'S JUST MADNESS

Reality has stricken the Lady Cats.

After going through the first half of the Big Eight Conference schedule in seemingly invincible fashion, the K-State women were finally hit dead in the face with the fact that when teams are out to get you, you are going to have to hold up your guard.

K-State wasn't able to do that in the final seven games of the regular season, going 3-4 in a stretch which saw their 13-game reign at the top of the standings ended by cross-state rival Kansas in Bramlage Coliseum Saturday night.

The Lady Cats knew everybody would be shooting for them in round two of league play, after they jumped out of the gates with a 7-0 record. What they must not have realized, however, was just how much more intense the pressure was going to get when each team got its second chance.

The part that is so hard to understand was how the Lady Cats, with so much experience, could bow to the pressures of being the team to beat.

Heck, they went through the first part of the season as the team to beat, and did it quite successfully, but when it came time to turn it up a notch, the Lady Cats just didn't respond.

"A lot of people picked up their intensity when it came time to play us again, and we just didn't," Lady Cats interim coach Gaye Griffin said. "I don't know if we lacked our intensity, but we put a spark in some folks' eyes."

And, in most of the past seven games, the Lady Cats were unable to extinguish that spark.

It seemed that instead of picking up the intensity when things would go wrong for the Lady Cats, they would let frustration set in — a frustration that led to mental mistakes that wound up costing them dearly down the stretch — especially Saturday night.

Poor decisions at the end of the Lady Cats contest with KU eventually cost them the ball game.

But the loss to the Lady Jayhawks may not be a total negative. Sure, they had to settle for second place in the conference after toying with the top spot all season long, but this could be a valuable learning experience for the Lady Cats, and an extra incentive as well.

Perhaps K-State can now play the role of the spoiler at the Big Eight Postseason Tournament which begins Saturday afternoon at Salina's Bicentennial Center. The Lady Cats' first-round draw is Nebraska, and the contest will get underway at 6 p.m.

The first sign that the Lady Cats would be able to bounce back and refocus was Monday afternoon's practice. Griffin said she was pleased with the way things went in the squad's brief, one-hour workout.

"I really didn't know what to expect. I know (the loss to KU) is still something we're trying to get settled in our stomachs," she said. "But they seemed like they were really ready to come in and work."

"Now we have to go prove ourselves. We're not the Big Eight champions. I still think we have the best athletes in the conference, but the record doesn't show that."

The Lady Cats have the leadership that will allow them to take the Big Eight tourney title this weekend, but in recent games, that leadership has been suspect.

Diana Miller, who was named the Big Eight's co-player of the year with Oklahoma State's Liz Brown Monday, has led the team consistently, but from there, it has been hard to find a consistent pattern of leadership in the Lady Cats last seven games.

A week off will do nothing but help the Lady Cats mental preparation, and, just maybe, they will be able to regroup enough to revert back to their January dominance — a month that saw the K-State women play the way they had been expected to play all season long.

Mike Verso/Phi

Lady Cats coach Gaye Griffin will have to pull her troops together after they faltered in the final portion of the Big Eight Conference schedule. Griffin and the K-State women now have to prove themselves.

'Hawks regain top spot

By The Associated Press

Another week, and another trek across the Missouri-Kansas border for the No. 1 ranking in The Associated Press poll.

The Jayhawks, who have beaten everybody on their schedule but Missouri, grabbed the top spot back from their Big Eight Conference rivals Monday a few hours after Missouri's 107-90 loss at Oklahoma. The Sooners moved up from 11th to a tie for fifth, giving the Big Eight three teams in the top five, with Missouri settling in at No. 3 behind UNLV.

For eight weeks, it's been either Kansas or Missouri at No. 1, but Jayhawks coach Roy Williams, facing a date Tuesday at Oklahoma, refuses to worry about a No. 1 jinx.

"Everybody says No. 1 is a jinx, but not nearly as much as playing at Oklahoma," Williams said. "If we were getting ready to play Elizabeth City State, I don't think people would be talking about it. No. 1 is a jinx. I happen to think playing in Norman is much tougher than the jinx of being ranked No. 1 in the country."

The Jayhawks (27-2) moved into the No. 1 spot for the third time this season with 41 first-place votes and 1,570 points from the nationwide panel of sportswriters and broadcasters.

Kansas, which had both its previous stays at the top ended by Missouri, will be on the same court where the Tigers (25-3) were knocked from the No. 1 spot after becoming Oklahoma's 44th straight victim at home.

Kansas and Missouri have kept the top ranking a Big Eight matter for the past eight weeks after Syracuse of the Big East held it for the first six weeks of the regular season.

UNLV (24-4) moved from fourth to second with 14 first-place votes and 1,492 points, 44 more than Missouri, which held the top spot for three weeks in two stints.

Connecticut, now 24-4, moved from sixth to fourth.

Coaches name player for starting new team

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Doug Smith of Missouri and Kevin Pritchard of Kansas were most frequently mentioned Monday when Big Eight basketball coaches were asked to play a name game.

Which Big Eight player, they were asked, would you pick to start a team if you could have anyone in the conference who is not on your own squad?

"Doug Smith of Missouri because of his tremendous ability," Iowa State Coach Johnny Orr said of the Tigers' dominating junior. "He can shoot. He can run the floor. He can rebound, and he's 6-foot-10. And I think he's going to be a great pro."

K-State's Lon Kruger, a former guard, opted for Pritchard, the Jayhawks' 6-foot-3 senior guard.

"He does for their club what (Steve) Henson does for ours," Kruger said. "They're comparable in toughness, competitiveness and leadership ability. I'd always lean toward leadership ability, although a big guy inside can certainly dictate a lot of things as well."

Oklahoma State Coach Leonard Hamilton opted for Smith "because of his versatility."

"He has the ability to run the floor and give you an easy bucket, but he also has a turnaround jump shot 8-10 feet from the basket. Defensively, he's athletic enough where he can guard you from the perimeter. He's also a very good passer. He can hurt you a lot of ways."

"Without a doubt, I'd take Pritchard," said Nebraska Coach Danny Nee. "A good point guard can raise the level of the team. Henson does that at Kansas State. Pritchard does it at Kansas. Coaches who have point guards take them for granted sometimes."

Kansas Coach Roy Williams, barred from taking Pritchard off his own team, also opted for Smith.

"To me, the choice came down to him or (Missouri guard Anthony) Peeler," Williams said. "But I like Doug's size. If he gets the ball close to the basket, he's going to score or you're going to foul him most of the time. When you're building a team, that size is awfully important. He has great size, and also the ability to go out on the floor, handle and pass the ball. He's a phenomenal player."

Colorado's Tom Miller split his ballot between Henson and Pritchard.

"Kevin Pritchard has had a sensational season, done everything his team needed him to do," Miller said. "But I couldn't choose Kevin without thinking about Steve Henson. For four years I've watched him, all the things he does. Those would be the two guys I'd start with."

SPORTS BRIEFLY

Big 8 honors Miller

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — K-State's junior forward Diana Miller was named the Co-Big Eight Player of the Year Monday in a balloting of the conference coaches.

Miller, who led the Big Eight in scoring in conference games only at 17.8 points per game, shared Player of the Year honors with Oklahoma State's junior guard Liz Brown, who averages 12.9 points per outing.

In addition to Miller and Brown, the All-Big Eight first team included Iowa State's Shelly Coyle, Oklahoma's Tammy Rogers and Marcia Brooks of Missouri.

K-State's junior guard Nadira Hazim, who is fourth in the Big Eight in scoring at 15.1 points per game, was named to the second-team for the second year in a row.

Hazim was joined on the second-team by Missouri's Sharon Bax and Lisa Sandbothe, along with Lisa Braddy of Kansas and Debbie Johnson of Colorado.

Six Big Eight players received honorable-mention, including Shannon Bloxom (Kansas), Vanessa Ward (Iowa State), Ann Halsne (Nebraska), Annan Wilson (Colorado), Benita Martin (Colorado) and Althea Cox (Oklahoma State).

Missouri's Joann Rutherford, who won her fifth Big Eight title was named Coach of the Year.

Women sweep soccer tourney

The K-State women's soccer team breezed through the UNL Husker Indoor Classic this past weekend, defeating the host team in the finals Sunday, 3-0. In other tourney action K-State defeated Nebraska-Lincoln, 4-1, Nebraska-Omaha, 5-0, Iowa State, 6-0, and Colorado State, 3-1. The squad's next action will be March 31, at Frank Anneberg Park.

Patriots fire Berry

FOXBORO, Mass. — Raymond Berry was fired Monday as coach of the New England Patriots in a power struggle with General Manager Pat Sullivan. Pittsburgh defensive coordinator Rod Rust, a former Patriots' assistant, reportedly was the top candidate to succeed Berry.

Christopher T. Assaf/Phi

Kansas' Kevin Pritchard and K-State's Steve Henson were among some of the players Big Eight coaches would pick to start a new team.

Play leads to product

Man develops ear hygiene device from yarn, stick

By Chris McEntee
Collegian Reporter

"Jerry was playing with a Popsicle stick and wrapping yarn around it and then stuck it in his ear. Then he realized that there was a need for a new ear hygiene product," said Gina Alkire, of her father's invention of a new ear hygiene product.

The product, called Vee-Tops E-Z Ear, is the focus of a semester-long research study being conducted by a team of students in the Business Strategy class, said Fred Rice, director of the Small Business Development Center.

The small, toothbrush-like instrument with a cone-shaped tip, is owned by Jerry and Gina Alkire under the company name of Alkire Products. The company is located in Salina.

Rice said Jerry Alkire, who designed the original product, came to the Small Business Development Center after his attempts at packaging and selling the product were unsuccessful. The Center suggested that the packaging was not very modern or appealing and convinced Alkire to reconstruct the product.

"We are going to help him redesign the packaging and there will be different colored handles," Rice said. "We are looking at clear tinted plastics like tooth brush handles, rather than a solid color. There are lots of options we are considering right now, but the team is doing research on different ideas."

The project team is doing the research in exchange for the educational experience gained in helping the Alkires launch the product, Rice said.

"If all goes well, we will have a new product and it will be successful," he said.

The Alkires were hoping to get the product into discount store chains, including Wal-Mart and K mart, but Vee-Tops didn't get introduced into the market, Rice said. It is a very personal product, and Q-Tips brand cotton swabs are the closest competitors on the market, he said.

Mark Leffingwell/Staff
Fred Rice, director of the Small Business Development Center, helped in the redesign of the Vee-Tops E-Z Ear.

"First of all, you must create a want or need in the mind of the buyer, and the only way to do that is to educate them they have a need they don't realize," Rice said.

The test market consists of the 52 students in the Business Strategy class. The students tried the product at home and then completed a questionnaire about what they thought of it and how well it worked, he said.

"The problem with the product is when you look at the thing, there is no indication as to what it is, so we are trying to redesign it with an ear on the handle," Rice said.

The class is considering the shape, size, color and new names. Twenty-five suggested names are being considered, but surveys have indicated that the name will stay the same, Gina Alkire said. The class is also considering a new package design with more graphics.

"We need to determine whether it will sell as singles, six-packs or by the dozen," Rice said.

One of the package options has two replacement tips and two different colored handles, he said.

Part of the research being done is toward the aftermarket usages, Rice said.

"I submit that they would make a nice little paint brush or be good to polish shoes with after they are worn out," he said.

The Alkires recently received the new prototype and are waiting for K-State's survey results to determine the demand and size, Gina Alkire said. Final molds will be made after March, and the product

Bill to give scholarships to future state teachers

By The Collegian Staff

Students studying to be math, foreign language or science teachers could receive scholarships to help pay their college expenses if a new state bill is approved.

If approved, Gov. Mike Hayden's plan would give students a stipend of up to $5,000 a year. The recipients would have to be Kansas residents and in the top 10 percent of their high school graduating classes.

"The money to fund the scholarship would come from the general tax payer," said Sen. Gus Bogina, R-Shawnee, chairperson of the Senate Ways and Means Committee.

The committee introduced the bill.

Students who receive the scholarship would be required to teach in Kansas after graduation until the scholarship was paid off, Bogina said. For example, a student receiving the scholarship for four years would be required to teach for four years in Kansas.

This scholarship should attract more students who are interested in teaching math, science and foreign language; therefore, getting more teachers in Kansas, Bogina said. The scholarship mainly affects the students, and not the University, he said.

"The student would receive the scholarship on a one-year basis and then could reapply for the following year," Bogina said.

This is not the first scholarship of its type in the state of Kansas.

"There is the same type of scholarship available for medical and nursing students," Bogina said. "They received the scholarship and were then required to work in Kansas until it was paid back."

This scholarship was effective in attracting more doctors and nurses in Kansas, Bogina said.

The scholarship provides two benefits to its recipients.

"It supports talented students in their pursuit to teach," said Michael Holen, associate dean of the college of education. "It also publicizes teaching to attract more students to teaching — not just to science, math and foreign language, but in all areas of teaching."

The College of Education has other types of scholarships available, however, they carry no requirement to teach in Kansas after graduation.

Last year the college awarded $50,000 in scholarships to undergraduates, Holen said.

Professor mixes murder, love to make 'A Light to the Nations'

By Anne Krauss
Collegian Reporter

Murder. American history. Love. K-State professor and playwright Norman Fedder's new release has it all.

The two-act play, "A Light to the Nations," is a drama based on the 1966 murder of Rabbi Morris Adler.

The play is the latest of more than 30 works Fedder, professor of speech, has written. It was read recently at the National Association for Drama Therapy convention in Pittsburgh, Pa.

Adler was a famous labor and civil rights advocate who was killed by a University of Michigan student.

The murder took place in a Detroit synagogue during a sermon Adler was giving in observance of President Abraham Lincoln's birthday.

Richard Wisnietzky, a former student of Adler's, interrupted the sermon to denounce the rabbi for failing to be a "light to the nations." Before a terrified congregation, Wisnietzky shot Adler and himself.

Fedder's play begins with Adler's fatal sermon and uses flashbacks to explain the events leading up to his death.

"I'm fascinated by why this kid broke down," Fedder said. "I always question why he did that."

Fedder said that pressure to conform to society's general definition of success played a great role in Wisnietzky's breakdown.

"The problem with the kid was the only way he could feel self-esteem was through what other people thought of him," Fedder said. "The American dream became a nightmare and drove him wacky."

Fedder described Wisnietzky as an extremely bright young man who felt rejected romantically by a favorite teacher, deserted by his dead grandfather and alienated from his parents.

He developed fanatical Jewish beliefs and a desire to become a prophet. These beliefs were challenged by Adler, his long-time mentor.

Wisnietzky finally decided to commit an appallingly evil act to show how bad the world had become.

Fedder said he has wanted to write about this incident for about 20 years. He hasn't until now because it has been so close to him.

"When I first read about it, I thought it was fascinating," Fedder said. "I tend to write about American history, American values and Jewish history and values."

Fedder said he intended the play to delve into these issues as well as the teacher-student relationship.

"It explored the feelings a teacher has when trying to help a student who's become unreachable."

Rapper Latifah offers funky mix

'All Hail The Queen' debuts fierce rap, inspired backing

Mark Butler

Latifah pulls together inspired musical backing and some fierce rapping to create a funky, fresh mix. Latifah is assisted in her efforts by her producer, DJ Mark the 45 King and her posse, the Flavor Unit.

The album is also enhanced by big-name talent and guest production. Rap stalwarts De La Soul pop up as do Stetsasonic's Daddy-O and British newcomer Monie Love. Dance music kingpin Louis Vega and innovative mixmaster Prince Paul turn up to produce a track each.

To Latifah's credit, she transcends the contributions of her guests. Her insistent rap style and surprisingly strong singing are complimented by her DJ's sympathetic arrangements. Latifah proves her capabilities on a number of musical styles. Straight-forward hip-hop, dub-style reggae and house music are all tackled with talent.

"All Hail The Queen" kicks off solidly with a nod to Sly and the Family Stone. Sly's classic "Dance to the Music" is appropriated and altered by Latifah to become "Dance For Me." The track pumps forward on a solid groove in a tough hip-hop style. Latifah uses the song as an introduction to her album, to her ideas and to herself.

The following track on the album finds De La Soul setting up shop temporarily. Rappers Trugoy and Posdnous reunite with their producer Prince Paul to recreate their psychedelic style on "Mama Gave Birth to the Soul Children." "Mama" is a frenzied mix of acid rock and "Babes in Toyland" and it definitely moves.

The De La Soul crew is cast as Latifah's children who mysteriously speak in chipmunk voices on occasion. The raps are fluid and funny. Prince Paul's mix underscores the humor of "Mama" with hiccups and other noises tied to the beat.

The lyrics of "Mama" concern the new rap clique consisting of Latifah, De La Soul, Monie Love and the Jungle Brothers. This group first joined forces on a seminal remake on De La's "Buddy" last year. This coalition constitutes a positive, creative force in modern music.

Monie Love makes a strong guest appearance on the feminist anthem, "Ladies First." Love's speedy delivery overshadows Latifah's style at first although they make a strong team. Although Love has made a minimal impact in the States so far, her brief appearance suggests greater things in store for the young Briton. The only weakness of "Ladies First" is that the album track lacks the strong vocal chorus of the remade single version.

Latifah ventures into house music with "Come Into My House." "House" fuses a strong beat with a clean bass line to form a driving base. Upon this base rests Latifah's convincing exhortations to dance.

A number of the tracks on the album use a reggae sensibility in their construction. Daddy-O from Stetsasonic provides a guest rap on "The Pros," a song with a reggae beat and dark overtones. "Princess of the Posse" is a lighter feeling tropical-inflected track which serves as some self-promotion for the Queen.

The cassette version of "All Hail The Queen" neatly adds three inspired remixes of album tracks. Although the mixes are somewhat extraneous, they are by no means redundant.

pects for long-term economic productions.

"I hope Ortega will be a lasting figure in Nicaragua," he said.

Most Sandinistas believed they were going to win the elections, according to the polls, Gutierrez said. He said he was surprised and disappointed at the outcome.

"I'm not happy with the results," he said. "I realize the election process was fair, but the U.S. government was an unfair supporter of Chamorro."

Exdell said the election results were heavily influenced by Bush.

"President Bush vowed to lift the embargo if Chamorro won the elections," Exdell said. "That was his way of influencing the elections."

"Reagan had vowed to make Nicaragua cry uncle," he said. "They had 10 years of economic hardship and war before they sacrificed the opportunity to affirm themselves as an independent country."

Exdell said Nicaragua should not expect the United States to bring the country out of its economic depression.

"All of Central America is in economic poverty — devastating poverty is the 1980s," he said. "The United States just doesn't have a great history of giving aid to countries in Central America. Nicaragua won't get enough for its needs."

Both Exdell and Gutierrez said the Nicaraguan economy will benefit soon if the United States lifts the trade embargo.

"In the short run, the lifting of the embargo will help the economy and relieve the hardships endured by the Nicaraguans," Exdell said.

"The United State will normalize the situation with the new government in an economical way," Gutierrez said.

Exdell said he expects to see an enormous increase of U.S. influence in Central America as a result of the election.

However, Gutierrez said the United States should learn from the democratic process of voting in Nicaragua.

"A lesson to be learned by the U.S. government is that there will be no more military intervention accepted from them," he said. "They need to respect the popular will of the people."

Gutierrez said he was grateful for the apparent end to the strife in Nicaragua.

"I don't want any more war — so many were killed," he said. "I believe in political competition, not military."

When he takes office March 14, Aylwin will be faced with the problem of amnesty for those who violated human rights during Pinochet's dictatorship, Hochhauser said. He will also have to maintain the balance of the 17-party coalition.

The main challenge facing Aylwin is the economy, she said. Chile has a very strong economy, but if Aylwin's government has to raise taxes to fund desperately needed social programs, the economy could be in danger, Hochhauser said.

"If the economy in Chile fails, the democracy will also fail," she said.

John Exdell, associate professor of philosophy, said the progress in Chile can't be compared with the recent election in Nicaragua.

"There is a major difference," Exdell said. "The election in Chile is an outcome of a struggle to get rid of a brutal dictatorship. This was not the case in Nicaragua."

"Nicaragua has never been that repressive," he said. "In principle it has always been committed to democracy."

Montague said his war was played on the mental level. He said his interrogators often asked him to admit to things he didn't do or to tell them of his escape plans.

"I lied through my teeth as much as I could," Montague said.

On Montague's second Christmas as a POW, he was reunited with his helicopter co-pilot and an Air Force officer. They were allowed to smoke a cigarette. The Air Force officer asked if he could light Montague's cigarette, and the wish was granted. In the motion of lighting the cigarette, their hands met to keep the match lit. Montague said it was a touch that he will never forget.

Gregg Kasson, Manhattan firefighter, said the Manhattan Fire Department has a mutual assistance agreement with surrounding rural fire departments to supply equipment when it is needed.

When the Armed Forces realized Montague was possibly still alive because the copilot had survived, it promoted him to major.

The general anti-war feeling in the United States was something new.

Montague said he does not harbor a total hatred for his captors. He said they are like all other peoples. He told of the time a guard showed him a crucifix and the instance when another guard saved his life from a neuro-toxic snake.

The incident report allows for descriptions of identifying markings on the pack or the contents in the pack, Connaughton said. The backpacks should be marked with something unique, such as a student ID number as well as with the student's name.

"This is not just a bookstore problem," Connaughton said. "We have had backpacks stolen throughout the building."

"We have begun keeping information on what books are reported stolen," said Monica Seiter, assistant bookstore manager. "Then we check books that are sold back against this list."

Those people attempting to sell stolen books will not be paid until it is determined how they came to possess the book. The matter is further referred to the campus police.

Since the Union Bookstore installed lockers by the entrance and started providing student check-in areas at the beginning and end of the semester, there has been a reduction in the number of reported backpack thefts.

"Backpack and book thefts still account for approximately one-third of our total reported larcenies," Beckom said. "But I estimate that at least that many go unreported."

Soviet leader takes on foes

Gorbachev proposal to further increase presidential power

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW — A determined and at times angry Mikhail Gorbachev on Tuesday rammed through the Soviet legislature a proposal for a more powerful presidency that progressive lawmakers warned could become a dictatorship.

Gorbachev, his voice rising as his temper frayed, accused his critics of engaging in cheap demagoguery. The Soviet leader recognized lawmakers and revoked their right to speak apparently at whim during the often-stormy debate.

He hailed the Supreme Soviet's final and overwhelming approval of his proposal as a great political event. But lawmaker Leonid Sukhov, a Ukrainian taxi driver, warned: "The way the voting went today is the same way presidential power will be."

After only two days of discussion, spread over two weeks, the Supreme Soviet voted 347-24 with 43 abstentions to approve creation in principle of a national presidency with a five-year term, to replace the government post now held by Gorbachev, whose formal title is Supreme Soviet chairman.

The bill was remanded to committees to consider the dozens of amendments offered by deputies during debate.

Subject to final approval by the legislature's parent body, the Congress of People's Deputies, the president will be granted powers to veto laws, unilaterally declare states of emergency, and name the prime minister, according to a copy of the bill shown to Western reporters.

Gorbachev, who chaired the legislature's proceedings, emphasized he has not yet been elected president and said he has even considered refusing the office, but few expect the 58-year-old Communist Party chief not to be chosen.

The presidency would give Gorbachev a new and stable power base at a time when his 20 million-member party's popularity and prestige are waning, and it pursues the declared aim of following East Europe's Communist parties in renouncing its legally guaranteed right to govern and compete in a multiparty system.

Progressive lawmakers strongly objected to concentrating so much power in one leader's hands.

Review board bill dies in committee

By Robert Short
Special Projects Editor

A bill designed to create a board to review competition among private businesses and universities has died in committee because of lack of support among legislators.

A prominent supporter of the bill, Sen. Ben Vidricksen, R-Salina, said lobbying efforts by public universities in Kansas helped defeat the bill.

"We did not have enough legislators to go against the big universities — K-State and the University of Kansas," said Vidricksen, who is a member of the Senate Economic Development Committee. "Legislators felt intimidated. The universities had out their big guns, their top people."

The bill would have established a private enterprise review board to act as a forum for private businesses to lodge complaints of competition from universities offering similar services and products. The review board would have then made recommendations to the governor and Legislature regarding the complaint.

Members of the committee heard arguments on the bill earlier this month. During committee debate, the bill was amended to not include vocational and technical schools or municipalities.

According to the bill, "A state agency shall not engage in the manufacturing, processing, sale, offering for sale, ... distribution or advertising of goods or services to the public which are also offered by private enterprise unless specifically authorized by the law."

The bill was introduced into the Joint Committee on Economic Development during the last intersession in response to complaints by Lawrence and Manhattan computer store owners who said university bookstores were stealing their markets.

Sue Peterson, assistant to President Jon Wefald for governmental relations, said she told members of the economic development committee during the hearings that the bill threatened to jeopardize many student-related services.

She said some products, such as meat and dairy products sold in Call Hall, are the result of educational activities.

"Those are educational programs we feel are important," Peterson said. Many of the University services also create employment opportunities for students, she said.

In a committee meeting Feb. 21, Vidricksen moved to transfer the bill to the Senate floor for debate, but the motion died for lack of a second, said Sen. Alicia Salisbury, R-Topeka.

"If the Senate does not act on the bill by March 7, for all practical purposes, it is dead," said Salisbury, who is also a member of the Economic Development Committee.

Mahadevan to reach interview milestone with appearance on Italian talk show

By The Collegian Staff

The fame of Rajan Mahadevan, graduate student in psychology, is about to hit Europe.

Mahadevan is known as the "Pi Guy." He held the world record from 1981 to 1987 for reciting digits of pi from memory.

Mahadevan was recently invited to Italy to appear on the talk show "Alle Ricerca" on March 17. Previous celebrities on the show include Prince Charles of Wales, Queen Noor of Jordan, Burt Lancaster, Robert Redford and Sting.

The appearance on the talk show will mark Mahadevan's 100th media interview since June 1989. He said he is more excited about the milestone than the actual interview.

Articles about Mahadevan and his memory have been published in Reader's Digest, People, Life, and the Washington Post.

Mahadevan considers his best article to be one in the January 1990 issue of Reader's Digest.

"They are the only ones who had everything 100 percent accurate," Mahadevan said. "It took the reporter six months to finish interviewing me."

He has appeared on Larry King Live, and was recently asked to appear on Late Night with David Letterman. Mahadevan said he declined to appear on that show, partly because of Letterman's reputation for poking fun at people, and partly because of time constraints placed on him by his research.

"I am currently working on two major research projects. One involves the role of subcortical structures in learning and memory," Mahadevan said.

Mahadevan said he is working on this research project with Steve Kiefer, associate professor of psychology and Mahadevan's graduate adviser.

The other research project is funded by a $157,000 grant from the National Institute of Health. The study, which has been going on for two years, is to find out how Mahadevan's memory functions.

Mahadevan's face will also be appearing on a stamp in India. The Indian government has made a

University to install cameras next week

By Shannan Seely
Collegian Reporter

Eight video cameras are scheduled to be installed next week in campus parking lots to deter property damages, said K-State Police Lt. Robert Mellgren.

Cameras will be installed in the West Stadium lot, K-State Union lot, the parking area behind Seaton Hall, and the lot north of Haymaker and Moore residence halls. These sites were chosen for the cameras because of the high number of complaints recorded in these areas, Mellgren said.

"The cameras are a result of the concern from the students, especially in the residence halls, of personal safety and property damage in these parking lots," Mellgren said.

The cameras will be connected to a panel of nine-inch monitors located in the campus dispatcher's office, he said. The dispatcher will monitor the screens 24 hours a day.

If the dispatcher becomes aware of suspicious activity, each camera can be switched to a large-screen monitor for closer viewing, Mellgren said. The camera can then be switched from automatic scanning to a hand controller.

He said the cameras have zoom capabilities for close-up viewing. Video tapes of criminal activities are admissible in court.

"This enables us to get especially close and also record it," Mellgren said. "Anything we obtain on tape is fair game in a court of law."

The security system can be expanded to include 64 cameras, Mellgren said. The success of the eight-camera system will be a factor in deciding to expand further.

He said police officials began discussing the project at least five years ago, but money was not available until this year. The funds for the cameras represent unused monies from the campus parking lot expansion and improvement bond obtained in 1989.

The bond is to be repaid with parking and user fees.

Mellgren said the primary goal in installing video cameras was to protect students from personal injury and from damage to their property.

"There was no intention of invading a person's privacy," he said. "Our primary purpose is to protect parking lots belonging to the University and the people's safety walking in those parking lots."

Rollins Protective Services of Overland Park has been contracted to install the security system for $90,000.

University Police Chief Charles Beckom said an additional $25,000 will be paid to University facilities to complete the wiring for the system.

Mellgren said the cameras will be mounted on rooftops of buildings near the parking lots. They are designed to move side-to-side, scanning the parking lots.

City takes up inspection plan

Commissioners consider proposed health and safety rental requirements

By Steve Franzen
Staff Reporter

Manhattan City Commissioners decided Tuesday further revisions were needed for a final draft of a proposal to ensure that rental housing in the city meets minimum health and safety standards.

Commissioners discussed the proposal after a special commission meeting, and decided to continue work on a revised draft March 27.

"We are close," Commissioner Rich Seidler said. "I think we need to go back to the table and shape it a bit more."

The Commission heard testimony for and against the proposal, which, for the most part, sided landlords against students who are in support of the inspection.

Ruth Schrum, president of the Manhattan landlord's organization, presented a petition calling for the end of the rental program and the dissolution of the citizen's advisory committee. The petition carried 115 signatures.

Wade Whitmer, director of the Consumer Relations Board at K-State, countered with a petition of 377 names supporting the program.

Student Body President Todd Johnson spoke about a resolution by Student Senate in favor of the program.

"Whereas many of us may not vote, we are concerned," Johnson said.

"Somewhere out there, there are unsafe units," said Richard Hayter, mayor pro tem. "Something is awry ... a problem does exist."

One landlord argued that the point is not safety but the way safety is achieved. Don Brown, who owns about 300 rental units in the area with his brother, said he is for safety standards, but that the BOCA codes are not flexible enough. BOCA stands for Building Officials and Code Administrators national existing structure codes.

"BOCA is going to put me out of business," Brown said. "BOCA is going to bankrupt us."

Chuck Williams, city engineer, gave a synopsis of the proposed draft. Williams estimated the program would cost $135,000 a year for the first three years to operate. He also said an extra $40,000 would be necessary to buy the equipment and vehicles needed. The program calls for hiring three new inspectors and a secretary. The city presently employs one inspector.

Attached to the draft presented to the commission was a list of opinions concerning the draft. Areas of concern included needless inspections, an alternative method of supporting the program, inspection cycles, the appeal board, tenant responsibilities and a sunset clause to review the program.

The rental inspection program has been an issue in city government twice before. The first time the program was presented in 1984, it failed. In 1986, the city established a program of inspection only by complaint and created educational materials for the tenants.

"Frankly, we did not get much feedback from the brochures," said Jim Pearson, assistant city manager.

The inspection program began as one of Mayor Kent Glasscock's objectives in April. The City Commission endorsed the idea and created the citizen's advisory committee consisting of city staff, landlords and representatives of the tenant population in Manhattan to draft the program.

The committee first met in July, and conducted several work sessions to create a final draft.

Ortega demands disarming

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — President Daniel Ortega demanded the immediate disbanding of U.S.-backed Contra rebels and set tough conditions Tuesday for a peaceful transfer of power to the coalition that won the elections.

"A change of government does not mean the end of the revolution," he told thousands of cheering supporters after a meeting of Sandinista party leaders.

Ortega said the party would relinquish power because of the election loss Sunday, but would defend the gains of the revolution.

"The Sandinista National Liberation Front demands the immediate demobilization and disarming of the Contras so there can be a peaceful transition," he read from a statement by the party leadership.

It said the Sandinistas would defend the integrity and professionalism of the army and the police forces.

President-elect Violeta Barrios de Chamorro and her United National Opposition alliance have promised to eliminate the military draft and reduce the size of the armed forces.

Landslide leaves 16 dead

LIMA, Peru (AP) — A wall of mud, water and debris swept through part of a jungle town before dawn Tuesday, leaving at least 16 people dead and 50 missing, authorities said.

Army Gen. Jorge Ferreyros, head of the Civil Defense Institute, said a natural dam on the Cachiayacu River broke and a torrent devastated a portion of San Miguel, a town 425 miles north of Lima.

Civil defense officials in Tarapoto, the provincial capital 400 miles northeast of Lima, said a number of residents managed to swim to safety and 300 were left homeless. Rescue personnel evacuated 15 people to Tarapoto where they were hospitalized with injuries.

San Miguel has about 4,000 residents, many of them farmers who raise corn and bananas in the highland jungle.

Ferreyros said recent rains caused landslides that formed the natural dam.

He blamed the landslides on farmers who expand their cropland by cutting down trees and jungle vegetation on the steep hillsides above the river.

Exxon indicted on five counts

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Justice Department announced a five-count indictment against Exxon Corp. and its shipping subsidiary Tuesday night in the Exxon Valdez oil spill that fouled Alaska's coast last year.

Thornburgh and deputies said if Exxon is convicted on all counts, criminal fines could total as much as $1.6 million.

However, the government could also seek as much as $700 million more under federal laws that allow recovery of twice the amount of the proven loss caused by the spill, U.S. Attorney Mark Davis of Alaska told a Justice Department news conference.

Thornburgh said the indictment was presented to the grand jury after a proposed plea deal fell through. However, he did not rule out the possibility of a deal in the future.

Assistant Attorney General Dick Stewart said the federal indictment, brought by a grand jury in Anchorage, accused Exxon Corp. and its shipping subsidiary of two felonies and three misdemeanors.

Prisoners can be drugged

WASHINGTON — Prison officials can force inmates to take powerful anti-psychotic drugs without a judge's consent, the Supreme Court ruled Tuesday.

Voting 6-3 in a case from Washington state, the justices said prisoners' rights are safeguarded as long as staff psychiatrists say the drugs will help, and not merely pacify, them.

"An inmate's interests are adequately protected and perhaps better served by allowing the decision to medicate to be made by medical professionals rather than a judge," Justice Anthony M. Kennedy wrote for the court.

Kennedy said the state may treat a prison inmate who has serious mental illness with anti-psychotic drugs against his will if the inmate is dangerous to himself or others and the treatment is in the inmate's medical interest.

But the dissenters said the ruling means prison officials seeking to maintain order may force inmates to take dangerous, even life-threatening, drugs with little regard for the prisoners' well-being.

Grissom's girlfriend testifies

OLATHE (AP) — A former girlfriend of Richard Grissom Jr., who is charged with killing three Johnson County women, testified Tuesday that she saw him driving a car similar to one being used by one of the missing women.

Kathy Arenal, a University of Kansas student, testified in Johnson County District Court that Grissom, a former K-State student, was driving a maroon Chevrolet Corsica June 19 when he stopped at her house in Lawrence.

Johnson County District Attorney Paul Morrison opened the week-long hearing Monday by presenting testimony linking Grissom to the June 18 disappearance of Joan Butler, 24, of Overland Park, who had rented the maroon Corsica.

Grissom, 29, is charged with first-degree murder in the deaths of Miss Butler and two women who shared an apartment in Lenexa, Christine Rusch and Theresa Brown, both 22, who disappeared June 26. No bodies have been found.

The hearing to determine whether there is enough evidence to prosecute Grissom for the women's deaths is expected to last all week.

Professor accomplishes dream

Night school teacher inspired archaeologist to achieve goal

By Samantha Farr
Collegian Reporter

Lacking the money for a college education in 1949, Patricia O'Brien dismissed her dreams of studying anthropology. She says she thought she would just read about the world's aspiring archaeologists and never become one herself.

But O'Brien took the advice of her Illinois Bell Telephone co-workers and decided to attend night school at Wilbur Wright Junior College in Chicago. This decision to pursue her dream eventually led her to K-State.

O'Brien, professor of anthropology, received an Associate of Arts degree in 1960 and then studied at the University of Illinois, where she received a bachelor's degree in anthropology in 1962. After several years of graduate work, O'Brien came to K-State in 1967.

"Everyone needs a good teacher to push them on," O'Brien said. "Honestly, I probably wouldn't have been an archaeologist without my brilliant night school teacher, who made me realize that I could do it."

O'Brien said she believes firmly in the Hutchins system, which is a one-year course of broad subjects. She said the system began at the University of Chicago as a basic concepts course designed to educate students about several subjects such as architecture, art history, literature and music appreciation.

"Our basic responsibility (as teachers) is to increase the knowledge of the world in the greatest sense and to pass that knowledge on," O'Brien said. "The young people that we educate are the future. That's why it is so important that they are educated in all areas."

O'Brien said she usually teaches three classes in the fall and two in the spring. This semester she is teaching Introduction to Archaeology and Introduction to the Old World.

Although there are several anthropology courses offered at K-State, there is not a master's program.

"Over the years, on and off, there was a master's program wanted, but we don't yet have one," O'Brien said.

O'Brien serves as a member of the Master's Committee of the anthropology department at the University of Kansas.

"We read what the students write and help them focus on their topic," she said.

In addition to the master's committee at KU, O'Brien is chairwoman of the Future of the Social Sciences in the 21st Century Committee at K-State. She was asked to be involved in the Honors Committee and is a member of the Energy Conservation Committee in the College of Arts and Sciences.

O'Brien said she will become the new editor of the Plains Anthropologist, the journal of the Plains Anthropological Society, in fall 1990.

"The publication is major print journal that covers anthropology from Canada to Texas," she said.

In 1984, O'Brien's book on Kansas archaeology published. She said that the book went through three drafts while she was writing it.

"At first, I was trying to please everybody," O'Brien said. "Then, I decided I was writing for the average adult Kansan with a high school education."

O'Brien said the book basically outlines the pre-history and early archaeology of Kansas. The book follows classic chronological periods of Indians on the Plains and in Kansas.

"My specialty is archaeology in the mid-West and Great Plains, she said. "I have been involved with studying the people, specifically the Pawnee Indians and their religion."

In summer 1982, O'Brien worked with an assistant professor from KU in measuring ancient Mayan ruins in Mexico.

She said she is involved in researching military medicine on the frontier.

"I am collecting old medical books," she said. "The most fundamental reason for doing archaeology is to study human behavior in hopes of understanding it."

"We can go back to distant periods and try to understand the development of culture and society. We can use this to help us understand society in order to change and innovate."

Insurance bids to be submitted

By Samantha Farr
Collegian Reporter

Lafene Student Health Center's Advisory Committee has sent letters to insurance companies asking for bids on a new student health insurance policy.

Daphne Ulveling, chairwoman of the advisory committee and graduate student in student counseling and personal services said the companies then respond to the letters by submitting bids based on Lafene's specifications.

The student advisory committee is made up of seven students, two faculty members and four Lafene staff members, said Lannie Zweimiller, director of Lafene. As director, Zweimiller is one of the staff members on the advisory committee.

"We look into different plans and send the insurance companies a potpourri of possibilities to choose from," Zweimiller said. "However, the committee is not obligated to pick the lowest bidder."

Zweimiller said the committee looks for a company with a good track record, meaning that they are accepted by most health care providers and charge premiums that most students can afford.

"The policy has to be affordable," Zweimiller said. "We try to protect them (students) the best way possible, without bankrupting them. Sometimes, the premiums are so high, the individual won't buy the policy in the first place."

Currently, the student health insurance plan is a shared-pay comprehensive program from Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Kansas.

With this program, the first dollars of expense are shared 50/50 until the policyholder's share reaches $1,000 for a single contract, or $2,000 for a family contract, Zweimiller said. Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Kansas then takes over and pays 100 percent of the covered services.

Ulveling said the committee will submit the best policy to the Student Senate for approval.

"This will be the bid that we get for the best price and that meets the specifications for the needs of our students," she said.

Zweimiller said making students aware that they can purchase insurance is another issue the advisory committee is trying to address.

"Another problem is to find a way of the students being more aware that the insurance is there for them."

Muscular endurance tested with machine

By Elvyn Jones
Collegian Reporter

With straps, wires, padded table, computer screen, keyboard and other devices, what looks like something out of the lab of Dr. Frankenstein is a state-of-the-art tool for Lafene Student Health Center's physical therapy department.

Bob Mortimer, physical therapist at Lafene, said the $10,000 machine consists of an Cybex Orthotron with attachment arms and a HUMAC computer system.

The Orthotron machine is an isokinetic actuator, Mortimer said. The actuator exercises a patient's limb against resistance.

The HUMAC system then monitors muscle functions during exercise and provides data analyses of the patient's strength, torque, flexibility, range and endurance in the limb, he said.

Patients can also use the actuator in therapy exercises without a computer program, Mortimer said.

Mortimer said the machine is valuable because it can identify and rule out problems, determine the extent of injury, help show the kind of therapy a patient may need and indicate when the patient can resume normal activity.

As a diagnostic tool, the machine can sometimes identify problems that do not show up in other procedures, Mortimer said.

With the attachments that Lafene has purchased, the machine can test shoulders, elbows, hips, knees and ankles, Mortimer said.

Kami Knoll, freshman in business administration, said she used the machine for therapy after she tore ligaments and cartilage in her knee last fall. She said therapy on the actuator strengthened her knee, and the data provided by the computer allowed her to monitor her therapy.

We must change habits to save habitat

Have you ever taken a moment to bend down, scooping your fingers into the soil, feeling the cool wet heaviness? Have you smelt the rich soil in your palm and wondered if this is what life smells like? As a child I lived in dirt. The earth beneath me was my friend, my playmate. We sculpted, we made mud pies, and we even grew our own tiny garden.

Once I found a dead raccoon. The body was not there, only the fur and skeleton. I told my father that someone had stolen the raccoon's body. My father tenderly explained that the raccoon's body had dissolved and now was part of the soil. I told him I wanted to dissolve into the soil, too, especially since we played together.

A year or so later at a funeral I asked my father why, if bodies dissolve and become part of the earth, do we put dead people in boxes? I was desperately concerned that dead people would be trapped forever and not freed like the raccoon.

"They do dissolve," he said. "But people don't like to think that other people become part of the ground we walk upon."

Human beings are so concerned about preserving human flesh, protecting it from the fate of all other species, that we must separate the decomposition of our bodies from the soil. But if humans have such reverence for the human body and life, why do we forego preservation while we are still alive and able to act reverently? We are quickening the coming of the destruction of the ecological system, and thus of ourselves.

Wendell Berry spoke of a new vision of agriculture which "exploits neither the land or the people." He speaks not just of the people who work the land, the agriculturists. He speaks of you and me.

I have always envisioned the farmer as an individual close to the earth, respectful of our natural setting. But this romantic myth is deceptive. Farmers have become more and more dependent on processes that work to control nature instead of working with nature. The use of pesticides, fertilizers and irrigation as a means of maintaining crop yields ironically diminishes the quality of the soil and the produce. Conventional methods of tilling land deplete the organic matter within the soil. Soil without organic matter is comparable to a malnourished human without the proper amounts of nutrients in order to grow. And too, such tilling practices result in an estimated loss of 5.5 tons of soil per acre, per year, in Kansas.

Quality has diminished — even become an issue of toxicity. In 26 percent of 15 types of fruit or vegetables tested by the Florida Department of Agriculture in 1988, residues of two or more pesticides were detected. But also, has anyone noticed that tomatoes have no taste; tomatoes have become nothing but slimy condiments, if they weren't already that to some of us.

The farmer suffers as well. The input costs of pesticides, herbicides, irrigation devices, new machinery and fertilizers economically burden the farmer, increasing investment costs and indebtedness and diminishing profit. But, as indicated in a 1986 study by the National Cancer Institute, Kansas farmers are physically harmed by the chemicals they administer. The study found that Kansas farmers who were exposed to herbicides more than 20 days per year had a six times higher risk of developing non-Hodgkin's lymphoma. Some critics of our agricultural and industrial practices claim that we are changing our gene pool, killing off both the producers and consumers who cannot survive in a climate of chemicals and pollution. Essentially, our farm policy is subsidizing unsustainable agricultural practices and unsustainable living conditions.

Not only must farmers be encouraged to adopt alternative means of farming, but we, the consumers, must change our expectations and our behavior. Lester Brown of the Worldwatch Institute argues that "fundamental shifts in lifestyles are needed now." Major opinion polls show "up to 70 percent in some surveys acknowledge a conflict between the environmental protection and economic growth and choose in favor of the environment." But when faced with the choice between environmental protection and individual comfort, the choice becomes much more difficult.

In a Wichita Eagle article entitled, "Diaper ban designed to pressure industry," a Vermont woman admits, "I take the trash problem seriously and I know that diapers are a major issue in landfills. But I would say disposable diapers are pretty close to a necessity." Americans are comfortable with the fast pace of our lives and our "throw-away" mentality that enables us to cast our waste and its consequences aside without conscious thought or ethical consideration. But what will impact upon individuals' lives so that changing habits will become a conscious act motivated by ethics? Perhaps I am assuming too much. Perhaps Americans will respond only to forces that impinge upon their pocketbook. If so, some areas of needed conservation will be ignored because of economic costs.

The oil spill in Alaska's Prince William Sound is a classic example. One would think this type of accident would be of the appropriate severity to shock Americans. But as Brian Tokar, a writer for Z magazine argues, "...no nationally recognized organization called for the closing of the Alaska pipeline (or) the dismantling of Exxon."

Economic reasons overshadow ecological concerns. Human apathy, inefficiency and greed overshadow prospects for protection of human, animal and environmental sustenance. Too, it is quite disturbing — if not ironic — that, as reported in the Wichita Eagle, "there is clearly a major need to clean up after the cleanup crews." The trash left behind by the oil spill cleanup crew has been called the "second spill." Exxon, however, has no formal cleanup plans for 1990 but vowed to consider the recommendations and "do whatever is reasonable." If the cleanup crew, whose purpose was to clean up, were so lacking in respect for the environment as to cause their own second spill, then I have little hope that Americans will set aside their apathy and inefficiency, until "shit happens" in their own front yard.

The earth is being exploited. We are being exploited. One would think in a culture so health conscious that there would be incentive to promote a healthy environment. But perhaps we foolishly believe we can box ourselves in, away from the decaying environment. Yet we are not immune to the death occurring within the environment; we are members of the same system being destroyed. I suggest we become as children again and take up the inquisitive call to befriend and honor the environment. I suggest that as adults, we use logic and common sense to transform our habits and our policies.

Change is a painful process. The minor discomfort that will be experienced now is not even comparable to the discomfort that could be experienced if we continue to foolishly believe in human immunity to ecological destruction.

Quality teaching sign of quality University

It's a simple question that a group of concerned students is asking of the University: Does good teaching matter at K-State?

These students will be looking to the University for an answer.

And if that answer is no, then all students, and those who will follow them, will be poorer because of it.

During the past few years, the University has been attempting to improve the reputation and funding of K-State. One way of achieving both of these aims is through the addition of good researchers to the faculty. Faculty researchers bring with themselves, or attract, money in the form of grants. In addition, the University can point out accomplished researchers to prospective students and faculty as evidence of a quality institution.

Yet, the primary purpose of a land-grant institution such as K-State is to bring education, teaching, to the people. That's why the federal government donated the land for the University and continues to support it with funding.

The people of the state of Kansas also fund the University to educate them.

Certainly, research is necessary. Teaching without research would grow stale, and such outdated knowledge, no matter how well imparted, would be useless.

But, research without effective teaching leaves the labor of brilliant minds wasted. It also leaves those who may not be able to converse with the brilliant ignorant.

The time has come for a University-wide standard to be established which will ensure, in the words of President Wefald, that "teaching should be on at least a 50-50 level with research" when it comes to granting tenure and salary increases.

This is one of the goals of Students for Excellence in Education. This group of students should be supported in all of its efforts to secure the place of teaching and teachers at K-State.

Every student who has ever taken an introductory philosophy course has encountered the work of a brilliant teacher who perished without publishing — Socrates.

Recorded among the works of the philosopher Plato are the class discussions and speeches of Socrates, whose thought is part of the intellectual foundation of Western Civilization.

What research Socrates performed is unknown, but Socrates' teaching shapes the thought of our age, thousands of years after his death, all because of Plato's class notes.

Black history important

For years now, February has been regarded as Black History Month — a time when people everywhere can reflect on the evolution, struggles, and migration of blacks in America and abroad. It is my hope that this month encourages everyone to investigate and research black history.

During my reign as Mr. Black Student Union, I seized the opportunity to travel to three schools in the Blue Rapids area on Martin Luther King Jr. Day, and enlighten the children about Dr. King and his dream. Before Ms. BSU, Angie Smith, and I departed, I took the opportunity to pay a visit to the Minority Resource Center in Farrell Library to conduct some research. With the assistance of Farrell's helpful staff I was able to compile an abundance of data regarding black history.

What some might find interesting is that throughout Kansas' history, blacks have played a very influential role in the development of this state. In spite of this fact, at no time have blacks accounted for more than 4.7 percent of the population.

The area now comprising Kansas was, for the first decade of the 19th century, considered merely part of the "Great Desert." This area was deemed suitable only for Indian habitation. With the expansion of slavery, the rivalry grew between the North and South. A thrust of Kansas migration grew as the word spread through Kansas to pioneers traveling westward to California. In 1853, the Kansas-Nebraska Bill was introduced. This bill organized the area west of Missouri into two territories and granted each the power of popular sovereignty. In the years that followed the Civil War, Americans turned their eyes westward and resumed their fascination with frontier settlement. According to a census taken in 1855, there were 151 free blacks and 192 slaves, making the total black population of Kansas 343.

Stanton Weeks

GUEST COLUMNIST

After the war, the steady stream of blacks migrating to Kansas continued. In spite of their number and the fact that most of them were poor, blacks were able to find work and became self-sustaining. Nicodemus, the most researched and best known of the black colonies, is located in Graham County on the Solomon River in western Kansas. It was founded in September 1877 by a group of colonists from Kentucky. In 1975, Nicodemus was designated a National Historical Landmark.

In addition to numerous Historical Landmarks, Kansas has also produced several prominent blacks who have been important in the development of the arts in America. One of them, Gordon Parks, rose from a poor, dirt-farm background to become one of the nation's best-known and most-versatile photographers. Born in Fort Scott in 1912, Parks is most noted for "The Learning Tree" and "A Choice of Weapons." He later became a photographer for Life magazine.

Another Kansan who became one of the nation's most-honored authors was Langston Hughes. Born in Missouri in 1902, Hughes was raised in Topeka and Lawrence. Author of "Not Without Laughter" and a string of other literary and poetic works, Hughes was awarded various honors including the Harmon Award for literature. In 1960, he received the Springarn Medal for contributions to the progress of the negro.

A number of blacks who have an association with Kansas have gained renown in various fields during the more recent decades of the 20th century. Gwendolyn Brooks, who won a Pulitzer Prize in poetry in 1950, was born in Topeka. Coleman Hawkins, an innovator in the world of American jazz, was educated at Washburn University. Charlie Parker, another jazz great, was born in Kansas City and got his start playing with various Kansas City jazz groups.

Hattie McDaniel, the first black actress to win an Academy Award, was born in Wichita. The list of names of other blacks rising to fame and notoriety could go on and on. The rich and varied history of black Americans can be found in Kansas as well as throughout America.

In the words of Lerone Bennett Jr., "History is the scaffold upon which personal and group identities are constructed. It is a living library which provides a script of roles and models to which growth can aspire. By telling us who we are, history tells us what we can do. By telling us where we have been, history tells us where we can go. At a still deeper level, history is power. History is to us what water is to fish. We are immersed in it, up to our necks, and we cannot get out of it, no matter what we say or do. It is not only a record of action, it is an action itself."

If this article encourages others to research further in this area or causes someone to reflect on the many struggles and accomplishments of black Americans, then the purpose of this publication will have been served.

Stanton Allen Weeks Jr. is a freshman in pre-physical therapy and Mr. Black Student Union.

A Shelter For Life

A big kiss is Beverly Hashagen's reward for a minute's playtime with one of the more than 40 dogs she and her husband Ronald keep at their animal shelter.

Mickey looks up from his place underneath the table. He paws the legs of the people sitting in the chairs and begs for their attention with an occasional bark.

Pooh and Billie scamper in from the kitchen and jump up on the chair of their visitor, giving Mickey competition for the spotlight.

Beverly Hashagen quiets the dogs and sends them to lie down. Hashagen is the founder and director of Pet Hotline Ranch, a no-kill animal sanctuary she operates out of her home nine miles north of Wamego.

A small white dog lies on the floor in front of the furnace. Cases of Milkbone Dog Biscuits are stacked in the corner, and the dining room table is covered with Pet Hotline newsletters and pet adoption information.

Two pet cages sit in the living room along with bowls of dog food and water. The yard is a village of dog houses and pens. The ranch is the home of Mickey, Pooh, Billie and about 50 other dogs and puppies.

"We're not a shelter; we're not a pound; we're not a kennel," Hashagen said. "We are a no-kill animal sanctuary, which means if an animal is not immediately adopted, it is not immediately thrown out the door and killed."

"We believe animals have personalities and they have feelings. They show pain, fear, anger, surprise and stress. It is necessary we take that into account and not treat them like cardboard boxes."

Susie, a purebred tri-color collie, was brought in after spending two months in the Wichita Animal Shelter. Her owner had decided she didn't want Susie anymore.

Dillon is a stray found in the parking lot of one of the Dillon's stores in Manhattan.

Ozzie, a black Labrador mix, was left in the yard to starve when his owners moved away.

Billie was thrown out of a car window onto a country road.

Each one of the dogs has a similar history. Most were subject to neglect. Others were abandoned or lost and never found by their owners. Several of the animals were placed in an animal shelter before coming to the emergency animal assistance, pet adoption and foster pet care for orphaned animals. It supports a neighborhood animal watch, in addition to the 24-hour phone service and pet sanctuary.

"It's a 24-hour-a day job," Hashagen said.

Plans for the ranch include a fenced small animal pen and housing area, a barn and corral for larger animals, a building for offices and meetand a lot of pens to put up," Ronald Hashagen said. "It's going to take a lot of work and a lot of volunteers, but one day we hope to be self-supporting."

"We've only got nine years left of our 10 years to do it in. I'd like to live long enough just to see it all work without fighting for every inch and every penny."

Pet Hotline is registered as a non-profit organization and is funded totally by donations. Seven volunteers staff the ranch.

The 50 dogs, seven cats and one rabbit now living at the ranch eat 70 to 80 pounds of food a day. About $30 a day is spent on food alone.

"For years we've been running a $120,000 operation on $6,000 to $10,000 of donations," Hashagen said. "One vet bill can wipe us out."

"We don't really think about expenses. We take care of the needs of the animals and hope our donations will cover it."

The animals are obviously Hashagen's friends, as well as her top priority.

"We all sit down together on Saturday night and watch Lassie," Hashagen said. "We're all one big family. Orphans are treated the same as our dogs as long as they are here."

Mickey looked up from across the room and barked as if to agree.

"(The animals) have to come first," Hashagen said. "That's the whole point. This ranch really belongs to them. Right, Mickey?"

ranch.

"You can't just put an animal in a cage at a shelter and give it seven days to live," Hashagen said. "It's just not going to happen."

Pet Hotline was an idea Hashagen had filed away in a drawer for 10 years. She and her husband, Ronald, acted on the idea Dec. 25, 1981, after being asked to help with the Riley County Humane Society.

"We gave the idea five years to see if it would work," said Hashagen. "We found out it would in three."

The Hashagens purchased 80 acres of land north of Wamego and moved to the ranch Nov. 7, 1988. The temporary pens and houses are the first phase of a 10-year plan to develop Pet Hotline into a sanctuary for all domestic animals.

Pet Hotline Ranch offers

ing rooms and a gift shop. A grooming and veterinary area and a compound for puppies, kittens and sick animals are also planned.

Nearly 56 acres of native bluestem grass will be left as a native wildlife preserve, Hashagen said.

The current goal of the Hotline is to enclose the five-acre small animal area with a 5-foot-high fence. Pottawatomie County has given the ranch until October to fence the area.

Missouri awaiting rematch with 'Cats

K-State reserve guard Jeff Wires scrambles for a loose ball in the 'Cats' game against Western Kentucky here in January. Wires should be back in action tonight as the 'Cats venture to Hearn Center for a rematch with No. 3 Missouri at Columbia. Wires missed Saturday's game to attend his grandfather's funeral. K-State won the first meeting between the two teams when Missouri was ranked No. 1. The rematch is slated for 7:05 p.m.

By Scott Paske
Sports Reporter

When a team unexpectedly knocks one of college basketball's bullies off its perch, the underdog sometimes faces a problem — paths often cross more than once.

K-State, which pulled off a miraculous 65-58 upset of then-No. 1 Missouri three weeks ago at Bramlage Coliseum, must return the house call tonight in a 7 p.m. contest at the Hearn Center in Columbia, Mo. The game will be televised on KSHB-TV 41, Manhattan Cable TV channel 29.

The season series may include another meeting in 10 days. If the Tigers are the top seed in the Big Eight postseason tournament, the teams could meet in the semi-final round.

Missouri, ranked third in the latest Associated Press Top 25 poll, is hoping to avenge the Feb. 8 loss seen by a national-television audience. The Tigers, 25-3, regained the top spot 10 days after the loss to the Wildcats with a 77-71 win at Kansas, but No. 5 Oklahoma dethroned them for the second time Sunday with a 107-90 win in the teams' second meeting in a week.

K-State coach Lon Kruger said the Sooners didn't do the 'Cats any favors with the rout.

"It's probably fired Missouri up a little bit ... as if they needed it," he said. "I don't think they need any extra motivation."

The Tigers will have more than revenge motivating them. With a win tonight, Mizzou can capture the Big Eight title outright with a 12-2 record. It would be the Tigers' sixth league title in 11 years.

K-State senior Steve Henson said the Tigers aren't the only team with something to gain.

"I feel like we've gotten ourselves in a position to do it," Henson said of the 'Cats' chances of qualifying for the NCAA Tournament. "We're feeling good about things, but we may still be a win short."

If the 'Cats are to get the job done, it will likely involve shutting down Mizzou post man Doug Smith. Smith, who was named Big Eight player of the week after scoring 61 points in two games against Iowa State and Oklahoma, was held to 13 in Manhattan. But the 6-foot-10 junior exploded for a career-high 44 points against Nebraska in the following game.

Smith and his teammates were stifled by cold shooting in Bramlage, hitting a season-low 29.6 percent from the field.

"Missouri didn't shoot the ball like they're capable of, which allowed us to cheat a little more inside," Kruger said. "We had good help on defense that night. You don't want to line up and play anyone of their people in a one-on-one situation."

Sooners pound No. 1 Jayhawks

By The Associated Press

NORMAN, Okla. — Oklahoma beat the No. 1 team in the country for the second time in three days Tuesday night with an easy 100-78 victory over Kansas.

The fifth-ranked Sooners (22-4) had beaten then-No. 1 Missouri 107-90 on Sunday and the outcome was even more convincing against the Jayhawks (27-3).

The wins extended Oklahoma's homecourt winning streak to 45 games and the latest was played before a record crowd of 12,166 at Lloyd Noble Center.

Oklahoma used some impressive defense to force a season-high 26 turnovers and hand Kansas its first loss to any team other than Missouri.

The win also pulled the Sooners even with Kansas in the Big Eight standings at 10-3, one game behind first-place Missouri.

Skeeter Henry, playing his final home game, led the Sooners with 23 points. William Davis and reserve guard Terry Evans had 22 each.

Kansas, which committed a previous season-high 21 turnovers in its 85-74 win over the Sooners on Feb. 3, had 16 in the first half. It only seemed each led directly to an Oklahoma score.

Evans, who had 15 points and 12 assists against Missouri, came into the game with 11:22 left in the half when starting point guard Smokey McCovery picked up his second foul.

Everything changed right there.

The Sooners went on a 23-4 run over the next 5½ minutes for a 24-point lead in a building where they haven't lost in three years. The last home loss was on Feb. 27, 1987 to K-State.

Evans immediately forced a turnover on an inbounds pass and then scored on a short jumper for the first points of the run.

He set up the next points, a layup by Davis, with another steal.

The next five Sooners baskets all came as a result of Kansas turnovers. They came thanks to the press, something Coach Billy Tubbs had gotten away from recently; tenacious half-court man-to-man defense; and in the open court, where it often seemed there were more Sooners than Jayhawks on the court.

The run ended with Henry scoring on a long layup after, yes, another Kansas turnover, this one by Mark Randall at the Jayhawks' basket.

Kansas did come back with a 14-2 run to make it 41-31 with 53 seconds left in the half. But Evans nailed a three-pointer and Davis made two free throws before Pekka Markanen of Kansas ended the half with a three-point play to make it 48-34.

Oklahoma handled each of Kansas' mini-runs in the second half as the Jayhawks got within 14 and 13 points twice each.

Player-of-year honor finally sets in Diana Miller now aware of how successful her junior season's been

By David Svoboda
Sports Reporter

Now, it seems real — not that it wasn't 36 hours ago.

For Diana Miller, who was named the Big Eight Women's Co-Player of the Year early Monday evening, the reality of earning the conference's highest honor didn't sink in the moment she heard of the award.

"When (interim) coach (Gaye) Griffin called to tell me, I think she was more excited than I was," said Miller in recounting the way she learned the news. "Really, at the time, I didn't quite know what to say, and I didn't know how to react."

"Today (Tuesday) it finally soaked in more."

Miller, who shared the award with fellow junior Liz Brown of Oklahoma State, averaged 17.0 points and 6.4 rebounds a game during the regular season that concluded with Saturday's loss by the Lady Cats to Kansas in Bramlage Coliseum.

The product of Hutchinson and Buhler High School had aspirations slightly lower than the honor she received.

"After just being honorable mention the past two years, my goal this year was to get on the first team," Miller said. "Liz Brown was the preseason Player of the Year pick, and I didn't know what it would take to beat her."

What it took for Miller to share the honor with Brown was a season in which she rewrote a portion of the Lady Cat record book.

Miller is one of nine players in K-State history who has scored 1,000 points and grabbed 500 rebounds. She is 10th on the career scoring chart with 1,125 points, and needs just 46 more to catapult to the sixth spot.

Her career-high 35-point effort against Oklahoma earlier this year was the second-best single-game scoring performance ever by a Lady Cat.

The numbers are nice to look at, but it was a consistency of effort that keyed her season, Miller said.

"I think my winning was the result of consistency and the way I played game after game against good teams," she said. "I was also more offensive-minded, and that made a difference."

Miller pointed to her teammates for a share of the praise as well. "I feel good about the award," she said. "It's not only good recognition of my efforts as an individual, but it shows someone paid attention to what we were doing as a team."

Miller, a two-time conference player of the week during the year, would trade her new award for something she could have gained Saturday night: a championship ring.

"I'd trade it, in a second, for a Big Eight title," said Miller, whose team finished second to Missouri. "This award is a great individual honor, but when you win a Big Eight championship, everyone on the team shares it."

Miller said that the team has bounced back well from a disappointing final week, which saw the Lady Cats lose two straight chances at gaining a tie for the conference crown.

"We've come in the last two days and shot well and practiced hard," she said. "Sure we were disappointed we didn't win the conference, but we can't stay down."

After leading the Lady Cats to an 18-9 record this year, junior Diana Miller has been named Big Eight's co-player of the year.

Career day offers informal interviews

By Tim Clopton
Collegian Reporter

More than 20 recreation agencies, including camps and public recreation departments, will be participating in Kansas State Recreation Career Day today.

Several of the agencies will have displays and representatives available for informal visits with students concerning careers, internships and summer jobs in leisure studies, said Rob Barth, chairman of recreation career day and junior in leisure studies.

The career day is scheduled to take place from 9 to 11 a.m. in the K-State Union Courtyard, Barth said.

"Students will have the chance to discuss career opportunities with the agencies," said Sid Stevenson, assistant professor of physical education and leisure studies. "Students will be able to visit and ask 'what type of background do I need to get a job?'"

Students will also be able to sign up for more formal interviews with participating agencies to be held later in the afternoon at Holtz Hall, Barth said.

The career day is open to students of all majors, Barth said. "For those students who aren't seeking employment in the park and recreation field upon graduation, Recreation Career Day provides an opportunity for them to talk informally with agencies about summer employment," Barth said.

Several camps, therapeutic, commercial, public and private agencies will be present and some will have many summer job opportunities, Stevenson said.

Stevenson said Worlds of Fun will be offering positions in areas like marketing, merchandising, public relations and journalism, in addition to jobs in park activities.

"The career day is geared toward the leisure studies, park resources management, and exercise science students who will be looking into careers and internships," Stevenson said. "But there's no way that these agencies can only hire people from these areas, they're looking for all types of students for summer help."

Students who have had trouble contacting an agency throughout the year will be able to communicate with them at the career day, Barth said.

Stevenson said most of the jobs in leisure studies are in management and are divided into the categories of client interaction, supervisory and agency director.

Device limits car movement

Wheel locks used to ensure car owner goes to police station

By Clinton Wolf
Collegian Reporter

More than 100 people each year return from class or appointments to find bright orange wheel locks clamped on their cars.

The wheel lock is a device that KSU Police clamp onto the wheel of an illegally parked car so it cannot be driven without serious damage. Some people have tried to cut the hardened steel locks off of the devices or otherwise get around them, Patrol Officer David Springer said.

"As I understand, one guy drove off with one on," Springer said. "It really damaged his suspension system."

Charles Beckom, University police chief, said a wheel lock may be used for several reasons. If a car is in a reserved stall, the stall owner may request a lock be used if the car cannot be towed.

"If an officer has any reservation at all (about towing) we use a wheel lock," Beckom said.

If the driver has five or more traffic violations, a lock will be used to ensure he or she comes to the police station in person.

"It's an attempt to prevent large accumulations of tickets," Beckom said.

In addition, a wheel lock may be placed on a vehicle that has a stolen, altered or forged parking permit, he said. In any of these cases, the vehicle owner must go to the police station and pay $20 to have the lock removed.

Beckom said the police department owns four of the locks, which cost $480 each.

"We may only use one or two the whole week, but some weeks we use all four every day," he said.

In 1989, the police placed 180 wheel locks on cars, and 79 of those were used in the fall semester, said Sgt. Andrew Amaro.

Springer said a special lock is used if the vehicle has mag wheels so they are not damaged, and hubcaps are removed if there is danger of damaging them.

The lock takes from five to eight minutes to place on the car, Beckom said.

Each time a wheel lock is used, a large fluorescent sticker is placed on the vehicle's window, Beckom said. The sticker warns the owner not to move the vehicle, explains the violation and gives the amount of time he or she has to contact the police department before the car will be towed.

Richard Seaton, University attorney, said if the driver of the vehicle with a wheel lock installed suddenly needed it for an emergency, the University would be liable only if the officer could foresee the emergency occurring. Such negligence would be unlikely, he said.

Having a wheel lock removed is easier than having to get the vehicle from a wrecker's lot across town, Seaton said. Beckom said it is cheaper than being forced to pay wrecker charges in the case of a misunderstanding.

Sometimes department heads may give permission to people to use their parking spaces and not inform the police department, Beckom said. A handicapped driver may park in a handicap stall without identification. In these cases, the people do not have to pay to have the lock removed, Beckom said.

Paul Raehpour, sophomore in radio and television, said he had a wheel lock placed on his van during enrollment in August. Raehpour said he parked in a reserved parking stall in the south Union parking lot while selling bean bags in the Union.

"I could see (the wheel lock) all the way from the Union," Raehpour said. "The paint job on it was very nice."

Raehpour walked over to the police station to pay the fine and the lock was removed by the time he returned to his van. Because he had parked in the same reserved spot two days in a row, Raehpour said, the owner of the stall requested the lock be installed.

Sgt. Herbert Crosby of the Riley County Police Department said it has borrowed wheel locks from the University police for impounding vehicles. This is done when the vehicle is involved in an investigation. It is towed to the police lot where a lock is used to prevent anyone from moving the vehicle, Crosby said. The department does not use locks on vehicles parked on the street, he said.

Program provides tutors, friends to youth

By Angela Tholstrup
Collegian Reporter

The Friendship Tutoring program, sponsored by the human development and family studies department, is both a tutoring and friendship program. It coordinates interested K-State volunteers with grade school and high school students.

The program started more than 25 years ago, said Julia Raehpour, Friendship Tutoring coordinator and graduate student in human development and family studies.

Friendship Tutoring is different from Big Brothers and Big Sisters of Manhattan in that the emphasis of the program is on helping students with homework, she said.

The students and tutors are matched for the entire semester and meet every Thursday from 7 to 8:30 p.m. The friendship tutors met their students for the first time Feb. 8.

There is no fee for students to enroll in the program, Raehpour said. The only cost is getting the student to and from the site.

Tutors for first- and second-graders meet their pupils at the Methodist Education Center. Third- and fourth-graders and their tutors meet at the First Christian Church. Tutors and students from fifth and sixth grades meet at the First Lutheran Church, and seventh- through 12th-graders study at the Manhattan Middle School cafeteria.

There are eight site coordinators.

"We are here to help out the tutors, to make sure the match is working and to make suggestions," said Karen Grimes, senior in elementary education and site coordinator for tutor pairs for grades three and four.

There are about 200 tutors, Raehpour said. In fact, there are more tutors than students this semester.

At the third and fourth grade site alone there are expected to be 45 pairs, Grimes said.

"A majority of the tutors are from the education department at K-State," Raehpour said. "Some are not from the education department. They just want to share what they know."

Education students learn about the program from instructors such as Tom Parish, professor of administration and foundations of education, Raehpour said.

Tambra Rogers, sophomore in elementary education, said she became a tutor through an education class. It was the community participation requirement for the course, Rogers said.

Each semester, advertisements are placed in the Manhattan Mercury and the Collegian to recruit students and tutors, Raehpour said.

The students bring homework for one-on-one help, Raehpour said. Rogers said she and her student worked on homework unless his teacher sent special projects.

"We encourage the tutors to contact the parents, so there will be close communication with them in order to know what the child really needs help on," Raehpour said.

Chalkboards, paper, crayons, markers and games can be used for learning games if the student does not have any homework, Grimes said. One pair played hangman to get to know each other better.

The site coordinators organize the last half-hour group activity, Grimes said. On the first night, her site group had read poems from "A Light in the Attic," by Shel Silverstein. The tutors gave the students rhyming words to use in making up poems.

The group at the Manhattan Middle School does not have the half-hour group activity, said Todd Rokey, junior in agricultural mechanization and site coordinator.

Parents must fill out a permission form to allow the tutors to contact the students' teachers, Raehpour said. The tutor can learn about problem areas in which the student needs extra work, she said.

The parents are invited to attend one session about halfway through the semester, Rokey said.

Pi

proposal to honor all Indians who have appeared in the Guinness Book of World Records by placing them on a stamp, Mahadevan said.

"I consider myself an ambassador, not only of K-State, but of India as well," he said.

Mahadevan received a letter from Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., thanking him for promoting U.S. relations with India.

Mahadevan credits his success to hard work and natural ability.

"I was preparing up to 22 hours a day. I was subsisting on one to two hours a sleep a night prior to setting the record," Mahadevan said. "It's just like any other success story, hard work applies."

The world record was broken in 1987 by Tomoyori, a Japanese memorist. Tomoyori recited about 40,000 digits of pi in 17 hours and 21 minutes, Mahadevan said.

"When I heard that, I said 'What the hell is he doing,'" Mahadevan said of Tomoyori's time.

Mahadevan recited about 32,000 digits of pi in three hours and 49 minutes.

Mahadevan said he is biding his time doing research and is preparing to recapture the world record.

"I figured it would take 100,000 places of pi to maintain the record, so I am studying an hour a day," Mahadevan said.

Meanwhile, the international celebrity said he will try to reclaim the world record next fall.

Bill

Because of the short amount of time left to consider other bills, the committee would probably not consider the measure again this session, she said. However, proponents of the bill may introduce it to another committee.

"Those people who are supporting the bill are primarily representing small businesses and are interested in seeing this board established," Salisbury said. "(Vidricksen) was the one who instigated the whole issue last session."

Although she did not support the current bill before the Economic Development Committee, Salisbury said she does not want public-subsidized universities competing with private enterprise.

The bill has raised important issues regarding university services and private business, and certain laws may need to be amended to preclude situations of unfair competition, Salisbury said.

She said she opposed the bill because it would create "another level of bureaucracy."

"The Legislature can already be an arena for people to come to the Legislature and speak," Salisbury said.

In response to these complaints, the Legislature has the power to conduct audits, have hearings, introduce legislation and change laws, she said.

Vidricksen said he will continue to support eliminating competition among private businesses and public-subsidized institutions.

"I will not relent from my quest to do something about it," he said. "If they want to compete with private enterprise, they should pay taxes on the unrelated income."

Unrelated income, Vidricksen said, is any income gained from selling items not directly related to students' academic pursuits.

He said he does not agree that all services and products offered by universities are necessary to improving the student's living environment.

If that is true, "why don't they sell cars?" he said.

"The universities need to look in the mirror and realize what they are doing to free enterprise," Vidricksen said.

Kay Farley, assistant director of the K-State Union, said she would like to see the legislators come to an agreement with the universities.

"It is unfortunate that the Legislature and the universities are not working closer together," Farley said.

Mizzou out of the nation's hot seat is the loss of senior point guard Lee Coward, who fractured his hand in a 92-90 win over Oklahoma. The Detroit native is out for the remainder of the regular season, but is expected to play in the post-season tournament.

Freshman sharpshooter Travis Ford has taken his place in the starting lineup.

Kruger said there were several positive aspects of K-State's 70-58 loss to Kansas in Lawrence on Saturday.

"I thought our concentration and awareness was good. The game just lasted too long," he said. "I expect us to bounce back."

vate without social trauma. That's the hope."

As a professional archaeologist, O'Brien said she is proud of the contributions she has made to the understanding of the history of the American Indians.

"Also, to see students you have helped as undergraduates move up and on is satisfying," she said. "To see those students teaching is rewarding."

O'Brien said she likes the broad environment at K-State; mainly the openness of the people.

"A lot of people don't realize the incredible quality of faculty at this school," she said.

Tribunal hears debate

Students question Fine Arts/Athletic fee's constitutionality

By Kirk Caraway
Collegian Reporter

Tribunal heard arguments Wednesday night about the constitutionality of the Fine Arts/Athletic fee passed by Student Senate last October.

Tom Jones, junior in political science, acquired 54 signatures on a petition to bring the case before Tribunal because he said Senate handled the matter badly.

"We didn't think the process was fair and legal," Jones said. "We wanted Tribunal to have the last word."

The hearing was held in the Union Council Chamber before the 89-90 Tribunal with Bill Nelson, junior in political science, acting as chancellor. The new Tribunal, sworn in last Thursday after a week of controversy over those appointed by Student Body President Todd Johnson, was not used because the case was scheduled before they were approved.

Jones stated several reasons for his petition to Tribunal. First, he said Senate did not have the power to pass the fee because the same Senate sent the matter to a student referendum which defeated it. Because they voluntarily gave their power over the matter to the student body, Jones said they could not pass the fee until a new Senate was in office or another referendum was held.

Another argument Jones presented was that a section of the constitution requires fees be passed only by referendum if it is "for the purpose of financing the construction or renovation of any building or facility." Jones said the Athletic department falls into this category because it operates sports facilities and is currently paying off debts incurred by the construction of Bramlage Coliseum.

Justin Sanders, graduate in physics and co-sponsor of the amendment changing the constitution to require a referendum, said he did not believe the Athletic department fell under this section of the constitution.

"The idea that we had was a fee for the purpose of construction or renovation of a building," Sanders said. However, Sanders said it is impossible to determine if any money would be used to pay off the Bramlage debt, an apparent violation of the constitution.

"When money goes into the general fund, they don't make any distinctions between student money and money from other sources," Sanders said.

Other points brought up by Jones dealt with whether Senate could have brought the fee up without a motion to reconsider and whether the referendum results could be used to gauge student opinion. Because the bill passed was similar to that voted on in the referendum, Jones said a motion to reconsider was required to conform with Senate rules.

"Both fees would raise the same amount of money for the Athletic department," Jones said.

In defense of the fee, Johnson rejected the charges that the fee was not legal.

"The points that were raised have taken the constitution out of context," Johnson said. "It's important to

Senator reconsiders stance on position

By The Collegian Staff

After two weeks of re-evaluation, Todd Heitschmidt will again be considered for the position of Associated Students of Kansas campus director by Student Senate tonight at 7 p.m. in the Union Big Eight Room.

Student Body President Todd Johnson originally withdrew the resolution naming Heitschmidt, senior in agricultural economics, as ASK director, because he refused to resign his Senate seat before taking the position. Since then, Heitschmidt has agreed to resign and put all his efforts into ASK.

"He's going to dedicate himself to ASK," Johnson said. "I pulled the resolution to re-evaluate it. We wanted to make sure the appointee had adequate time to dedicate to this position."

Heitschmidt said he is happy with Johnson's decision to appoint him and that the past difficulties will not get in the way.

"Todd and I have come to a workable understanding," Heitschmidt said. "It was just like starting over. There were no biases."

Also to be approved are the appointments of members to the Educational Opportunity Fund Committee. Those up for approval are: Crystal Sapp, junior in accounting; Van Zander, junior in electrical engineering and Tim Browder, senior in construction science.

First readings will also be heard on bills dealing with the athletic ticket sales policy and the disposition of ASK funds now residing in the state ASK account.

Brothers give Fraternity donates money, time to Menninger Villages

By Todd Fertig
Collegian Reporter

Psychiatrist and philanthropist Dr. Karl Menninger accepted a donation Wednesday from the Delta Upsilon fraternity to benefit a chain of children's homes he founded in 1966.

Menninger, a 97-year-old Topeka native, helped open the field of psychiatric diagnosis and treatment with the creation of the Menninger Foundation in the 1920s. He founded The Villages, homes that provide a family-type atmosphere for orphaned and neglected children, said a representative of The Villages.

The Villages take in children ages 6-18 and support them through funding from the state and from donations.

Menninger, who remains active with The Villages, told the DUs he does not think his dedication to helping children is especially commendable.

"I don't think it's very remarkable that I've done these things," Menninger said. "They were right there in front of me."

"The Villages are working to help people, and now you're a part of that and can be proud," he said. "But you have to keep it up. When you leave here, there'll be lots of other people to help."

Delta Upsilon fraternities, which internationally support The Villages, awarded the K-State DUs for developing the most original and progressive philanthropy project in the international organization in 1989.

Alan Koechner, senior in milling science and management and DU philanthropy chairman, said the members of the K-State fraternity have a special opportunity to work so closely with The Villages and Menninger because the concentration of The Villages is so close to Manhattan.

There are five villages in Topeka, three in Lawrence and eight in Indiana.

Members of the DU house took an opportunity in 1989 to visit and work in The Villages in Topeka, Koechner said. They worked on a nature trail for the children.

"It was a great opportunity to see the work that (The Villages are) doing and how they are helping kids," said Joe Grossnickle, junior in civil engineering and DU vice president. "The Villages seem to be a very effective method for the care of the kids, and the people seem very caring."

Menninger believes children from unsatisfactory living environments do not need psychiatric help, but care and influence in a family setting.

Each home, which cares for 10 children, is under the direction of a set of parents who are trained by the organization. The parents are supported by The Villages Inc. and have no outside work.

Dr. Karl Menninger is escorted into the dining room of the Delta Upsilon house Wednesday by Harold J. Lehane, a member of the board of trustees of The Villages. Menninger, founder of the Menninger Foundation and The Villages, accepted a donation from the DUs for The Villages.

Selective admissions rejected

Proposal left stranded in House following 64-59 vote

From Staff and Wire Reports

TOPEKA — The House rejected a bill Wednesday that would have ended the long-standing state policy of allowing virtually open admission to public universities.

Representatives refused on a 64-59 vote to advance the bill to a final vote, leaving it marooned on the House's debate calendar. Technically, the measure is not dead, but House leaders would have to schedule another debate to revive it.

"It's hard to say," said Majority Leader Robert H. Miller, R-Wellington, when asked whether the subject will be debated again this session. "Obviously, it's close."

Rep. Katha Hurt, D-Manhattan, said she believes the bill was essentially killed by Wednesday's vote.

"I doubt anyone serious about qualified admissions would bring it up again in this session," Hurt said. "Everyone believes that all sides were given a fair say in the matter."

The House's action marked the second time it has rejected such a bill since the State Board of Regents endorsed the concept of restrictive admissions in 1987. The House killed a bill in 1988, and measures died in House committees in 1987 and 1989.

Hurt said she voted no on the bill, but supports the idea of eventually having qualified admissions.

"The positive thing about it is we have people aware that we need to improve the college system," she said. "There's some passion involved in education reform."

A weak set of regulations prevented Hurt from voting in favor of the bill, she said.

"The regulations were watered down in the hopes of getting the bill passed," Hurt said. "They really disallowed no one from admittance, in essence."

Forty-nine of the House's 57 Democrats joined with 15 of the chamber's 68 Republicans in voting to reject the measure. Fifty-two Republicans and seven Democrats voted to tentatively approve the measure.

Provost James Coffman said he testified in favor of the restricted admissions bill.

"I think higher education and potential University students will benefit from such a bill if it were to eventually pass," Coffman said.

Coffman said he expects a qualified admissions bill to pass within the next few years.

"It will help students who do come to be better prepared," he said.

"It could have gone either way by about the same margin," said

“I doubt anyone serious about qualified admissions would bring it up again in this session. Everyone believes that all sides were given a fair say in the matter.”

—Katha Hurt
state representative,
D-Manhattan

Stan Koplik, regents executive director. "There's still a great deal of misunderstanding and misinterpretation about what we're trying to achieve."

Hurt said she was surprised the vote was not closer than the final count.

"As the bill was being debated, I believed it was going to pass," she said. "There was much heated discussion."

Current law allows any Kansas high school graduate to enter a state university.

Under the bill, a Kansas high school graduate under 21 would have to meet one of three tests to gain admission to a state university. The requirements would take effect in the fall of 1994.

Students would have to either obtain a 2.0 grade point average on a 4.0 scale on a pre-college curriculum established by the regents; score 21 or better on the American College Test; or graduate in the top third of their high school classes.

Admission would be open to all freshmen older than 21 who graduated from high school or had a General Educational Development certificate after having scored 50 or better on the GED test.

"As a teacher I know many students who can't make a certain grade, but can learn and will be better for the experience," Hurt said.

Supreme Court assists drug war

Decision allows U.S. agents to conduct foreign searches without use of warrant

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — U.S. agents do not need warrants for searches in other countries, the Supreme Court ruled Wednesday in a decision seen as bolstering the fight against drug smugglers and terrorists — and perhaps aiding the prosecution of ousted Panamanian leader Manuel Noriega.

By a 6-3 vote, the justices upheld the warrantless search of the home of a suspected Mexican drug smuggler.

Foreigners living abroad do not have the same rights as U.S. citizens or aliens living here, the court said.

In another decision, the court gave police broad new authority to conduct sweeping searches in this country after making arrests in private homes.

Voting 7-2, the justices said police may use the evidence seized when they arrested a Riverdale, Md., man accused of armed robbery. The ruling reinstated his conviction and 35-year prison sentence.

The court said police may search throughout a house when they have a reasonable suspicion there is a hidden danger to the arresting officers — even if authorities lack a search warrant or probable cause to believe there is a danger.

In a third ruling, the court said states may make the death penalty the only punishment for some murderers without violating the Constitution's ban on mandatory death sentences. The court, by a 5-4 vote, upheld a Pennsylvania law.

In the drug-smuggling case, the court narrowed the Fourth Amendment's protection against unreasonable searches and seizures.

Aliens are entitled to such constitutional safeguards only "when they have come within the territory of the United States and developed substantial connections with this country," Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist said.

Without mentioning the Noriega case, Rehnquist said, "Situations threatening to important American interests may arise halfway around the globe ... (that) require an American response with armed force."

He added: "If there are to be restrictions on searches and seizures

Soviets can acquire land

MOSCOW (AP) — Legislators overwhelmingly approved a bill Wednesday that allows Soviets to acquire land and bequeath it to their children, a major modification of decades of state control of land.

The law, however, stops short of legalizing full private ownership of property by strictly forbidding the sale of land. Under the new law, plots only can be leased, and the lease prices will be set by the state.

The measure was part of a comprehensive package designed to give the force of law to the economic and social reforms championed by President Mikhail S. Gorbachev. The official news agency Tass called it "a major legal document of Soviet economic reform."

State ownership of land, inscribed in the Soviet Constitution, has been a cornerstone of communism since the 1917 revolution. But reformers and economists repeatedly have called for allowing private ownership as a way of spurring growth in the troubled economy.

In a commentary in Wednesday's edition of the newspaper Komsomolskaya Pravda, economist Pavel Voshchanov welcomed the reform as a first step to reversing a situation in which the Soviet Union, with some of the richest farmland on Earth, has become a net importer of food.

The Soviet Constitution says "the land, its minerals, waters and forests are the exclusive property of the state." The Congress of People's Deputies, the Supreme Soviet's parent body, will be asked to change the Constitution when it meets March 12.

Volcano erupts, disrupts

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — Redoubt Volcano resumed its sporadic emissions Wednesday, erupting twice within an hour, dropping ash on Anchorage for the first time and disrupting air-line flights.

There was a moderate eruption shortly before 9 a.m., and then a much stronger blast that sent a plume 37,000 feet into the air about an hour later, said Tom Miller of the Alaska Volcano Observatory.

Most of the ash from the second eruption headed east-northeast toward the Nikiski area of the Kenai Peninsula. A light coating of ash, however, was reported more than 100 miles away at Elmendorf Air Force Base, in portions of downtown Anchorage and at Eagle River, about 10 miles north of Anchorage.

"We've got everything parked inside," Sgt. Dave Haulbrook, an Elmendorf spokesman, said of the aircraft on the base. "We've got ash falling on the snow now."

"A big cloud moved over. Nothing fell out of it. After it passed, ash started falling."

Some flights were canceled or diverted at Anchorage International Airport, but operations were continuing, said Marsha Sampson, a spokeswoman.

Superior Court Judge Karl Johnstone, expressing concern that jurors wouldn't be able to get home because of limited driving visibility, recessed the criminal trial of Exxon Valdez skipper Joseph Hazelwood two hours early.

The 10,197-foot peak sprang back to life in mid-December after being quiet for more than two decades, and has erupted intermittently since.

Miller said the observatory was about to upgrade its alert status when the volcano erupted because of "a general increase" in seismic activity, he said.

Earthquake hits California

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A strong earthquake rocked a wide area of Southern California from San Diego to Santa Barbara on Wednesday, breaking windows and toppling books from shelves.

There were no immediate reports of injuries from the quake, which swayed a high-rise building in Las Vegas, 230 miles northeast of Los Angeles.

The quake measured 5.5 on the Richter scale and, and was centered three miles northwest of Upland, a city about 40 miles east of Los Angeles, said Hall Daily of the California Institute of Technology in Pasadena. The U.S. Geological Survey gave the same magnitude, but a preliminary reading by University of California Seismographic Stations at Berkeley put the magnitude at 6.0.

At Harvey Mudd College in Pomona, about five miles from the epicenter, the quake broke a window and toppled wall-mounted bookcases in the president's office, said Burt Tashman, at the school.

"I'm on the second story and boy, I tell you, things started shaking," Tashman said. "Glass fell from the wall of the president's office and fell all over the place. Pictures fell. The pane broke. That sort of thing."

It was the strongest earthquake in Southern California since a 7.1-magnitude quake struck the San Francisco Bay region Oct. 17.

Contestants sing of Kansas

WICHITA (AP) — Dressed in identical black short cocktail dresses, contestants for the title of Miss USA sang about being "right in the middle" of the United States as they danced and strutted in front of a U.S. map with Wichita, Kan., the pageant site, marked with a neon star Tuesday.

They competed in the evening gown and swimsuit categories Tuesday. Each category contributes a third of the score that will determine the 12 finalists to be announced Friday early in a CBS national telecast of the pageant. The other third will come from personal interviews each contestant will have with an 11-judge panel.

During their brief hellos to the nearly 3,000-person audience in Century II's Convention Hall, the contestants delivered messages ranging from an endorsement of auto seat belts from a crash survivor to statements of their career aspirations. Two delegates said they wanted to someday win the Academy Award for best actress. Nearly a dozen are planning careers as broadcast journalists or television personalities.

Bill limits dropouts' driving

TOPEKA (AP) — A Senate committee heard testimony Wednesday on a bill that would link teen-agers' driving privileges to their school attendance and performance.

The bill seeks to address the 4.2 percent high school dropout rate in the state, which amounts to 4,810 students out of the total 114,515 high school students enrolled.

The bill is modeled after a law in West Virginia, said Sen. Janis Lee, D-Kensington, who spoke for it. After the law took effect, West Virginia's number of dropouts went from 5,000 to 3,400 in one year, she said. She called driving a privilege, not a right.

The committee took no action on the measure.

Under the bill's provisions, students under 18 could not obtain a drivers' license or instructional permit unless they had a diploma or General Educational Development certificate, or unless they had a document showing they were making satisfactory progress toward either goal.

Slattery serves on voting team

Nicaraguan election free, fair, Kansas congressman says

By Lori Mikesell
Staff Reporter

U.S. Rep. Jim Slattery, D-Kan., was one of more than 2,000 observers present during Sunday's Nicaraguan elections. Contrary to some acquisitions, Slattery believed the elections were free and fair, said a spokeswoman.

Nicaraguan United National Opposition leaders have accused the Sandinistas of delaying election returns in the National Assembly races.

Vice president-elect Virgilio Godoy accused election officials of manipulating the results to deprive the opposition of the two-thirds majority required to make constitutional changes.

Slattery's spokeswoman, Janet Murguia, said the congressman believed in the integrity of the elections.

Murguia, who accompanied the congressman to Nicaragua, said she agreed with his analysis.

"I was there, viewed the process, and I didn't notice any significant irregularities," she said.

Slattery credited President Daniel Ortega for holding open elections and said he was impressed with the high voter turnout for the elections. Of the 1.7 million voters registered in Nicaragua, more than 90 percent voted, Murguia said.

"It was our impression that everyone was willing to accept that whatever happened, they would abide by the election results, provided it was a free and honest election," Murguia said.

She said observers tried to ensure the elections were fair. In addition, a member of the opposition party was at each of the 4,391 polling sites.

"Observers went by every polling place, and in many areas they were present when the counting was done," Murguia said.

Since returning from Nicaragua, Slattery has called on the White House to send as much aid to the newly formed Central American democracy as the country received annually from the Soviet Union and other Eastern bloc countries.

In addition, Slattery has asked the United States to restore full diplomatic relations to Nicaragua, lift the 1985 trade embargo, encourage the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank to cooperate with Nicaragua and provided direct economic assistance to Nicaragua.

John Exdell, coordinator of the Manhattan Alliance on Central America and associate professor of philosophy, said it will be difficult for the UNO, a coalition of 14 parties, to stay together.

"In order for the U.S. to maintain their project in Nicaragua, it must pour in money," Exdell said. "And no matter how much money we give to the country, it won't make much of a dent."

According to a 1989 study conducted by the World Bank, it will take $1.4 billion just to repair the country from war, Exdell said.

In addition, Exdell said consideration must be given to the political purpose of the assistance given.

"Aid is not politically neutral. U.S. aid will be given to the most conservative, business-oriented members

Multiple Sclerosis does not set pace in minister's life

By Heather Stewart
Collegian Reporter

Multiple sclerosis, a potentially crippling disease, can strike college men and women at any time, according to the National Multiple Sclerosis Society.

John Stoneking, minister at the First United Methodist Church, has had MS since 1981. He first started noticing a feeling of being off-balance when he lived in Lenexa.

Stoneking said that when he visited hospitalized members of his congregation, sometimes, when walking down the halls, he felt out of equilibrium, as though he was walking a little crooked.

The other sign that something was wrong occurred during racquetball games.

"The guy I played with said he thought I was getting unusually tired at the end of the game," Stoneking said. "I found it hard to keep lifting the racquet to hit the ball."

Stoneking decided to go to the doctor for tests. They all came back negative.

"When I moved to Manhattan in 1984, it really began to happen clearly," Stoneking said. "My equilibrium was off-balance, and my left foot would drop when I walked. One day I was walking down the street in front of the church, and a member saw me and thought I had a drinking problem because I was obviously weaving as I walked."

After many and various tests, Stoneking was diagnosed as having MS. At that time, there wasn't a test just for MS. It was generally a diagnosis by process of elimination.

MS is a chronic disease of the central nervous system that can strike anyone at any time, according to literature from the National MS Society. MS occurs when multiple scars form on the central nervous system. The scars form after an inflammation occurs on the system. As the inflammation goes down, it leaves scars on the nerves.

Normal symptoms to look for are a lack of balance and stability, fatigue, weakness and blurred sight.

There are two types of MS, Stoneking said. Intermittent exacerbation MS advances then stabilizes, sometimes for as long as 30-40 years, before it progresses. The other type is chronic progressive, which never levels off and gets worse all the time.

Heat can contribute to the discomfort of MS victims, Stoneking said.

"If the temperature reaches 80 degrees or above, I really have to take it easy," he said. "It becomes very hard for me to lift my leg. All my strength is gone, and sometimes I have to lie down and rest for the rest of the day. I take a quick, cool shower every morning. If I were to take a warm bath, I wouldn't have enough energy to hoist myself out of the tub."

According to Stoneking, a key to living with MS is learning to pace yourself.

"I do what I want to do as much as I can, but never more than I can," he said. "If I overexert myself one day, the next day I might not be able to get out of bed."

Another important thing to remember about MS, as with any disease, Stoneking said, is that people with the disease have to do things for themselves as much as possible. If they become dependent on others, they will become weaker and even get to the point where they can't do anything, Stoneking said.

People come to Stoneking for advice either because they have MS or someone they know has it. He said one big problem for people with MS is depression.

"It is very easy to become seriously depressed," Stoneking said. "Some people even commit suicide. They become so fatigued and weak that they feel it is either useless to go on or too hard to have any energy to go on another day."

Stoneking said the one good thing about MS for him is that virtually no pain is involved.

"I am never in any pain," he said. "The only thing that comes close is when, after long periods of standing, my legs feel very tired—they almost ache. Some people tell me they have tingling feelings in their legs, like when your foot goes to sleep, but I have never experienced that."

Since Stoneking has had MS, he has become aware of the magnitude of the disease.

"In Manhattan alone, there are 20-30 people with MS," Stoneking said.

"MS is a temperate climate disease that mostly affects white, North European women," he said.

Evolution and Christianity unrelated

"I asserted — and I repeat — that a man has no reason to be ashamed of having an ape for his grandfather. If there were an ancestor whom I should feel shame in recalling it would rather be a man..." British biologist T.H. Huxley (1825-1895)

Biological evolution. This has to be my favorite topic of discussion. For no other reason I suppose, than the fact it cuts to the very heart of a second favorite topic of mine — religion.

Some "believers" would make puerile attempts to incorporate evolutionary theory into the vacuous tenets of Christian dogma. We were entertained last week by one such attempt in an editorial column titled, "Theories can coexist," presented by Collegian columnist John Mussman.

One statement made by the columnist, which should have raised a red flag to anyone remotely familiar with contemporary evolutionary theory, was the reference to Stephan Jay Gould as a "pretty good columnist" for Discover magazine. This is somewhat analogous to stating Isaac Newton was a good mathematician.

Stephan Gould teaches biology and geology at Harvard University, is a world-renowned evolutionary biologist and is the world's leading expert on the Bahamian land snail Cerion. He is widely regarded as an exceptional writer and is considered a brilliant scientist. In 1981, he won the National Book Award and was also one of the first recipients of the MacArthur Foundation "genius" grant.

Gould is most noted among his colleagues as co-author of the theory of "punctuated equilibrium," the admittedly controversial notion that evolution proceeds in relatively unpredictable bursts, rather than the steadily paced gradualism accepted by Darwinian orthodoxy.

Failure by the columnist to recognize or mention any of the above should signal to the informed reader the columnist's unfamiliarity with the subject matter at hand.

However, the most glaring indication of a lack of understanding of basic evolutionary theory, as well as defective logic, was evinced by the columnist's silly portrayal of biological evolution as a creative process utilized by an as yet undefined god, thereby providing, in circular fashion, a scientific basis for a belief in God.

The columnist stated, "But then, how can you deny God? The facts are there..." What facts? I assume he means the argument frequently used by Bible-babbling Christians and nauseum that "everything around us is indicative of God's divine design."

Before I tackle the design argument, let me point out it is illogical to say God is responsible for anything, since Christians, as well as members of any other religious cult, cannot define what "God" represents. What is "God?" For someone to profess a belief in "God," or to say "God" is the creator of the universe, that person must explain what is meant by the word "God." Theists, for thousands of years, have failed to do so.

In fact, a central tenet of Christianity is that

Brad Seabourn

COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

"God" is an unknowable being and exists beyond the framework of natural law — he is "supernatural." But, to exist beyond the sphere of natural law means to exist beyond the scope of human knowledge. This creates a problem for the believer, for to assign definite characteristics to God brings him back within the realm of natural law and thus physical limitations. Therefore, the entire idea of a "supernatural being" is incomprehensible. We are asked to believe in a god that does not fall within the domain of scientific explanation, but we are not told how we can conceive of existence other than "natural" existence.

Theists maintain not just that God's nature is unknowable to man at the present time, but that God's nature is unknowable in principle — man will never understand God. Therefore, if one believes God is inexpressible, as Jews and Christians do, then one quite literally has nothing to say and should simply shut up. To proclaim something is unknowable is to speak from a unique vantage point — one must have total knowledge of everything in the universe to state certain things are inherently beyond the reach of man's knowledge and understanding — a very uncharacteristic human trait.

His brings us to the design argument: that a wonderful thing such as the human eye, because of its complexity and apparent "design" is, in and of itself, proof a God exists. Eighteenth-century theologian William Paley first suggested in his famous treatise "Natural Theology — or Evidences of the Existence and Attributes of the Deity Collected from the Appearances of Nature" (1802) if we were to find a watch upon the ground, because of the intricacy and precision with which it is put together, we would automatically conclude the watch had a maker.

Oxford University zoologist and animal behavioralist Richard Dawkins writes in "The Blind Watchmaker": "The only watchmaker in nature is the blind forces of physics, albeit deployed in a very special way. A true watchmaker has foresight: he designs his cogs and springs, and plans their interconnections, with a future purpose in his mind's eye. Natural selection, the blind, unconscious, automatic process which Darwin discovered, and which we now know is the explanation for the existence and apparently purposeful form of all life, has no purpose in mind. It has no mind and no mind's eye. It does not plan for the future. It has no vision, no foresight, no sight at all. If it can be said to play the role of watchmaker in nature, it is the blind watchmaker."

Dawkins further states Darwinian evolution is the process by which all living things came into existence. Life arose by the gradual, step-by-step transformations from simple beginnings, as Dawkins writes, "from primordial entities sufficiently simple to have come into existence by chance." The driving force is "natural selection," directed by non-random survival. To say evolution is directed by some "creative" process is to contradict biological evolution as we know it. A "creator" creates with foresight and an end result in mind — a "final product" toward which the creative process proceeds.

There is no purpose to evolution, no foresight, no plan, no "final product" — no God. The Judeo-Christian hallucination of a Supreme Creator and the scientific principle of evolution are as different as night and day. They cannot be logically reconciled in any way.

Fundamental to demonstrating the natural universe was in some way manufactured by an intelligent being, regardless of methodology, the god-believer must first demonstrate the existence of an intelligent designer. One must first know a god exists before one can say nature exhibits intelligent design — not, nature exhibits intelligent design, therefore a god exists.

However, using Christian reasoning let me add, "God told me he doesn't exist." So there.

And if you don't believe that, just ask the Easter Bunny — he'll be here in a few weeks.

Legislation necessary to control handguns

Controlling the sale of handguns in the United States should be a priority in Congress as a step toward reducing violent crime in this country.

The availability of handguns and the number of crimes committed with the use of handguns is a clear indication of the need for gun control legislation.

So what is the roadblock to such legislation?

The absence of a gun control law in the United States has less to do with public opinion than it does a strong lobbying organization.

The arguments against gun control range from the ludicrous to the ridiculous, but one thing they all accomplish is to produce hype, in the media as well as the general public.

The popular anti-gun control saying, "If guns are outlawed, only outlaws will have guns," is an interesting use of "out"-dated words, but makes little sense. Why create any law if people are only going to violate it?

A law prohibiting the sale and ownership of handguns may not be the definitive solution to ending violent crime, but it is at least a step in the right direction. Gun control legislation is a legitimate answer to controlling the accessibility of handguns — well worth the expense of adversely affecting responsible handgun owners.

Controlling the ownership of handguns is analogous to other types of controls that historically have been placed on our society by lawmakers. Drugs are a good example. When the possession and use of any item is found to be dangerous not only to the individual, but to those around that person, they lose the right to that activity.

The governments of Great Britain and Japan have controlled the ownership of firearms, and crime statistics for these countries reflect the success of this action.

Because of the limited uses of handguns and their prominence in facilitating violent crimes, Congress needs to ignore the empty arguments of anti-gun control lobbyists. If only outlaws have guns, they will be easier to tell apart from the rest of society ... and easier to put in jail.

Cleaning tips offered

My roommate and I had one of those joyful, roommate-bonding experiences this week. We cleaned. We dug through the mess on the floor to find our extraordinarily ugly carpet. We scraped off the dust on our shelves to find out what color our woodwork was. We waded through the dirty dishes in the kitchen and discovered a countertop and a stainless steel sink, which was actually thoroughly stained. You name it, we cleaned it, and when we were done we got together and made some promises that we won't keep.

"No dishes with milk in them!" Kim declared, carrying a load of them that were just too disgusting to clean down to the dumpster. "No dirty dishes, period. A clean and fresh-smelling kitchen can be ours!"

"We'll all pick up our own stuff so we can't yell when someone else moves it!" added Nicki.

"And we'll keep the table clean so we can use it to eat and study on!" I hollered, moved by the spirit of the moment. "Our mothers would be proud!"

Yeah, right. And I'm going on "Gerald" next week to talk about my love life. Granted, it's been slightly more than 24 hours, and the place is still clean, but I give it until Friday, tops. We've been through this before. By the time the dust settles and the vacuum is returned to the next door neighbors, the floor will once again be mercifully hidden under shoes, clothes, books, Shop Quik cups and endless copies of The Wall Street Journal and the Phillips County Review. I won't even mention what inevitably happens to a kitchen that belongs to four college students. If you have a kitchen, you know, and if you don't, you don't want to. And everybody thinks no one else ever cleans it.

Apartment etiquette — the issue even Emily Post and Miss Manners were afraid to tackle — covered only in your Collegian. Can your roommate loan your bed out to a friend after a night out in Aggieville if you're gone for the weekend? Even if you're just not home yet? How about a relative, acquaintance or total stranger? If the guest is drunk and the worst happens, how do you tell your roommate? Is this something you can say with flowers?

Karin Dell'Antonia

COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

Who calls the landlady to tell her that the chest of drawers you were promised is in four pieces and has been ever since you moved in? Who cleans the drains in the bathroom?

Hey, if I had the answers to everything I'd be God, or at least Dan Rather. But after the past few glorious weeks, I feel qualified to offer some handy dandy household tips that will no doubt be invaluable to you. Tips which, incidentally, are in no way related to my own experiences and therefore should not be taken personally by my wonderful roommates or cause them to do anything weird — like putting the guinea pig in my bed or hanging my belongings off the balcony.

I'll start with the kitchen, the one place we all share but nobody actually spends any time in. It's always a mess. Do you know any roommates who clean up after they cook and before they eat? Really? Dishes are a big issue. In theory, everybody is responsible for their own, but when every single cup in the apartment is dirty, including the Willie mug that got melted on the bottom rack of the dishwasher, it is time to take action. Because these aren't all your cups, you can't just rinse them out and figure that you'll use them for the same thing later (Don't tell me you haven't done that.). You have to either go to Shop Quik and buy another cup, or do something that's going to involve soap. The Good Samaritan apartment-dweller washes all the dishes (The semi-Good Samaritan makes his roommates feel guilty about it later). The normal person washes one cup, pours a drink and clears some dirty cups off a chair to sit down. It's time for a workable solution. I've heard of groups that alternate doing the dishes according to some schedule, which sounds appealing until it's your turn. We got paper cups. Now all we have to do is figure out who takes out the trash.

Speaking of trash, the basic rule is never to throw away anything that could conceivably go through the bag and get all over someone's clothes. This little courtesy will make roommates who decide to take out the trash on the way to a job interview very fond of you. We keep ours in paper bags under the sink because nobody wants to buy a trash can. Food-4-Less lets you sack your own groceries so you can always pick up a few paper sacks there. Beware of Dillons, though. They try to give you plastic.

A big problem is food. As in who ate whose, who drank whose, who bought what and why there isn't any. I suggest developing a taste for anchovies on pizza to protect your leftovers. Cabinets with locks and separate refrigerators just aren't options. Make yourself clear if you have any preferences along these lines.

"My mom sent some food back with me! The chocolate chip brownies are off limits, but I thought I'd share the three-bean casserole."

A barter system also works. You can get as much as half a bag of chips and two pieces of string cheese from a roommate who's having a chocolate fit if you're the one with the Hershey's in the freezer.

This is our first experience with cooking for ourselves, so we're having some fun with that as well. Never trust a roommate with a steaming dish and a big smile.

"I made too much of this and I thought I'd share," could mean just that, or it could mean, "I made it and I hated it. Take it so you have to clean out the dish." That's also the explanation for a lot of leftovers in the fridge. It's either put it in there or "Leave it to soak," which requires that eventually, someone does something about it. You can't buy paper microwave casserole dishes.

Well, looks like I'm out of room. You're on your own with the rest of it. Apartment life is just like it looks in the cartoons, except for the bear. Good luck, and always remember the Golden Rule of Apartment Living: put an air freshener in the kitchen.

Nannies escape from school

Agencies advertise in Midwest for trustworthy students

By Tomari Quinn
Staff Reporter

For a student looking for a change from the day-to-day monotony of college, the idea of getting away to New York, Florida or California for a semester or two may sound too good to be true.

Being a nanny for someone's children can offer this kind of a break.

Tricia Nold, senior in education, said she needed a break from college life, so she became a nanny.

"I didn't feel I was doing what I could in college," Nold said. "I was tired of it, and I wanted something new to do. I applied to Nanny Network and went."

"It was either be a nanny or go home to be a waitress," she said. "I wanted some excitement — something new."

Nold said Nanny Network thoroughly checked her background to ensure that she was suitable nanny material.

"They'll talk to your references," Nold said. "If they need to talk to your references for an hour, they'll talk to your references for an hour. They want you to be what you say you're going to be."

Nold was matched to a family most suited to her needs.

"I wanted two or three kids, no more," she said. "I also said no diapers."

Jeannette Suelter, sophomore in English education, said she also needed the opportunity to get away from school.

"I got really burned when I was a freshman," Suelter said. "It's what I needed at the time, and I think I made the right decision."

Suelter went through the Helping Hands agency and was placed with a family in Brookfield, Conn., for one year. The family had a 5-year-old daughter named Mandy.

Suelter said most of the agencies seem to do a majority of their advertising in the Midwest.

"(The agencies) told me we're more stable and willing to work for less pay," Suelter said. "We do what's required. A lot of the Eastern girls might not settle for that. They're of a different nature, being in the city."

Nold said Midwestern girls in general seem to have a reputation of stability and trustworthiness.

"People looking for nannies like the girls from the Midwest because they have more of a home life," Nold said. "They have more morals and values, and they are trustworthy."

Nold said she worked for a family with two boys under the age of five in Darien, Conn., during the spring semester 1989.

Adjusting to a new home was awkward at first, Nold said, but she soon became like a member of the family.

"The mother became a really close friend, and of course the father did, too," Nold said. "I kind of became a daughter because Helen (the mother) didn't have any girls. They were fairly new to the area as well, so we just took to one another."

Nold said she was required to work fewer hours than other nannies and was paid extra for the additional hours she did work.

"I had two days off each week — always Sunday and one other day of the week, usually Saturday," Nold said. "The parents tried to keep the boys out of my hair in the evenings."

Suelter said her duties included chauffeuring Mandy to and from school, making lunch, giving her baths, playing, putting her to bed, grocery shopping, doing laundry, running errands, cleaning bathrooms, making the beds and helping with supper.

"I put in a lot of hours," Suelter said. "It was like always being on-call."

Nold was given her own room and had full access to a car for her personal use. Suelter had use of one of the two family vehicles.

Suelter said she had problems disciplining a child who was rarely reprimanded by her parents. She said Mandy was a free spirit who could often be strong-willed.

"The main thing I had a problem with is that the parents didn't discipline," she said. "Mandy just got her way, and I wasn't raised like that."

Being responsible for someone else's children can be difficult, Suelter said.

"I don't think being with your own kids is as stressful because you can handle them the way you want," Suelter said. "Trying to live up to somebody else's expectations is hard."

The biggest change for Suelter was adapting to a different ethnic background.

"It can be a different culture," Suelter said. "I lived with a Jewish family and got to learn about the holidays. That was the biggest change — being a part of the Jewish world."

Both nannies reaped travel benefits from their work. During Nold's stay, the family took her to Florida for a week and to Cape Cod, Mass., for 10 days.

Suelter also had the opportunity to share in her family's lifestyle.

"They were rather rich," Suelter said. "We lived along a lake. The whole area was very pretty."

"I had never been further than Colorado before," Suelter said. "I got to go to both coasts, because I went to San Francisco with the family on business."

Saying goodbye was difficult when the end of summer came, Nold said.

"It was hard to leave," Nold said. "I talked to (the family) last week, and I'll go for a visit this summer after graduation."

UFM searches for new names with old initials

By Todd Ubben
Collegian Reporter

The initials may stay the same, but the name will not.

When the 1990 UFM catalog comes out in late August or September, the University and community educational organization will no longer be referred to as University for Man, said Richard Friesen, executive director of UFM.

UFM is taking suggestions for a new name to go with the old initials, Friesen said. UFM is also sponsoring a 250-word essay contest on topics related to the organization.

"What we're trying to do is get some feedback from people about how they view UFM, what they think the mission of UFM should be, what UFM has meant to them over the years and what areas UFM should be going into in the future," Friesen said.

The winning name will be selected by the board of directors in May, Friesen said. The winner will receive an award of $20 in Susan B. Anthony dollars.

The four best essays will be selected, with a winner from each of four categories: University student, high school student, middle school student and community resident, Friesen said. Each winner will receive $20.

The use of the initials UFM instead of University for Man has created some awkward situations in the past, Friesen said.

"Here in Manhattan, people tend to associate certain things with UFM, but when you get outside the area you get a different set of expectations," Friesen said.

The amount of transition involved with the name change will depend on whether or not the name is completely changed, Friesen said.

"One of the things that the board of directors will have to consider in what they decide to do is the familiarity with the initials UFM," he said.

The issue concerning a name change for the organization has been discussed for a long time, he said. Several people thought the "Man" portion of the name excluded women.

"I think some people at some point began to be aware that 'Uni-

Wildcats stumble, 65-60; Mizzou takes Big 8 title

Smith's 28 leads Missouri to 6th league crown in 11 seasons

By Scott Paske
Sports Reporter

COLUMBIA, Mo. — Missouri senior forward Nathan Buntin grabbed the game ball, turned to the famed Tiger cheering section — the Antlers — and rang out his appreciation. "We did it, boys," Buntin yelled.

Indeed they did. For the sixth time in 11 years and seventh time under Coach Norm Stewart, No. 3 Missouri captured the Big Eight Conference title with a 65-60 win over K-State at the Hearnes Center Wednesday night.

Missouri also avenged a 65-58 loss to the Wildcats Feb. 8, in Manhattan, that knocked the Tigers out of the top spot in most national polls.

The Tigers finished the conference season with a 12-2 mark and moved their overall record to 26-3. K-State, still jockeying for position to receive an NCAA Tournament berth, fell to 16-13 and 6-7.

"I told our players that it's a tradition here," Stewart said of capturing the league title. "When you're picked to win and you can come through and win, I think that's extra special."

After the game, Tiger players remained on the Hearnes Center floor, sharing their party with a sellout crowd of 13,300. Four Tiger seniors — Buntin, Lee Coward, John McIntyre and Brad Sutton — initiated the festivities by cutting down the nets. It was the quartet's final home game.

"It sounds like quite a celebration out there," K-State coach Lon Kruger said outside the 'Cats' locker room. "They are very deserving Big Eight champs."

Before the Tigers' post-game fun started, they found themselves trying to shake a pesky bunch of Wildcats.

K-State raced to a 5-0 lead in the opening 40 seconds and controlled the tempo throughout the game. But, a cold-shooting first half, combined with a swarming man-to-man defense by Missouri, helped the Tigers build a 34-25 lead at halftime.

The 'Cats hit just 34 percent in the first 20 minutes. Senior Steve Henson had 13 of his team-high 22 points by intermission on 5-of-7 shooting.

The rest of the team was just 3-of-16.

"We didn't shoot the ball very well, which is something we've worked on all season," Kruger said. "We don't have a lot of time to improve at this point in the year."

Fortunately for K-State, Henson was there on several occasions to keep things close.

"When everyone else is off, you need someone to step up and take some of the pressure off," Kruger said. "I thought Steve did a pretty good job of that."

Unfortunately for the 'Cats, so did Missouri's Doug Smith.

Smith, who played all 40 minutes, was the Tigers' workhorse in the first half, scoring 15 points and matching Henson basket for basket. He finished with 28, his fourth highest total of the season.

"Smith did a good job scoring and re-bouncing for them," Henson said. "That was a big part of the game — the fact that (Smith and Buntin) were so tough in there tonight."

Kruger agreed with Henson's assessment of Smith.

"What he did tonight, he's done all year," Kruger said. "He's been as consistent and productive as any big man in our league."

The Tigers also got help from Coward, who, with a fractured bone in his left hand, was expected to be out of action until the Big Eight Tournament. He scored 10 points, including a three-pointer on his first attempt. The Detroit native spent most of his 25 minutes of playing time tightly guarding Henson.

"He just gives them one more good player," Kruger said. "We walked out in pre-game warmups and saw him out there, so we expected him to play."

Sooners on fire at perfect time

By The Associated Press

NORMAN, Okla. — Oklahoma, it seems, is trying to make sure the nation's No. 1 team remains in the Big Eight Conference.

Last week, Missouri of the Big Eight beat the Tigers on Sunday, knocking them to No. 3 and allowing conference rival Kansas to become No. 1 for the third time this season.

That victory also bumped the Sooners from 10th into a tie for fifth, giving the Big Eight three of the nation's top five teams. On Tuesday, Oklahoma pounded the nation's new No. 1 team, 100-78, ending its home schedule at 16-0 and increasing its winning streak at Lloyd Noble Arena to 45 games.

A victory Saturday at Oklahoma State could propel the Sooners to the top of the poll heading into next week's conference tournament. The ramifications of a big showing in this big stretch were clear to the Sooners.

"We were really fired up playing the number ones because we were number five, and we could get to be one of the top four teams and than a number-one seed," William Davis, who scored 22 points against Kansas, said.

Oklahoma coach Billy Tubbs said his team's strong performances were due more to the fact they were important conference games.

"There's no mystique with playing No. 1 when it's Missouri or Kansas because we play 'em all the time," he said. "That's the most important thing. The rivalry and the inter-conference thing hits you more than No. 1, but this made it special. I'd have to say that."

In the Kansas game, the Sooners went to the press from the outset — something they haven't done of late — and Kansas wound up committing a season-high 26 turnovers.

During one stretch in the first half, when Oklahoma widened its lead from 18-13 to 25-15, Kansas turned the ball over on 10 of 12 possessions. The Sooners eventually opened a 41-17 lead before tiring in the final five minutes of the half.

"We couldn't get shots we needed and they forced us into turnovers," Kansas guard Kevin Pritchard said. "When you do that, your offense comes off your defense, and that's a big part of their game."

Kansas coach Roy Williams said it this way:

"I think they just got after us a little harder than we were ready to be gotten after," he said. "They just got after our tails and we didn't do a good job of taking care of the basketball."

Oklahoma is 22-4 overall and 10-3 in the Big Eight, while Kansas is 27-3 and 10-3 after losing to someone other than Missouri. Each of those Missouri losses knocked the Jayhawks from the No. 1 spot.

Spring training sites still silent

By The Associated Press

WINTER HAVEN, Fla. — There are no ballplayers on the fields. No crack of the bat meeting a ball. The silence is eerie, like that in an old graveyard.

Like the mighty Casey, major league baseball has struck out.

For the second time in 15 years, spring training has been put on hold by a labor dispute between club owners and the players' union.

Normally, March 1 marks the opening of the exhibition season. Players are anxious to get going. Snowbirds from the north get baseball fever only games will temper.

This year ballparks housing 18 major league teams in Florida and eight in Arizona are off limits to players. The owners have imposed a lockout until a new collective bargaining agreement is reached.

With no settlement in sight, clubs are cancelling games at least through March 10.

The exhibition season had been scheduled to begin on Thursday with the Oakland Athletics host to the San Francisco Giants in Phoenix at night in a rematch of the 1989 World Series opponents for the benefit of earthquake victims.

In Florida, three scheduled openers were cancelled. They were the Baltimore Orioles and the Chicago White Sox in Sarasota, the University of Georgia and the Atlanta Braves at West Palm Beach, and Edison College versus the Texas Rangers at Fort Myers.

Other major league clubs had planned to swing into the exhibition season on Friday.

At many major league training sites, such as Chain O'Lakes Park, the spring home of the Boston Red Sox, there are no padlocks.

The gates are open and fans are welcome to visit the 4,000-seat stadium.

A concession stand is open. So is a single window at the box office. Neither is doing much business. The box office expects to get busier, though, as refunds are made with the cancellation of games.

The sign at the Red Sox' players gate says, "Do Not Block Entrance." A few feet away, there's a sign on the clubhouse door: "Authorized Personnel Only."

The signs are not needed. The clubhouse is empty, the door locked. The only people around are members of the ground crew.

Red Sox general manager Lou Gorman spends most of the day on the phone, still looking to make a deal for a starting pitcher and talking to agents about a few unsigned players, such as center fielder Ellis Burks, shortstop Jody Reed and right-hander John Dopson.

"We're not sitting around, there's work for us to do," said Gorman's assistant, Ann Marie Starzyk. "Without baseball, though, there's a strange atmosphere in the entire city."

A handful of minor leaguers work out daily at the Red Sox' farm complex adjacent to the main field.

About a mile away several members of the Boston training roster practice on their own under the leadership of veteran catcher Rich Gedman. They include Dennis Lamp, rookies Scott Cooper, Mickey Pina and Tim Nachring and right-hander Oil Can Boyd, who left Boston to sign as a free agent with the Montreal Expos during the winter.

About 15 miles away, in Lakeland, visitors are welcome at Joker Marchant Stadium, home of the Detroit Tigers.

Players are barred. So catchers Matt Nokes and Mike Heath work out at an old field nearby with pitchers Frank Tanana, Jeff Robinson, Paul Gibson and Mike Henneman.

"It's too bad we have to go through this," says Tanana, a veteran of baseball's labor wars. "What can you say? You know at some point it's going to get settled."

That "some point" isn't helping baseball-hungry fans, though. Neither is helping half-filled motels and thousands of people who depend on revenue generated by spring training. In Florida, that amounts to more than $3 million annually.

N.C. State under point-shaving probe

By The Associated Press

RALEIGH, N.C. — North Carolina State coach Jim Valvano and two former players denied allegations Wednesday of point-shaving in a basketball game against Tampa, a smaller, unranked school, in 1986.

The Greensboro News & Record, quoting unnamed sources, reported that a State Bureau of Investigation probe centered on a Dec. 27, 1986, game between then 12th-ranked N.C. State and the Division II school. The Wolfpack lost, 67-62.

William Dowdy, the SBI's chief investigator, acknowledged that the agency was investigating the N.C. State basketball program — already on two years' probation for NCAA violations — and that part of the probe would include the point-shaving allegations.

However, he added, "There was no information to lead me to believe there was any point-shaving."

"I was never aware of anything going on with point-shaving," Vinny Del Negro, now a guard with the Sacramento Kings, said in a telephone interview from Miami. "I just think we had a bad game."

"I don't know anything," said Bennie Bolton, another member of the '86 team, reached at his home in Washington.

"I heard about it, yeah," said Bolton, who has been playing in Australia. "It was just a case of coming in against a hungry team and we didn't play up to our capabilities."

Valvano, who missed the game at Tampa due to illness, said he never suspected anyone of trying to throw the game.

"If I had, I would have reported it," he said. "But I never reported it because I never had a reason to."

"I don't know what to make of it," said Tampa coach Richard Schmidt, whose 1986-87 team finished 26-6.

"If there was point-shaving going on, why would it be against us? There wasn't even a line on the game, at least not to my knowledge."

Tampa guard Johnny Jones, who scored a game-high 30 points that night, also doesn't believe point-shaving figured in the game's final outcome.

Farewell Britt, Massop, Simmons, Smith — and that other guy

Scott Paske

Chalk Talk

Believe it or not, another love affair will end about 4 p.m. Saturday. That will be the approximate time that the Bramlage Coliseum buzzer will sound, marking the final time five K-State seniors will leave the home court as Wildcats.

Comedian Bob Hope said it best: "Thanks for the memories, guys."

K-State fans have faced days like this many times before. In the last two years, the good-byes have been sweetened by a pair of wins over Missouri. The first, a 92-82 victory, wrote the final chapter in the Ahearn Field House era, and sent eventual NBA rookie of the year Mitch Richmond out in style.

Last year, the 'Cats capped their inaugural season in Bramlage with a 76-75 win on a buzzer-beating tip by one of Saturday's honorees, Tony Massop. Massop's miracle gave the likes of Fred McCoy and Mark Dobbins a fond farewell.

Saturday's game with Nebraska will include the final home introductions of Massop, Lance Simmons, Billy Ray Smith and Reggie Britt. And that other guy — Steve Henson.

The first four have spent their careers trying to silence critics who said they were too small to play inside, too short to challenge the Big Eight Conference's dominant big men.

Massop, Smith and Britt, all junior college transfers, heard that song and dance for two years. Simmons, who sat out the 1987-88 season with a broken kneecap, has put up with it for four.

The quartet has developed a reputation for bullying opposing centers and staking claim to the area around the basket. But all the enforcing they could do in a 100 years would still leave their reputations in the shadow of Henson's.

The thought of Henson pulling off his No. 12 for the final time in Manhattan makes me cringe. Older K-

Staters who share the feeling will probably relate it to the days when Rolando Blackman, Mike Evans, Lon Kruger, Bob Boozer and Ernie Barrett removed their purple and white for good.

After talking with the McPherson native Monday, he acknowledged that the goosebumps will probably be present.

I'm sure it will be sad when it's over," Henson said. "But the most important thing is that we win the game so we can feel good about that last one."

It's that attitude that has made Henson the heart and soul of K-State basketball.

From his freshman year, when North Carolina point guard Kenny Smith praised his efforts, to Tuesday, when Colorado coach Tom Miller said he would put him on his dream team, Henson has had a storybook career.

He will finish fourth on K-State's all-time scoring list and is tops in steals, assists, three-point goals and free-throw percentage. Heading into Wednesday's game with Missouri, Henson had hit 341 of 381 career free throws for 89.5 percent.

Henson's basketball stats are mind-boggling enough to talk about for hours.

Despite a slide in his season scoring average from 18.5 a year ago to 16.3 this season, K-State coach Lon Kruger has bluntly responded to accusations of an off year. "I'm not going to trade him," he said.

When asked about his most memorable games at K-State, Henson mentioned the 73-70 win over Purdue in the semi-final of the 1988 Midwest Regional at Pontiac, Mich. The victory put the 'Cats in a position to qualify for the 50th Final Four, but eventual national champion Kansas ended the dream with a 71-58 win in the following round.

Henson also placed a 69-62 win over third-ranked Oklahoma in 1988 high on his list.

"We did things in that game about as well as we could have," Henson said. "If there's such a thing as playing a game perfectly, maybe in that one we did."

The other four seniors were not part of those wins, but they've had their moments as well. In addition to Massop's tip-in against Missouri, he struck again in the season opener this year against Florida State.

When the 6-foot-8 center gave the 'Cats a 71-70 win with another buzzer-beater, radio play-by-play announcer Mitch Holthus nicknamed him Tip-in Tony.

Massop has also held the distinction of being the team barber, and is responsible for freshman Ski Jones' unique hairstyle.

Simmons, a St. Louis native, played an important role in K-State's 71-70 win at Kansas last season. He pulled down 10 rebounds in his first start of the year.

Simmons will be remembered by many for his underhand scoop shot Feb. 8 that helped the 'Cats pull away from No. 1 Missouri. He is the last K-State player who was recruited by former coach Jack Hartman.

Britt, a transfer from Coffeyville Community College, has been a crowd favorite for two years. Despite a limited bench role this season, Britt's inside play against Tulsa helped K-State to a hard-fought 75-69 win. In that game, the 6-foot-6 Flint, Mich., native scored a career-high 18 points.

The memory banks of several K-State fans will undoubtedly be filled with visions of Britt's thunderous dunks.

Smith, a junior college teammate of Oklahoma's Skeeter Henry, turned in his best performance last season in an overtime win at Wichita State. He came off the bench to score 14 points, including some pivotal baskets late in the game to spark the 73-71 victory.

The Garland, Texas, native connected on 83 percent of his free throw attempts last season to make K-State one of the better teams in the conference from the charity stripe.

With the task of earning an NCAA Tournament berth still at hand, Kruger was appreciative, but short on words of wisdom for his senior class.

"We'll wish them a little extra good luck in their last home game," Kruger said. "But we really won't approach it a whole lot differently."

Raise the roof when announcer Brad Stauffer presents these five to you for the final time Saturday — they deserve it.

Blues, gospel singer to perform in Union

By Julie Wakeman
Collegian Reporter

Katherine Davis and Sidney James Wingfield will join forces at 8 p.m. Thursday in the K-State Union Forum Hall for blues, jazz and gospel music.

Davis is a blues, jazz and gospel singer. She will sing songs like "Stormy Monday Blues" and "Pennies from Heaven." Wingfield plays piano and sings, although he doesn't call himself a blues purist.

Wingfield travels with Davis often during college tours, but Davis has her own band. In 1982, she was in an off-broadway musical, "In the House of the Blues." She said she traveled with 35 others during the musical, all over the United States, Canada and Japan.

Both have made music and entertainment their profession. Davis included being a full-time mother in her job description.

Davis began singing gospel in church as a child. She said she has always had an ear for music, and as a little girl she loved to sing.

"I used to sit behind the couch and sing so it looked like the couch was singing," Davis said. "Everyone called it the musical couch."

The blues have been a part of Davis' life since she was a child when her parents gave weekend fish-fries and listened to the blues. She said at that time, her peers told her she was supposed to like "today's" music, not blues.

Bessie Small and Billie Holiday were Davis' blues influences, but she relates all of her singing style to Dinah Washington.

Sherwood Music Conservatory in Chicago is where Davis studied classical music and eventually got into jazz. She sang opera and jazz while studying.

Davis said she has prepared herself for the blues and jazz world enough so she could sing with any band around the world.

Wingfield has performed regularly at the Cotton Club in Chicago and plays at other clubs as well as traveling with Davis and doing some of his own shows.

"I started playing the piano by ear when I was 7 years old," Wingfield said. "I would just listen to people like Little Richard and Fats Domino and try to play it."

Wingfield said music began as relaxation for him, but eventually he needed it to keep food on the table. He began playing professionally about 15 years ago.

Wingfield played in the band "Big Twist and the Mellow Fellows" and later with Luther Allison, who is now in Paris.

"When I was with Luther, I spent a lot of time in Europe," Wingfield said. "That's where I did most of my recording and caught the blues bug."

Wingfield said his style is a little more contemporary than other blues.

"I'm sort of a blues outlaw," he said.

Wingfield is currently taking piano lessons to better his career.

Police identify robbery suspect

By The Associated Press

OTTAWA — The man killed by a police officer minutes after Monday's robbery of the First National Bank served time in prison for a similar robbery in Hutchinson in 1974.

The man was John Roy Bird, 37, of rural Great Bend, Franklin County Attorney Wendell Barker said Wednesday morning. Bird's identity was established from fingerprints Tuesday, and witnesses said he was the man who took an undisclosed amount of money Monday afternoon.

Ottawa Officer Bruce Hanson, 35, who was wounded before fatally shooting Bird, was in fair condition Wednesday at the University of Kansas Medical Center in Kansas City, Kan.

Barker said Bird fired five shots from a .44-caliber revolver, with four of them hitting Hanson. He said Bird was hit by two shots, "one of which destroyed his aorta."

The officer, who was assisting at the scene of a firefighting exercise about a dozen blocks from the bank, stopped Bird's car after it sped through the area and ran over some fire hose.

Witnesses said Bird got out and started shooting, and Hanson, although hit, emptied his 9mm semi-automatic pistol, which holds 14 shots in a clip.

The composition program in the Department of English is coordinating an essay contest that is open to all K-State students.

The essays for Earth Day should be expository and argumentative in nature, delineating a given issue and arguing for a particular stand on it. Possible local subject matter includes the Fort Riley expansion, landfill alternatives and recycling pilot programs. National and international issues such as oil spills, ozone depletion or pillaging of the rain forest are potential topics.

The essays must be between 750 and 1,000 words. The winning essay may be published in the Collegian.

Details about Earth Day and the corresponding essay contest may be obtained by contacting Professor Elizabeth Dodd at 532-6716.

The exhibit has a wide variety of contemporary pieces depicting Nebraska history.

The artwork makes social statements through the rendering of nostalgic reminiscences. It describes Midwestern life both past and present.

■ David Littrell, cello, and Robert Edwards, piano, perform an all-Beethoven cello and piano sonata recital at 3 p.m. Sunday in the All Faiths Chapel Auditorium.

Beethoven's sonatas for cello and piano are the earliest works where the keyboard and cello share an equal partnership in the presentation of musical ideas.

Film fails to be definitive statement

'House Made of Dawn' ignores vital issues dealing with the plight of American Indians

Mark Schreiner

REVIEW

"House Made of Dawn," although based on the Pulitzer Prize-winning fiction novel of the same name by N. Scott Momaday, fails to provide social commentary, entertainment or anything except for yawns.

Produced and directed by Richardson Morse, "House Made of Dawn" centers on Able, played by Larry Littlebird. We meet him entering a city mission in Los Angeles. He has been cast out of his reservation because he killed an albino of his tribe.

In one of omnipresent flashbacks, the albino defeats Able in the village's chicken run, during which the contestants try to grab a chicken buried to its neck in sand while galloping past on horseback. After the albino beats Able to the chicken, he beats Able on the head with it.

Able believes the albino, symbolizing the white man, could change himself into a snake at will. When Able knifes the albino, Morse switches repeatedly to a scene of an eagle killing a snake, one of the film's many blunt symbols.

Able's name obviously refers to the brother killed by Cain in the Bible. Able himself is brutalized without a whimper by a succession of foremen, managers and policemen.

Once in Los Angeles, Able makes friends with Benaly, played by Jay Varela. They attend the magical rites of a warlock, played by John Saxon. They eat vegetables as a sort of Communion. Inexplicably, the secretary at the city mission, played by Judith Doty, falls in love with Able.

Able's character is responsible for none of this. His only initiative in the film is killing the albino. When he's not flashing back, he's staring into space or being filmed in slow motion or in freeze-frame.

Able seems to sleepwalk through his life, pensively considering the hopelessness of his fate. He can sing while his face remains expressionless and his body leans casually against a railing, as if his body, feelings and mind are unconnected.

When people talk to Able, it is as though their words are patients in a dentist's office who must first talk to the receptionist and then take a seat in the waiting room.

Perhaps Able's reticence is meant to symbolize Native Americans' inability to communicate their problems today. But even if this is true, he trips on the same problem he's trying to solve. Representatives should have louder voices and grander gestures than the people they represent.

Perhaps the constant flashbacks to the time when Able's grandfather taught him to catch eagles and shoot deer are meant to symbolize the golden age when Native Americans lived with the land, when their house was made of dawn, and their porch was made of evening.

Benaly makes the film's moral statements. When Able asks Benaly if he ever wants to go home to the reservation, Benaly says, "Hell no! There's just a bunch of old people dying."

In a scene reminiscent of George and Lenny in Steinbeck's "Of Mice and Men," Able asks Benaly, "What's it going to be like?"

Benaly responds, "We'll get up real early in the morning, way out on the mesa somewhere, and we'll watch the sun rise on the land and see how it is out there and how it was. And we'll sing the old songs. And we'll get drunk, and it will be the last time. And we'll get drunk together."

"House Made of Dawn" does not live up to its billing as "the definitive statement on the plight of the American Indian which must be seen by everyone concerned with this vital issue." Film has yet to exploit this issue. There is no Native American "The Color Purple" or "Do the Right Thing."

"House Made of Dawn" is a UPC Kaleidoscope film and will be shown at 3:30 and 7 p.m. today in the Little Theatre. Although the version released in 1976 lasted 92 minutes, the version to be shown lasts 75. It would be rated PG-13.

Hostage's sister keeps faith for a safe return

By The Associated Press

LONDON — Nearly five years after Terry Anderson was taken hostage in Lebanon, his sister said Wednesday she believes the United States, Iran and Syria are moving on a common track toward freedom for all 18 Western captives.

"I'm just going to pray and hold my breath that nothing disastrous occurs before this can reach fruition," said Peggy Say, winding up a 2½-week trip to Europe and the Middle East that she called a "humanitarian pilgrimage."

"My personal sense is, not tomorrow, not next week, maybe not next month, but certainly soon," she said. Anderson, 42, is the chief Middle East correspondent of The Associated Press. He was kidnapped in Beirut on March 16, 1985.

Say's journey with an Associated Press delegation included meetings with U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar, Pope John Paul II, Palestine Liberation Organization leader Yasser Arafat and two Syrian ministers.

"I think that with my reassurances that the American administration is doing everything it can do, that the Syrians are certainly pledged 100 percent with their commitment to resolve it, and with the statements coming out of Tehran, to say nothing of the mood in the world today, it just gives me a feeling of hope," she said. Say spoke at a news conference after meeting Archbishop of Canterbury Robert Runcie, whose personal envoy Terry Waite was kidnapped in Beirut on Jan. 20, 1987, while trying to negotiate the release of Western hostages.

"I must admit that I feel some responsibility and was just devastated when Terry Waite was kidnapped," she said. "I hope when all the hostages come out, certainly I hope Terry Waite is with them."

Eve Keatley, a spokeswoman for the archbishop, said Runcie "was very pleased to hear of Peggy's growing optimism after her trip."

Say concluded her trip at a private dinner with the families of Waite and other British hostages, and Scottish relatives of American hostage Thomas Sutherland. The hostages missing in Lebanon include eight Americans, four Britons, two West Germans, two Swiss, an Irishman and an Italian.

After meetings in Syria with Foreign Minister Farouk al-Sharaa and Information Minister Mohammed Salman, she said, "I have no doubts about Syria's commitment. Certainly, if anyone wants it over with more than the United States, it's certainly Syria."

She said she found it "very, very encouraging" that Syrian television carried a lengthy interview with her, in which she said relations with the United States would not improve until the hostages are freed.

Leaders discuss recent events

Superpowers converse long distance on Nicaraguan, European situations

By The Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — President Bush telephoned Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev Wednesday for a "very constructive" discussion on the political shakeup in Nicaragua. Later, Bush praised Gorbachev as a bold leader advocating daring reforms.

In what was believed to be only their third telephone conversation, the two leaders also discussed issues of European security, including German reunification, and preparations for a superpower summit this summer, according to U.S. accounts and the Soviet news agency Tass.

Bush called the Soviet president before setting out on a cross-country campaign trip, with stops at New York's Staten Island and San Francisco, and a weekend meeting in Palm Springs, Calif., with Japanese Prime Minister Toshiki Kaifu.

"From Moscow to Managua, change is in the air," Bush said in remarks prepared for a speech in San Francisco at a fund raiser for Republican Sen. Pete Wilson, running for governor.

Bush said, "The world has undergone another upheaval, but this time there is no war and there are fewer tyrants in the world than before."

Describing his telephone conversation and predicting future talks of the same kind Bush said, "My mind went back to those days when a talk of this nature would not have been possible."

"The mood of the day back then — confrontation, rhetorical overkill, tensions bordering on hostility. Today's talk was so different — no polemics."

"In the Revolution of '89, an idea overcame armies and tanks, and that idea is democracy," Bush said.

"This has been true in the East. Now it is becoming true throughout the Western Hemisphere, first in Panama after Operation Just Cause (the U.S. invasion to topple Manuel Antonio Noriega) and now, at long last, for the brave people of Nicaragua," Bush said.

"Could we have asked for more?" Bush discussed his conversation with Gorbachev as he flew to New York to campaign for Republican Susan Molinari, who is hoping to succeed her father, former Rep. Guy Molinari, in Congress.

Bush said he assured Gorbachev he was committed to moving ahead on arms control negotiations under a timetable set up by Secretary of State James A. Baker III and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze.

The administration hopes for major progress this year on treaties dealing with strategic nuclear weapons, conventional arms in Europe and chemical weapons.

"It can be beneficial for someone to get in the work place and then come back to school."

The standards would be higher for out-of-state students. They would have to either have a 2.5 grade point average in a pre-college curriculum, score 23 or better on the ACT or graduate in the top third of their class.

The bill also allows any community college student with a 2.0 grade point average after completing 24 hours of credit to enroll at a state university.

In addition, the bill allows each university to make exceptions for a number of students, equal to 15 percent of an incoming freshman class.

Hurt said the 15 percent window was a concern because it could be misused.

It was a way to get the best and brightest in college, such as student athletes, handicapped students, foreign students and poor students, Hurt said. However, she said, lazy students with rich parents also could be allowed through the window.

Coffman said a window is necessary for the admission of special categories of students with special skills.

Many of those who spoke against the bill during a debate that lasted almost 4½ hours said it would prevent poor Kansans and minority students from attending college. They said Kansas should be proud that their state is the only one in the nation with open admissions to state universities.

Rep. Steve Wiard, D-Council Grove, called Kansas "the state of opportunity" in an emotional speech during which he pounded the speaker's podium repeatedly.

"If you give those kids a chance, you'll be surprised," he said. "I think versity for Man' began to sound exclusive," Friesen said.

The word Man was used in the organization name as a universal term meaning people, said Sue Maes, associate director for the Division of Continuing Education and former director of UFM.

Maes said 'for' was a key word used in the name, because it hinted at learning enhancement with no need for prerequisites. 'University' ties in the fact that the organization reaches the students, faculty and community.

"If this organization were started today, there's no doubt in my mind that it would not be named University for Man," Friesen said. "It wouldn't be acceptable."

UFM is now in its 22nd year. Two continuing education courses, "The Creative Experience" and "Toward The Year 2000," were presented in the fall of 1967. UFM started the following semester with seven seminars and workshops.

A 1968 brochure states the goal of UFM: "The purpose of education is to make life more meaningful. Here is your chance to meet other people who get excited about ideas, about being alive."

of the country," Exdell said. "We won't give aid to the cooperatives or worker-owned factories, and I doubt health care projects will receive much money either."

"Clearly, we owe a lot to that country. The loss of life has been horrible," Exdell said. "But I have mixed feelings about what good U.S. money will do and whose hands will control it."

a good teacher gives a kid the benefit of the doubt. I think a good Legislature gives the people of Kansas the benefit of the doubt."

Supporters of the measure said it would not prevent anybody from going to college. Instead, it would encourage them to be prepared for college classes and encourage local school districts to improve programs.

A lot of information surfaced during the debate, Hurt said, which showed that colleges can and do attract good students on their own initiative.

"Most freshmen at K-State would have a higher grade point average than is required," she said. "They may not have as high an ACT score, but only one of the three is required for admission."

The House adopted only one amendment to the measure, one that said the regents could not require completion of a foreign language course as a part of its pre-college curriculum. The amendment was designed to win the votes of some rural legislators.

Originally, the amendment failed, 61-63, but House members later voted to reconsider that action and then approved the amendment, 68-56.

Rep. Kerry Patrick, R-Leawood, a supporter of restrictive admissions and a vocal critic of House Republican leaders, said he had been told by the leaders that the bill would fail without the amendment.

"Being the leadership lackey that I am," he said, "I'm willing to take two or three slices of bread off the loaf if I can't get the loaf."

The ruling could help the government's prosecution of Noriega on drug-trafficking and money-laundering charges from a 12-count indictment handed down in February 1988.

After U.S. troops invaded Panama in December to capture Noriega, he surrendered and was brought to the United States to stand trial in Florida.

There has been speculation Noriega's lawyers might argue U.S. armed forces illegally seized evidence in the invasion.

"I'd hate to think this issue could be decided on a technicality," he said.

David Mayes/Staff

Members of the St. George fire department put out the last remaining embers of a Thursday afternoon grass fire that occurred in a pasture northeast of Manhattan.

Fire destroys pasture

Chainsaw spark apparent cause of blaze

By The Collegian Staff

A grass fire apparently caused by a spark from a chainsaw burned through 15 acres of pasture near Wamego Thursday.

Firefighters from Pottawatomie Rural Fire District 10 of St. George were able to extinguish the fire shortly after their arrival, said Fire Chief Milton Toy.

No one was injured in the fire which originated near a creekbed 2 miles north of U.S. 24 on Flint Rock Road.

Toy said he would not confirm what caused the fire until fire officials had completed an investigation.

Arnold Hedke, a resident of rural Wamego, said the fire had started in an area of dead grass from a spark thrown from a chainsaw.

"This dead grass is pretty dry," Hedke said. "A spark from a saw (started the fire)."

One of the men working in the pasture at the time of the fire said he and another man attempted to extinguish the fire before it spread into the pasture. The man, who asked his name not be used, said the dry grass and gusty winds prevented them from stopping the fire from spreading.

"It started behind us," he said. "No one had seen it start, and it didn't take long to spread."

Toy said he received the fire alarm at 3:41 p.m. District 10 responded with two fire trucks and was able to bring the fire under control.

St. George firefighter Gary Roberts makes his way over some rough terrain. The grass fire burned about 15 acres.

House approves notification bill

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The House tentatively approved Thursday an abortion notification bill after watering down Gov. Mike Hayden's proposal during a grueling, 8½-hour debate.

Representatives are scheduled to take a final vote Friday on the measure, which requires a doctor to notify another adult when a girl under 16 seeks an abortion. The House advanced the bill to that final vote on a 74-48 vote, meaning it probably has enough votes to pass.

The measure originally was a strict parental notification bill, requiring that doctors notify both parents in writing 48 hours in advance when a girl under 18 seeks an abortion. It also made it a Class D felony for doctors to ignore the requirement.

However, the House amended the bill so that now it applies to girls under 16. A doctor could notify a parent, but he could also notify a blood relative older than 21 or a member of the clergy. The notification could be oral or in writing.

In addition, a girl could go to court to avoid any notification, and there would be no criminal sanctions for doctors who ignore the notification requirement.

"Am I totally satisfied?" asked Rep. Artie Lucas, R-Highland, a leading voice among anti-abortion legislators. "No, but at the same time, I knew we were going to have to make compromises."

Abortion rights legislators expressed disappointment. Some of them said some supporters' votes were political, designed to appease a vocal minority or to help Hayden politically.

"What we're passing, it seems to me, is a political placebo," said House Minority Leader Marvin Barkis, D-Louisburg. "It's a cover. It's a place to hide."

Hayden proposed a parental notification law that would apply to girls under 16. It would have required notification of one parent, orally or in writing. It also contained a judicial bypass.

Rep. Robert Vancrum, R-Overland Park, offered Hayden's plan as an amendment to the stricter notification bill. It passed, 77-47.

The House then voted to water the measure down further.

Rep. Al Lane, R-Mission Hills, offered an amendment to increase the number of people who could be notified, and it passed, 65-51.

Rep. Robert Krehbiel, D-Pretty Prairie, offered an amendment to allow parents to sign forms that waived their right to be notified and to have that form placed in a daughter's medical records. It passed, 117-6.

Rep. Jayne Aylward, R-Salina, offered an amendment that would require parents of the pregnant teenager to financially support her and her child if until the girl turns 18, if the parents can afford to do so. The amendment made an exception for pregnant teenagers who get married. It passed, 82-40.

Still, some opponents of parental notification saw the bill as too harsh. Rep. Gary Blumenthal, D-Merriam, told his colleagues that he wanted to speak to only about 15 of them.

"There are times when we allow ourselves to be intimidated," he said. "Do not react out of fear. Do not vote because a noisy minority is making you feel fearful."

He also told his colleagues that anti-abortion forces will not be satisfied with passage of a parental notification bill.

"You are mistaken," he said. "This is the first step. We will see this issue again and again and again."

Supporters of parental notification said they were not pushing an anti-abortion measure.

"The state has an important interest in protecting parental rights," Lucas said. "It is important that we try to

Health programs jeopardized

Bill to ban abortions questioned by doctors

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A faculty member at the University of Kansas Medical Center pleaded Thursday with a legislative subcommittee not to endorse a bill banning abortions at the Kansas City, Kan., facility, saying it could destroy the obstetrics and gynecology program.

Dr. John Calkins, associate professor of obstetrics and gynecology, said physicians will leave the program and its accreditation will be jeopardized because banning abortions would limit radically the range of services physicians practicing there could offer.

Calkins told a subcommittee of the Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee that his father founded the program at the KU Medical Center, the first west of the Mississippi River.

"I'd hate to see anything jeopardize it. I really think this would jeopardize the program," Calkins said. "We're just going to keep chasing people out of doing obstetrics."

Marlin Rein, Medical Center budget director, told the subcommittee the bill would threaten the financial integrity of the hospital at the Medical Center because high-risk pregnancy patients no longer will be referred to its physicians.

"The moral issue (of abortion) is separate," Rein said. "The issue of (this bill) is one of viability of our program. If our program operates on a level playing field (with similar programs), we'll survive. But if you put us on an unlevel playing field, we won't survive."

Rein said that of all the institutions under state control, the Medical Center is the one that should not "have any shackles placed on it."

He suggested the subcommittee recommend spending about $5.6 million to replace the potentially lost revenue if it endorses the bill. That is income the program and the hospital generate annually, he said.

"We've got to protect the financial integrity of the Medical Center," Rein said. "This is the most restrictive bill of any in the country."

He also said the bill would jeopardize the neo-natal program at Wesley Medical Center in Wichita, which the KU Medical School operates.

The subcommittee is studying a bill that would prohibit employees of the Medical Center from participating in abortions, a step that the 1989 Webster decision by the U.S. Supreme Court allows.

It took no action Thursday, and Chairman Ed Reilly, R-Leavenworth, said it is searching for ways to restrict abortions at the Medical Center without doing harm to the quality programs that it offers.

"I don't think the bill has a prayer of getting out of the Senate the way it's written, from what I hear," Reilly said. "That's why we want to see if there are amendments that will make it better."

Sen. Norma Daniels, R-Valley Center, a member of the subcommittee who opposes abortion, said the goal is to reduce the number of abortions at the Medical Center.

"I have trouble with the idea that we need to keep the patient load up by doing abortions," she said. "We're not trying to jeopardize the high-risk cases, but we want something in there that says they are really necessary."

The subcommittee has evidence that the number of abortions performed at the Medical Center declined 6 percent between 1988 and 1989, and that 1,700 babies were delivered there, more than 1,000 of which followed high-risk pregnancies.

Fine Arts/Athletic Fee declared constitutional

By Kirk Caraway
Collegian Reporter

Tribunal upheld the constitutionality of the Fine Arts/Athletic fee Thursday.

In a brief written statement, Tribunal rejected arguments by Tom Jones, junior in political science, that Student Senate acted improperly in passing the fee last October. Tribunal wrote, "the concerns made by the petitioner were of a political nature and not constitutionally based."

"He had some good points," said Bill Nelson, the acting chancellor of Tribunal. "They just didn't come into conflict with the constitution."

In reaction to the decision, Jones said he was glad Tribunal heard the case, but he didn't fully understand the reasons for its decision.

"They may be saying it's raising a political question and to make a decision in this area would be stepping on Senate's toes," Jones said. "I'd like to see a more comprehensive statement of their reasons. This seems more like a brush-off than an explanation."

Jones argued to Tribunal whether Senate had the power to pass the fee after it was defeated in a student referendum. Jones contended Senate gave up its power over the issue when it sent the fee to a vote by the student body.

Jones also argued that the fee had to be passed by a student referendum because the athletic department may use the money to finance the construction or renovation of buildings or facilities. Such a use for student fee money is specifically restricted by the SGA constitution under section 509-D.

Jones said the athletic department falls under this rule because it operates several facilities and is paying off the debt incurred by the construction of Bramlage Coliseum.

Student Body President Todd Johnson, who defended the fee's constitutionality, said Jones was taking the constitution out of context and was pleased with Tri-

Telefund exceeds previous donations

By Tammy Rose
Collegian Reporter

More than $650,000 was raised in the 12th Annual KSU Foundation Telefund, said Beth Mennelle, assistant director of annual giving.

This year's total reached $660,345, exceeding last year's total by more than $72,000, Mennelle said. The College of Arts and Sciences raised the most money, earning $163,382.

The Telefund total does not include the KSU Athletic Department's share, Mennelle said. The athletic department will conduct its own telefund in April.

The Telefund was established to benefit the eight academic colleges through scholarships and educational materials, Mennelle said. She attributed its success to the number of volunteers who call alumni for pledges.

"It's incredible that we have such support from teachers and students," Mennelle said. "It's because of the volunteers that we are where we are today."

She said about 60 students, faculty and staff members from the different colleges gathered on various nights to make phone calls. The volunteers phoned alumni from across the country, including Alaska and Hawaii, to ask for pledges.

While some alumni said they weren't interested or just couldn't afford it at the time, many alumni did agree to give money, Mennelle said. Alumni could pledge any amount of money and don't have to send in the pledge until June 30, 1990.

"We have excellent participation and excellent support from local sponsors and alumni," Mennelle said.

The majority of the funds collected go to scholarships and the remainder is spent for educational materials or other expenses within the college, she said. Every college has increased its preceding year's total by at least $2,000. The largest increase was $12,347 in the College of Arts and Sciences.

The University has the largest volunteer telephone fund-raising program of any college in the United States. Mennelle said telefund raises more money in one month than some schools do in one year.

"The students and faculty, with their enthusiastic support and dedication, have accepted this challenge and consistently make KSU the nation's premiere volunteer phone campaign," said Rusty Andrews, director of annual giving.

Prizes for the first pledge made and most pledges received were awarded during each night of the Telefund, Mennelle said. At the end of the telefund, prizes were awarded to the volunteer who brought in the most money. The prizes ranged from K-State bumper stickers to a $200 shopping spree at Manhattan Town Center. Many of the prizes were do-

Hotel fire kills 16 in Egypt

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Fire broke out in a luxury hotel's tent restaurant early Thursday and wind-whipped flames leaped to the main building, killing 16 people and injuring about 70. At least one American was among the dead.

Frantic guests at the six-story Heliopolis Sheraton jumped out windows and clambered down bedsheets that were tied together. Many of the injuries were broken bones suffered in falls.

U.S. Embassy spokeswoman Marcelle Wahba said one American was killed, but she refused to release any information on the victim. Three Americans were seriously injured, said police Brig. Abdel-Rehim el-Kenawy.

The blaze broke out at 1 a.m. and burned for nine hours. By early afternoon, after the last flames had been put out and the smoke extinguished, guests were returning to retrieve belongings. As people carried soggy luggage out of the ruined building, rescue teams were seen carrying out at least four bodies.

The hotel northeast of Cairo had no fire alarms or a sprinklers, and many guests heard of the fire from other guests.

Beirut fighting intensifies

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Gen. Michel Aoun's tanks pierced the defenses of the rival Christian militia in savage fighting Thursday in east Beirut as the showdown entered its second month.

Police said at least 14 people were killed and 50 wounded in seven assaults by Aoun's American-made M-48 tanks against the urban lines of Samir Geagea's Lebanese Forces militia.

By police count, the fight for control of the 310-square-mile Christian enclave has killed 708 people and wounded 1,984 since it broke out Jan. 30.

A police spokesman reported minor progress by Aoun's tanks, which advanced over nine hours across the open terrain to the edge of the urban area of Nabaa, a pocket held by the Lebanese Forces.

The advance shattered a 12-day lull that followed a cease-fire called by a neutral mediation committee.

"The tanks are at the entrances to the narrow alleys" of the densely populated low-income district, the spokesman said.

He said it would be "extremely dangerous" to push the tanks into the slum-like district, where they would be easy targets for Geagea's experienced street fighters using armor-piercing rocket-propelled grenade launchers.

'Skinheads' found guilty

DALLAS (AP) — Five members of a white supremacist "skinhead" group were found guilty today of conspiring to harass minorities.

The all-white jury deliberated for about four hours over two days before finding five so-called "skinheads" were guilty of racially motivated hate crimes against Jews, blacks and Hispanics.

All five were convicted of two counts of conspiring to violate the civil rights of minorities by vandalizing a Jewish synagogue and harassing blacks and Hispanics at a Dallas park. The incidents occurred in 1988.

Each of the charges carries up to 10 years in prison and a $250,000 fine. U.S. District Judge Barefoot Sanders said the earliest possible sentencing date would be April 19. All five remained in custody.

Wood has already been sentenced to 10 years in prison and fined $5,000 by a state judge for spraying swastikas and anti-Semitic slogans on the synagogue, Temple Shalom in Dallas.

Earthquake damage assessed

UPLAND, Calif. (AP) — Small cities counted the cost of broken windows and fallen bricks as dozens of aftershocks continued to rattle the region Thursday, the day after a strong earthquake jolted much of Southern California.

The town of Pomona alone suffered at least $20 million in damages, officials said.

Safety inspectors in Los Angeles and neighboring San Bernardino counties, which nestle against the San Gabriel and San Bernardino mountains, began checking gas and water lines along with older, unreinforced brick and masonry buildings.

Wednesday's 3:43 p.m. quake measured 5.5 on the Richter scale and was centered three miles northwest of Upland, 40 miles east of Los Angeles.

Dozens of aftershocks continued to shake Southern California on Thursday, with the day's strongest, magnitude 3.0, at 12:55 p.m.

Fire destroys 4 businesses

KANSAS CITY, Kan. (AP) — Fire that broke out in the city's downtown area early Thursday destroyed a large hardware store and three other businesses.

Dennis Cranor, arson investigator for the Kansas City, Kan., Fire Department, said it appeared there were three separate fires. He said it was of suspicious nature and he was seeking assistance from the Eastern Kansas Multi-County Task Force of fire investigators, as well as the state fire marshal and U.S. Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms officials.

A police officer on patrol spotted the fire at 1:26 a.m. It was under control by 6:45 a.m., but Cranor said he expected firefighters to remain at the scene most of the day. Several streets were closed off to motorists and pedestrians.

Two firefighters were injured from falling on the ice. The fire destroyed Tucker's Hardware, a 45,000-square foot complex, Bestway Rental, Hamilton's Shoe Repair Leather Goods, and Preacher's 10, a private club.

Cranor was not ready to make a damage estimate, but Bob Magness, owner of Tucker's, estimated his loss at more than $1.5 million.

Magness said he would try to keep the business in Kansas City, Kan., although he said it would be hard to find enough space to match what he had.

Jury hears 11 witnesses

JUNCTION CITY, Kan. (AP) — Former Emporia minister Thomas Bird said he was in love with his secretary and would kill her husband, a witness testified Thursday at Bird's first-degree murder trial.

Darrell Carter, an Emporia carpenter, was one of 11 people called to the stand during the second day of the trial in Geary County District Court.

Bird, 39, already serving life in prison for the 1983 murder of his wife, Sandra, is now being tried in the death later that year of Martin K. Anderson. Anderson's wife, Lorna, pleaded guilty in November 1988 to second-degree murder, saying Bird was the masked gunman who killed Anderson in a field along a road in Geary County.

Carter testified that he met with Bird and Lorna Anderson at Bird's Faith Lutheran Church in May of 1983, and that they sought his assistance in killing Anderson.

Carter said he indicated he would have nothing to do with such a plan and asked Bird why he didn't counsel Anderson to get a divorce. He said he believed that it was Bird who replied that Anderson said she didn't want a divorce, that there was a large insurance policy and that she wanted the money.

Students warned against measles

By David Frese
Collegian Reporter

Lafene Chief of Staff Dr. Larry Moeller warned students to take every precaution to make sure they are immunized against the disease.

"Call your parents, call your hometown doctor, call your county health department to check your risk," he said.

A second case of what is suspected to be measles was reported in Manhattan Tuesday.

Charles Murphy, Riley County health officer, said a high school student, who was associated with the student who had the first case of measles, has contracted what appears to be the same disease.

"The second case has not been confirmed, but we feel the diagnosis will be measles," Murphy said.

These are the only two cases reported so far in Kansas this year, but Murphy said he would rather not have had any.

"Measles is a highly contagious disease," he said. "Our current knowledge is that any person vaccinated before 15 months of age is at risk."

"The new recommendation is that if you were born after 1956, you should have two separate vaccinations as of this point in your life," Moeller said. "The vaccine of the mid-1960s was not effective in giving protection, and the 'good' vaccine of the late 1960s has a failure of 5 percent or more."

Moeller said that because most states have a limited supply of measles vaccine, last spring's recommendations are the most practical for targeting the persons at the highest risk.

Students are urged to get vaccinated if they were born after 1956 and have never been vaccinated; if they had received their measles shot between 1963 and 1967; and if they had received measles shot before they were 15 months old.

"Today's college student falls right through that window period," Moeller said.

Immunization policy needs to be enforced

By David Frese
Collegian Reporter

A new policy that would require students to have updated immunization records on file with the University has many legal and moral hurdles to clear before it can be implemented.

Bob Krause, vice president for institutional advancement, and Pat Bosco, associate vice president for institutional advancement and dean of student life, spoke with the Student Health Advisory Committee Wednesday.

Krause and Bosco expressed their concern over the wording of a proposal that would require students to have an updated inoculation record on file before they entered K-State.

The current immunization policy consists of one sentence in the 1988-90 University catalog. According to the policy, "Kansas State University requires a complete medical history including an up-to-date immunization record on all new students or transfer students."

Despite the fact that "requires" is actually in the wording, the policy is rarely enforced, said Lannie Zweimiller, director of Lafene Student Health Center.

"That one sentence is it," Zweimiller said. "We would like to have that information on every student, but we don't. We'd like to have that information just to know what the health environment is like out there. Our job is to meet the health needs of K-State."

He said last year's measles epidemic "wreaked havoc" at Lafene because of a lack of updated records, and the potential for it to happen again.

Zweimiller also said the last thing a student wants to do when he or she comes to get treatment is to sit down and fill out a medical history form. A required immunization policy would speed the process.

"What happens a lot of times is people think 'oh, I'm not going to get sick.' Then they come in and they're sick and hurt and grumpy and griping and want to be taken care of, and we make them sit down and fill out a cotton-pickin' form," he said.

Cyclist hits rear end of car

Rider taken to hospital; status stable

A bicycle and a car collided on campus Thursday afternoon near the intersection of Vattier Street and North Manhattan Avenue.

Jeff Schneider, senior in physical science, witnessed the accident.

"I was walking along the sidewalk and was about five feet away from the accident," he said.

Schneider said the male cyclist was traveling east along the right curb of Vattier Street, and was moving faster than the car in front of him.

The cyclist was about to pass the car on the right side when the car made a right turn in front of him into parking lot A-3, Schneider said. The cyclist attempted to brake, but still collided with the back of the car. The force of the impact threw him up and over the front of the bike, he said.

"I never saw him," said Judy Davis, director of the Women's Resource Center and driver of the car. "All I know is that I heard a thud at the back end of the car."

After the cyclist hit the car he was up and walking around, said Loren Alexander, associate professor of curriculum and instruction.

Alexander arrived shortly after the accident and stopped to help the cyclist whose nose and mouth were bleeding. Alexander let the cyclist sit in his car until the ambulance arrived to take him to the Saint Mary Hospital for treatment and observation.

K-State police would not release the name of the cyclist, who is listed in stable condition.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL

Admissions policy denies opportunity

Once again the Kansas house is debating the virtues, merits and evils of selective admissions. Several days ago a Kansas House committee endorsed a bill which would establish a list of criteria which must be met by graduating high school students in order to gain entry into a Regents institution.

Under the bill, high school graduates under the age of 21 would have to meet one of three separate standards. They must either earn a 21 on the American College Test (ACT), graduate with a 2.0 grade point average in a specified curriculum established by the Regents or graduate in the top third of their high school class.

This bill has been endorsed despite the fact that you would be hard pressed to find a great many educators at the college level who support selective admissions. You would find even fewer supporters among the high schools which would actually be affected by the new criteria. In fact, in a letter to the Wichita Eagle published last week, one high school principal spoke out against the proposal, arguing that very few of the many small high schools in the state would be able to afford to restructure their curriculums to conform to the Regents' requirements, especially a new foreign language requirement.

If this principal is right, and many of the smaller, more poorly funded schools are unable to meet the curriculum requirements, how then could their students get into college?

There are a number of possibilities. Schools could consolidate in order to create larger classes and increase the size of the "top third." The state could pour extra money into these smaller schools to help them meet the new requirements. (After this year, we know that's highly unlikely to ever happen.) Or the schools could start a large fund drive to help raise money to meet the requirements.

These ideas might work, but the odds are better that, rather than spending a great deal of money hiring teachers, buying textbooks and restructuring curriculum, smaller schools will simply begin coaching their students on how to take the ACT and the SAT. Since this is still one of the key requirements in selective, or if you want to use the House's newspeak, qualified admissions, it would be the cheapest and easiest to achieve, especially since the ACT is not linked to a specified curriculum like the 2.0 GPA. All students need on the ACT is a score of 21 and they're in, no matter what curriculum they had in high school. Admissions officers are not required to look any further than the score.

ACT training would be very easy to implement into a school's current curriculum. All a school needs to do is require that teachers give multiple guess, multiple choice and true false tests in all classes, from trigonometry to English, rather than essay or problem-solving tests. Students would then be taking tests and learning the most important skill one needs to do well on the ACT; the ability to take multiple answer tests.

Dwayne Lively

Once again, since the admissions officers will look no further, the student will get into college if they achieve the magic score.

I think it is this ACT requirement that bothers me the most about selective admissions. Standardized tests like the ACT have repeatedly been shown to be biased, at least culturally and economically, if not racially. Of course, according to a conference last week, the ACT has supposedly been enhanced to eliminate such biases. It now, for example, evidently has two sections of English, grammar and reading comprehension, as well as an improved math section.

These improvements are all well and good and it's nice that ACT is thinking about them, but to me the phrase "enhanced ACT" sounds a lot like "a more benevolent system of apartheid." It's not the execution of the system that's wrong, it's the system itself. You can't make it better by modifying it, only by eliminating it. An enhanced ACT may be less biased, but it still only measures a person's ability to take a test. Real knowledge, and the ability to apply that knowledge to problems and other situations, is not a requirement of the ACT.

What then is the solution? Is there a better alternative than the ACT? Well, if you're still bent on having selective admissions, then why not establish a set of criteria, or an examination which tests and requires knowledge?

Why not require that students have read a certain selection of books, fiction, non-fiction, and poetry, and be able to write, either an essay tying elements of the works together, or be able to pass an essay exam on them? This would force them to see beyond the books themselves and into the realm of the "Big World" and other fields of literature.

In the area of math and science, why not have exams which test the students' problem solving abilities? We could have them examine an experiment and then either try to recreate the experiment to test it, or examine what the other people did and try to find fallacies in their reasoning. This would teach students that science is a way of looking at and understanding the world, rather than a list of theorems to be taken as canon law.

Or why don't we just do the easiest thing of all and let all graduates of Kansas high schools attend Kansas regents institutions? A lot of money is spent trying to determine what the best predictor of a student's performance in college is. Some say it's the ACT, others the high school GPA.

I've always felt the best predictor of a student's performance in college was the student's actual performance in college. Students are either capable of doing college-level work or they are not. They either pass Comp. I and Comp. II or they don't. They make the grades, or they don't.

I don't believe having open admissions means we also need to have all sorts of remedial classes. Again, people can do college-level work or they can't. We should, however, make tutoring available for people who, while they are very strong in one area, are relatively weak in another. Also, since certain remedial English classes and the Writing Lab will exist, even under selective admissions, as a service to international students whose native language is not English, they might as well be left open to anyone who could benefit from them.

Kansas has a great tradition of giving every high school student a chance to succeed in college. If students fail, they fail. At least they got a shot to make it. We shouldn't decide their future for them before they've had a chance to prove themselves.

Werring expected to produce visible results

A native son has come home. Chuck Werring, a 1974 graduate of the University, has returned to campus as the new director of housing. Werring makes the move back to Manhattan by way of Texas Tech University, where he was an associate director of housing and student affairs.

Several of the thoughts and ideas Werring has forwarded since his return are admirable. Now it's up to him to make sure that talk, in this case, is not cheap.

Werring has spoken of the importance of looking for ideas and proposed solutions to problems in the most logical place he can find them — among the people who compose the student body he's been hired to serve.

"I'm going to put my jeans on, we're going to sit in the lobby ... and say 'hey, what's on your mind,'" Werring said.

By taking a seat in a residence hall lobby, and by doing so in a pair of jeans, Werring most likely is hoping to make himself seem accessible and human — something his peers in similar positions across the nation often aren't.

He said he hopes that his personal meetings with students will give him a better understanding of their true feelings on such varied subjects as safety and food service.

But talk, thoughts, hopes, feelings and promises are often easily expressed and not easily followed up or carried out.

The Werring resume is impressive and his grasp of the social issues facing universities everywhere is impressive.

Now it's time that the native son produces what his background would seem to indicate he will — results.

Logic inconsistent

Editor,

Enough of the homosexual rhetoric. You devote the front page to it for an entire week. Editorials belong on the editorial page. The homosexual psychoanalytical affirmation like "people who oppose homosexuals are insecure with their masculinity" is as logical as saying Bush opposes drug use because he secretly has the desire to get off on crack. The author of the article last week was the one incorrectly typecasting. I hope the author of the above affirmation has a regular job other than offering her homosexual-biased opinions or she would surely starve — except in cities like San Francisco where sexual deviance and perversion is probably taught in the form of health education under the pleasant sounding "alternate lifestyles." The articles last week offered selective liberalism — selective because you allow the cowardly homosexuals to offer information but do not provide the sources' names. Could I not write an article and claim anything and back it up with questionable surveys and unnamed sources? A professor I know who opposed an administrative move sought to voice her opinion but did not wish to lose her job to do so. She asked the question "if a Chinese student who was sent over to study here from communist China wanted to explain the political repression that existed there, would the paper print it in anonymity?" The answer was if someone really believes something is right they should stand up for it. Practice what you preach.

It was stated last week that homosexuals can't help it. That sounds like something a rapist might say to a judge. The implication of such a statement makes it very clear that the author of the contention that the "homosexual can't help it" has something they need to be helped with. Where do you draw the line on sexual deviance? What about statutory rape? Your response is easily calculated. It doesn't involve two consenting adults. That response assumes you're better able to determine what constitutes an adult.

Your arguments in defense of homosexuals is riddled with illogical analogies and selective hypocrisy.

If you are going to espouse a viewpoint, try to be a little more consistent. Say something like "I guess Ortega wasn't as well liked as some of the socialist professors on campus like to fantasize he is, and democracy can now be served there." If God had intended for penises to be in rectums, we'd all be penises or rectums.

If you don't print this, that would substantiate my claims that you are selectively hypocritical. Prove me wrong.

Morals declining

Editor,

The Collegian supports illegal and immoral acts. This is exemplified by the series of articles and the editorial written during the last week. The articles express the declining moral and social ideals of K-State.

"Gay Life in Manhattan" has not only offended myself as a heterosexual but as a Christian. In response to the idea that if you are homophobic you are doubting your own sexuality; this is a farce employed by the homosexual community to divert their own wrongness.

In Kansas, sodomy, what homosexuals do, is illegal and should not be condoned by the Collegian. Sodomy, defined by Webster's, is copulation with a member of the same sex or with an animal. This is not only against the law of the land, but also against God's law. For this I offer Romans 2:26-32, "... Who knowing the judgment of God, that they which commit such things are worthy of death, not only do the same, but have pleasure in them that do them." This quote also states that if you accept homosexuals for what they are and come to enjoy their company, then you are just as guilty as they are.

In conclusion, I should hope that the heterosexual community of Manhattan will learn to be intolerant of homosexual behavior and propaganda. The Collegian should refrain from imposing their demented moral values upon the students of this University. If prejudice is obeying the law of the land and God then I am indeed guilty.

Effort appreciated

Editor,

On Saturday, Feb. 17, I was playing racquetball at the Chester E. Peters Recreational Complex with three other gentlemen. At 6:30 the following morning I was awakened by a custodian at the rec complex who was calling to tell me that he had found my wallet and that he would leave it at the front desk for me to pick up when the doors opened at noon. At this point I hadn't missed my wallet, because I had unknowingly picked up my opponent's while he had picked up mine — which he had then left behind. Because of my confusion at the time of the early morning phone call, I did not get the custodian's name so that I could afford him a proper thank you. I hope he reads the Collegian so that when you print this he will receive the thanks he deserves.

I am a graduate of K-State and my trips to the rec are an effort to regain my long-lost youthful endurance that I enjoyed in my collegiate days. I am extremely pleased to find that the honesty of K-State students and employees has not been lost over the years. My wallet contained several credit cards, no small amount of cash and other important items that would have been difficult to replace. Nothing was missing in spite of the many opportunities and temptations.

Thank you for your honesty and extra effort.

OP/ED

Marijuana harmful

Editor,

I would like to respond to the letter to the editor written by Marc Eckhardt regarding his facts about the legalization of marijuana.

As treatment staff we work with the end product of substance abuse, including marijuana.

According to information found in the Journal of Diabetes Self-Management by Dr. Keith Campbell and The Handbook of Abusable Drugs by Dr. Kenneth Blum, there exists sufficient concern regarding marijuana usage. Marijuana contains approximately 400 chemicals and when burned, converts to more than 2,000 chemicals, many of which may have harmful side effects. Carefully conducted studies with known doses of marijuana or its active ingredient, THC, leave little question that tolerance develops. Withdrawal of the drug, especially in the chronic user, may evoke a psychic response in that the individual feels the need for the drug and will seek it or some substitute. Heavy daily use may lead to gradual fatigue, apathy, depression and a withdrawal from past interests. This pattern of symptomatology is associated with a motivational syndrome, commonly identified with chronic marijuana usage.

Recent studies additionally suggest long term marijuana usage is associated with impaired lung function, chronic irritation of bronchial tubes, decreased sperm count in men and ovulation and the development of the unborn child in pregnant women. The most regularly observed physiological effect of smoked or orally consumed marijuana is a substantial increase of heart rate — often 50 percent or more for a short time. This condition could be dangerous with a weakened cardiovascular system.

I would question legalizing a substance that has at least as many negative effects as positive ones. I would like to extend an open invitation to any person reading this letter to interview one of my patients regarding potential addiction to marijuana.

Advice was bad

Editor,

I am responding to a letter written by Jim Weaver that appeared in the Collegian Feb.

26. I hope your advice to "live a little" is not read by the families of the young people who have been killed in alcohol- and other drug-related accidents and homicides. You imply that one of the goals of a college education is to learn to drink. This might be pretty disappointing to parents across our state who are sacrificing in order to send their son or daughter to K-State.

You seem to be preaching the glories of "responsible drinking," which certainly has its place in today's world. However, I hope your message is not aimed at those under 21. There are some who believe that learning responsibility includes learning to break the law by underage use of alcohol. Blatantly breaking the law cannot be termed a responsible act.

I'm wondering if Garry Harter, in his letter last week, may be part of the growing number of young people who have come to realize that the greatest challenge to our nation does not come from without (communism, etc.), but from within.

We are finding that the waste of lives and minds due to alcohol and other drug abuse threatens to put the United States in a position where we cannot be in control of our future. Too many of our best and brightest succumb to your advice to "lighten up." You may be wishing that I, too, would get down from my pulpit. Let me simply ask if the attitude that you use in decision-making is part of the solution, or part of the problem.

Evolution insight

Editor,

I am writing in regard to the columns by John Mussman and Brad Seabourn concerning the theory of evolution and the existence of God.

Both columnists treat evolution and God as if they are two competing theories, and that if one is true, then the other must be false. From the standpoint of a scientist, the two really have nothing to do with one another. Evolution is a theory which is supported by an overwhelming amount of scientific evidence. God, on the other hand, is not a theory. The existence of such a being is untestable; it is based on pure faith and is therefore not scientific.

So, rather than being mutually exclusive, the two have nothing to do with one another.

Anyone denying evolution because of a belief in God is blind, and anyone denying the existence of God because of evolution is forgetting that God is not fact but faith.

Incidentally, I don't believe in Seabourn's infamous Judeo-Christian God, not because I am an evolutionary biologist but because I don't have that faith.

John, please don't write about evolution unless you understand it. Ape DNA does not "mutate" into human DNA. The genetic makeup of a population of animals changes over time as a result of natural selection acting on the existing variation in DNA, which came about originally by random mutations. If God mutates DNA he must do it with his eyes closed.

Brad, thanks for making the point (from Dawkins "The Blind Watchmaker") that evolution has no foresight, and for pointing out that Stephen Jay Gould is not a "columnist." Your support of evolutionary theory is commendable, even if you did misspell Gould's name (it's Stephen, not Stephan; Mussman spelled it Steven) and call Dawkins an "animal behaviorist" (there is no such thing). I'd give up trying to disprove religious beliefs using scientific logic, though. If religion were concerned with scientific logic then Darwin would have been a saint.

Review lacking

Editor,

Jim Rourke reviewed the book "Sometimes God Has a Kid's Face" in the Jan. 18 Collegian. In the book, Bruce Ritter spoke of the plight of runaways and the work of Covenant House, the largest shelter program for runaways in the United States. It surprised me that Jim Rourke thought this was a "moving and informative book."

I found the book poorly written. The patriarchal values of denial, repression, and authoritarianism were very evident. Frankly, I had hoped for more insight from Jim Rourke. Ritter, himself accused of molesting "his" kids, focuses on the plight of boys while in reality there are many more runaway girls. In 1987 there were 54,854 runaway boys and 73,465 runaway girls, according to Source Book of Criminal Statistics, published in 1988.

Runaway kids are often fleeing from incest and sexual abuse in homes where patriarchal values abound. Many incest offenders come from rigid, authoritarian backgrounds, i.e. military, religious or punitive families. Some 97 to 98 percent are male offenders (Safe-Touch, 1988, Marcia K. Morgan, Rape Crisis Network, Eugene Oregon). The values of Covenant House are patriarchal. The father owns "his" kids. He has authority and control over them and provides them with "protection." His word is law. He constructs a male "God" in his image. However, "He," himself, is free from control.

We need to break the silence that masks male violence under the guise of protection. Men play the protection racket with a vengeance with children and with women. One in four females and one in eight males will be victims of sexual abuse by age 18, according to the National Center for Child Abuse and Neglect. Research tells us the protection racket is particularly alive and well in patriarchal homes, communities and churches. We could free a lot of kids, if we could free them from patriarchy.

A three-step process can end patriarchy and men's violence: 1. Become aware of the extent of men's violence and its sources. 2. Stop your own violent behavior and stop mislabeling dominating, coercive behavior as protection, caring, concern or helpfulness. 3. Nonaggressively confront others who are behaving in dominating, exploitive, coercive and violent ways.

Editorial ludicrous

Editor,

This letter is in response to your editorial of Mar. 1 which calls for immediate action by Congress to control handguns. I would like to offer some "ludicrous" and "ridiculous" arguments (quotes taken from your ludicrous, ridiculous and simplistic editorial) to refute the statements made point by point.

First, statistics from New York City, Washington, D.C., and Maryland prove that even very strict control of weapons does not reduce violent crime and hence, does not work.

Second, Congress is afraid to face this issue because of the fierce backlash that staunch defenders of the Bill of Rights (especially the Second Amendment) will present in their constituency during their next election. Also, what we are really talking about is unconstitutional legislation that will violently attack our basic freedoms guaranteed in the Bill of Rights.

Third, if any group is guilty of playing to the media (especially in the light of the liberal slant of today's media), it is the pro-gun control lobby. Mass hysteria and preying upon the emotions loosed by tragedy are their major weapons and have been responsible for their only successes to date.

Fourth, I challenge the blind assumption that gun control is a "step in the right direction" towards solving violent crime. Is giving up personal, constitutionally guaranteed freedoms worth just assuming you are right (even though you are wrong)? If the state can only legally possess weapons, and the police are agents of the state, do you really want to live in a police state?

Fifth, am I responsible for the misuse of weapons simply because I embrace my heritage, my freedom and my Second Amendment right to keep and bear arms? You would compare me to a junkie who proliferates the problem of drugs and all its consequential social evils.

Sixth, the point of how Japan and Great Britain deal with gun control is irrelevant, no matter how effective. If you admire them so much, move there and leave the Bill of Rights alone.

Lastly, don't fall victim to the simplistic solution that sees gun control as a "quick fix" to violent crime. Look to the issues of poverty, social inequality and our bloated, inefficient and self-serving criminal justice system. Then do something constructive.

Quit whining

Editor,

I love irony. Kirk Caraway must, too.

In his column on Monday, Kirk wrote another knee-jerk reaction piece. This one was aimed at the exploitation of the shuttle disaster. In the column he took time out to let us know of his desperate situation by telling us that his editor needed it now, or he "could forget about tomorrow." And what could Kirk forget about? Why, the 20 bucks or so he would have made from the column.

It's clear, because he admits it, that Kirk doesn't spend a whole lot of time and effort on his columns. I guess he figures the low income doesn't justify the effort, or "budget." Quit your sniveling and whining, Kirk, and write a real column.

SPORTS

Seniors look to go out in style

By David Svoboda
Sports Reporter

Five men will help determine Saturday whether or not they will ever play another varsity basketball game for K-State in Manhattan.

It's a safe bet that none of them want to. For Wildcat seniors Reggie Britt, Steve Henson, Tony Massop, Lance Simmons and Billy Ray Smith, a 2 p.m. contest with Nebraska in Bramlage Coliseum will be their last at home in purple and white.

Or will it be?

If the five and their teammates are successful in downing the Cornhuskers, they will have 17 regular-season wins and an inside track toward gaining a school-record fourth-consecutive NCAA tournament bid.

If, however, the Cornhuskers were to duplicate their early-season success against the 'Cats, K-State would be looking at the possibility of playing another home game — in the first round of the NIT.

Saturday's game might not be the lone factor in determining the Wildcats' postseason fortunes, but it's a big one, Coach Lon Kruger said.

"This game, just like each of our previous games as of late, we go into feeling as if we need to continue doing things well," he said. "We still have the Big Eight tournament next weekend, but every win you get moves you into a more comfortable position."

K-State is currently tied with Oklahoma State for fourth place in the Big Eight with a record of 6-7 in conference play. The overall Wildcat record is 16-13. Nebraska is 10-16 and 3-10, but the Cornhuskers knocked off K-State 74-71 in Lincoln, Neb., on Feb. 3.

"As always, when someone beats you, you would like to come back and put together a solid effort," Kruger said. "That will be difficult against Nebraska. Nebraska has got so much size — they're just a huge team."

Nebraska has four starters at 6-foot-7 or over, including 7-2 center Rich King, who leads the team in scoring with a 16-point per game average.

K-State, by contrast, has but one starter over 6-7 — center Tony Massop, who stands 6-8.

Nebraska is coming off its best conference performance of the season, a 96-82 drubbing of Colorado Wednesday night in Devaney.

In that contest, Carl Hayes had 20 points and five other 'Huskies scored in double figures.

Prior to the win over Colorado, Nebraska coach Danny Nee was worried how his team might respond in the regular season's final week.

"At this time of year, when you haven't been successful, the toughest thing is to get your team ready to play and get them to believe they can win," Nee said.

But win they did Wednesday, and guard Clifford Scales, who had 25 points in the first meeting between K-State and the 'Huskies, said Nebraska's players are now using pride as their main motivation.

"We have to play it for ourselves," he said. "We're not going to the Final Four, so we've got to go out for each and every game and play hard. For me, it's pride and pride alone."

And King, who pulled down 10 rebounds in the 'Husker win over the 'Cats, said if his team can execute at both ends of the floor, they might just give K-State all it can handle.

"(Execution is) what separates us from the good teams," King said. "When we play the way we can, we can stay with these teams — K-State included. Not that we're better, but we can play with them."

K-State enters play Saturday having lost two straight in conference play — at Kansas and Missouri.

In those two games against the nation's current No. 1 and No. 3 teams, K-State used its bench frequently. Freshman guard Pat Sams saw extended playing time against the Tigers, as did Britt, who responded with blocked shots, dunks, and solid activity at both ends of the floor.

Kruger said contributions from several players have characterized his team's effort this season.

"It's kind of been a trademark of this group," Kruger said. "We have had several

Netters in Arkansas for 3 matches

By Dan Wicker
Sports Reporter

Once again, the K-State tennis team had a short home visit before they hit the road Thursday for a three-match visit to Fayetteville, Ark.

The K-State women will open this weekend's competition with a match against Arkansas today at 4 p.m. Next, they will meet Wichita State at 3 p.m. Saturday, and Baylor at 8 a.m. Sunday.

Last weekend K-State snapped their six-match losing streak when they posted a 5-4 victory over Drake. Before the Drake victory K-State had lost matches at Western Michigan and at Notre Dame during its last three-game road trip.

Coach Steve Bietau said this weekend's matches will, in no way, be a let up from last weekend, and that all the matches will provide good competition for the K-State women.

"Arkansas has a good team," Bietau said. "After we beat them last year, they had a good season in the Southwest Conference. I expect a good challenge from them."

The Wichita State match is one in which Bietau definitely wants to see a win chalked up on the Wildcats' side.

"We really need to take care of business in the Wichita State match," Bietau said. "I feel we can win."

The final match will come from Baylor. K-State has not faced Baylor in recent years, but Bietau said he knows enough about them to expect a good match from what he called an improving team.

"They have been putting more time and more money in their program, and are getting better players,"

Bietau said. "It should be a good match."

Bietau said he was pleased with K-State's performance last weekend, but that the K-State women have a long way to go before the arrival of the Big Eight Conference season, two weeks after spring break.

"I don't think we are playing as well as we can right now," Bietau said. "We spent a lot of time watching films this week. Our doubles can improve. I believe this team can play great doubles. Second, we need more players playing great at the same time."

After seeing some major improvement in some players last weekend, the lineup's entries will be a bit different this weekend.

In singles, Marijke Nel will remain at the No. 1 position, Helen Schildknecht will move into the No.

2 slot after playing No. 4 last weekend, Sara Hancock will hold down No. 3, Valerie Rive will drop to No. 4 and Theresa Burcham and Suzanne Sim will round out the lineup at Nos. 5 and 6, respectively.

The doubles lineup will see a little shift in the rotation as well. Hancock and Schildknecht will move into the No. 1 doubles slot, Nel and Rive will move down into the No. 2 position, and Burcham and Sim will team up again this weekend at No. 3.

After coming off some struggling performances last weekend Bietau is looking forward to seeing the team perform better this weekend.

"They are learning to become a good team," Bietau said. "They have played some nationally ranked teams and, quite frankly, have struggled, but I think they are coming into their own."

NFL adds wildcard teams to playoffs

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — The NFL decided on Thursday to add two more wildcard teams to its playoffs, a move designed to bring in more television money and streamline the somewhat Byzantine tiebreaking system.

The dramatic change in the playoff system, to begin next season, was announced at the same time the NFL reached agreement with ABC on a new contract that will net it close to $1 billion over four years. It will mean that 12 of the 28 teams will now make it to the post-season.

Network sources said the two new playoff teams were added as part of the ABC package after the network demanded something extra in addition to Monday night games and one Super Bowl for the price, estimated at slightly over $900 million.

The NFL already has reached agreement on cable contracts with ESPN at TBS for $450 million each, meaning it already has nearly $2 billion worth of contracts while negotiations with NBC and CBS continue.

"Additional television revenue was an obvious factor," NFL spokesman Joe Browne said.

"But many clubs had also expressed interest in adding teams. Some suggested we break all ties with games on wild-card weekend. This accomplishes the goal of adding new teams without diminishing the importance of regular-season play."

And commissioner Paul Tagliabue said of the new format:

"We expect the two new first-round playoff games to create added competition and excitement around the league."

The move comes a week after another groundbreaking revenue-producing step, the expansion of the season to 17 weeks in 1990 and 18 weeks after that.

Under that change, each team will get one week off next year and two weeks off in the following years with the extra week between the championship games and Super Bowl eliminated for 1990.

But while each team will continue to play 16 regular-season games, the networks will get additional weeks of NFL football, meaning more advertising revenue for television and more money for the NFL.

The new agreement with ABC nearly doubles the network's payments — from $120 million a year under the old agreement to $225 million under the new one. It also nearly ensures that the basic over-the-air format will remain the same.

Baseball squad opens at home in round-robin

By Scott Paske
Sports Reporter

Coach Mike Clark's newcomers will get their first taste of the Big Eight Conference's series format this weekend against a pair of non-conference opponents.

The Wildcats, 3-2, will play doubleheaders on Saturday and Sunday, facing the Colorado State Rams and Illinois State Redbirds each day. The three teams will compete in a round-robin schedule at Frank Myers Field, giving each team four games apiece.

"We'll be playing four games in 36 hours, so our kids are going to have to stay focused," Clark said. "It's early, so we'll play some different people, but it will show our pitchers how they need to prepare for a Big Eight series."

K-State opens action with a 10 a.m. contest against Illinois State. The Redbirds, a Missouri Valley Conference affiliate, are coached by former 'Cats assistant Jeff Stewart. It will be their first game of the season.

"We might have a little advantage over them for the fact that we've been in game situations already," Clark said. "But I'm sure they'll be ready just to get things started."

The 'Cats' second game is slated for 4 p.m. against Colorado State, preceded by Colorado State-Illinois State at 1 p.m. K-State swept a three-game series against the Rams two years ago, and has never played Illinois State.

"I remember Colorado State hitting the ball very hard against us, and I'm sure they'll be the same type of ball club," Clark said. "However, they don't retain a lot of personnel from that team."

Sunday's schedule has the Rams and Redbirds meeting at 10 a.m. K-State will conclude the weekend action by entertaining Colorado State at 1 p.m. and Illinois State at 4 p.m.

Lacrosse team set for 1st-ever tourney

By The Collegian Staff

K-State's Lacrosse Club will play its first game Saturday in a tournament hosted by the University of Kansas in Lawrence.

The club will be sending 25 of its 45 members for the two-day tournament, said Dave McConnell, club founder.

K-State will play three games on Saturday: two against KU's A and B teams, and one against the Kansas City Lacrosse Club. K-State will have the opportunity to play the Missouri and Wichita State teams on Sunday. McConnell will be field captain for the games.

KU will throw a cookout party and provide accommodations for K-State's lacrosse players and coaches, McConnell said.

The K-State team is coached by Manhattan businessman Bill Kaszer, Don Tillar, and Pat O'Connor. Tillar and O'Connor played in three NCAA lacrosse tournaments for Army and are currently stationed at Ft. Riley. Only the nation's top eight teams are eligible for the NCAA tournament, Tillar said.

McConnell founded the club in the fall semester due to his own "addiction" to the sport.

"All Big Eight states have lacrosse teams, except Nebraska," McConnell said.

The lacrosse club has been responsible for its own funding, and team members must cover equipment expenses that can not be met by the club's funds.

"I'm really pumped for this weekend. Things are falling together this semester. We've been getting a lot of support," McConnell said.

Three local businesses have helped the lacrosse team from its start at K-State.

Athletic director Steve Miller has also offered his support for the Lacrosse Club.

"The athletic department will be including the Lacrosse Club in its annual spring fund raiser. They will make whatever they sell," Miller said.

Miller said he will try to help all clubs find practice locations and allow them to take part in the department fund raisers.

"I want to help any club with a desire to achieve," Miller said. "Although lacrosse is not a K-State NCAA sport, it could become one."

Lady Cats anxious to start 2nd season

By Chris Hays
Sports Editor

It will be the start of a new season for the Lady Cats Saturday at 6 p.m., when the team takes to the hardwoods of Salina's Bicentennial Center for first-round action of the Big Eight Postseason Tournament.

And the Lady Cats probably couldn't be hungrier.

The other Big Eight teams might even be feeling a bit sorry for K-State's first-round opponent Nebraska. It will be the Lady Huskers who could well become the "whipping boy" at the hands of a K-State team that believes it needs to prove something.

Humbled by a 73-70 loss to arch-rival Kansas in Bramlage Coliseum last Saturday that ended K-State's 13-game stint atop the Big Eight standings, the Lady Cats are now out to let everyone know they believe they should have been the Big Eight's regular-season champs.

And the only way to do it will be to win the postseason tourney.

"As far as the team is concerned, we just need to go in and win the Big Eight Conference championship this weekend," interim Lady Cats coach Gaye Griffin said. "We didn't win it the first time. We got second. Now we have something to prove."

And another thing that may add to Nebraska's troubles this weekend could be the fact that K-State had to wait an entire week before they could get back out on the floor against someone else.

With that much time to think about the loss to KU, and the second-place finish in the conference, the Lady Cats are probably chomping at the bit right now.

"We didn't win it the first time. We got second. Now we have something to prove."

—Gaye Griffin
interim coach

"The week off will do nothing but help us mentally," Griffin said. "We've got to come back and get better. We have no choice."

There will also be more than the tourney championship at stake when the Lady Cats take the floor Saturday. At 18-9, K-State is no lock to be selected as part of the 48-team NCAA Tournament, and last year, even though they finished 19-11, the Lady Cats got spurned by both the NCAA and the NIT selection committees.

So if the Lady Cats are entertaining any ideas about postseason play after this weekend, they are going to have to have some impressive performances in Salina. The tourney winner automatically qualifies for NCAA play, but even just two wins would at least give K-State that magical number — 20 victories.

The task at hand, however, is Nebraska. The Lady Cats can probably count on spending spring break at home if they can get past their first-round opponent.

K-State swept the home-and-home series during the season, but Griffin said she would be worried should her squad come out and play the way it did in the two teams' meeting in Bramlage Coliseum.

"We played great the first time we played ... took care of all the things we needed to," Griffin said of the Lady Cats' 67-60 win in Lincoln. "But you've got to be concerned when you consider the way we played them here. We have to make sure we don't do that again."

In the second meeting between the two teams, Nebraska bolted out to a 35-21 lead at the half, as the Lady Cats hit a paltry 8-of-21 field goals, while committing 15 turnovers. But, behind the play of Kristie Bahner, Nadira Hazim and Rita Matteucci, the Lady Cats came storming back to eventually take a 60-58 win.

Bahner had 17 points, Matteucci got 15, and Hazim had 10 points and 10 rebounds. Nebraska's Ann Halsne and Kelly Hubert each had 13.

Margaret Clark/Staff

Nadira Hazim will be a key factor for the Lady Cats when they open first-round action at the Big Eight Tournament in Salina Saturday. The Lady Cats will play Nebraska at 6 p.m. at the Bicentennial Center.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN VIRTUOSO

Yoshiro Ikeda, head of the ceramics area of the art department, works on glazing one of his "cactus" forms in his office studio on the second floor of East Memorial Stadium.

FORMING CLAY

In an office on the second floor of West Stadium, one finds award-winning ceramist Yoshiro Ikeda.

Ikeda, a small man clad in a T-shirt, jeans, tennis shoes and an apron covered with clay, has been teaching at K-State since 1978.

In 1981, Ikeda became head of the ceramics area of the art department, and since 1989 has been a full professor.

Ikeda said he has given numerous workshops, demonstrations and lectures throughout the western United States.

His works have appeared in collections and exhibitions both nationally and internationally, he said. In addition, his pieces have won numerous awards both in the United States and abroad.

Ikeda said it is very difficult to say what he likes to create best.

"The theme changes," he said. "My theme is basically with the environment."

He said such themes as Zen monks, pregnancy, Mount St. Helens and winged dancers have been incorporated into his ceramic work.

"Right at this time, I'm basically trying to make something to do with the figure — like performance, dancing, sleeping and sitting," Ikeda said.

His ideas for his work come primarily from visiting a particular place, he said.

"I do visit many different landscapes every summer," Ikeda said.

Ikeda said he usually travels west of Kansas. On these trips, he conducts workshops or teaches summer school at other universities or colleges, he said.

For the remainder of the year, Ikeda said he carries out the theme based on what he saw on his trip until he is satisfied with it.

For his works, he uses clay and glazes. He fires his pieces in an electric kiln, he said.

Ikeda's method of creation is primarily hand-building. This method involves making a coil of clay and fashioning it into anything one wants to create, he said.

Ikeda had been a traditional potter, fashioning functional pots, before he went to California, he said.

"I think that was one of the turning points in my life," Ikeda said.

At the time, Ikeda said he had an offer to teach at Portland State University in Portland, Ore. Then, an offer came from the Riverside Art Center and Museum in Riverside, Calif., he said.

Ikeda's wife persuaded him to accept the offer from Riverside, he said.

"I feel if I hadn't gone to California then, I don't think I would have made it this far," Ikeda said.

Once in California, his style of ceramics changed from functional pottery to pieces of art.

Working with an electric potter's wheel, Ikeda finishes the top of a 3½-foot ceramic piece.

Ikeda said he was introduced to ceramics quite by accident.

When he was a senior at Portland State University, he had a friend who was studying ceramics. He said she was struggling to center some clay on a potter's wheel. Ikeda said he watched her awhile and asked her to let him try to center it.

When he tried to center the clay, he was unable to, but he became hooked on ceramics anyway, he said.

Ikeda said he did not decide to become a teacher until a year later, after he asked one of his instructors for advice.

He said his teacher told him to find himself a rich girl first.

"It didn't work, because when you go out with a real rich girl, they just swallow your money," Ikeda said.

He returned to his teacher to tell him that did not work and ask for more advice, he said.

The instructor told him to become a fireman.

When Ikeda applied at the fire station, the firemen told him he was too small and could not handle the water hose, he said.

He went back to his teacher a third time and told him that becoming a fireman was not an option.

Ikeda said he began asking his instructor questions about teaching. His teacher told him he was able to survive on the pay.

"And that's when I decided to become a teacher," Ikeda said.

At the time, Ikeda was a painting major. He decided to teach ceramics, however, because of the limitations of his English, he said.

Teaching ceramics would involve more demonstration than painting would have, he said.

"I feel in the next five years will be a turning point," Ikeda said. "A turning point means I feel I could do real good in my own work."

He said he has a small studio at home in a room that is actually the laundry room. He normally makes the forms for his work at home, and then tries to finish the pieces at school.

Ikeda received his bachelor's degree in painting and drawing from Portland State University in 1970. He received his master's of fine arts degree in ceramics from the University of California, Santa Barbara in 1977.

Opera needs larger stage

Orchestra reduced to lone keyboard arrangement

Mark Butler

REVIEW

The production of Mozart's "Cosi Fan Tutte" is a classic example of a performance transcending its limitations.

The opera, which was presented by the music and speech departments and the KSU Opera Theatre, is marked by awkward staging and triumphant performances. The performers and designers deserved a larger scale to present their work.

Many liberties are taken with the production and the original text. A number of these alterations are distracting although the cast compensates for some with flair.

The opera is confined to the intimate setting of Nichols Theatre. Traditionally, the grandeur and spectacle of an opera production are housed in a much larger venue. The U-shaped layout of Nichols' seating does not immediately suggest a lavish production.

Two compensating steps were taken to adjust to Nichols' small size. First, the chorus was eliminated from the script. Even though this deletion yielded some disappointment, it caused no disruptions in the flow of "Cosi's" story.

A highlight of the production's intimacy was the way in which the performers played to the audience. The small cast of six managed to involve the majority of the crowd in the action despite Nichols' near in-the-round seating. The cast proved to be adept in adjusting to the reduced staging.

One glaring omission was the lack of an orchestra, an opera mainstay. Whether this decision was due in part to size or budget constrictions, replacing a large orchestra with lone keyboard accompaniment was almost sacrilege.

Again, the cast helped mask this deficiency with strong vocal performances but it often was not sufficient.

Pianist Don Livingston was not at fault for the often shallow sound. Performing a score written for a number of musicians was a daunting task. The opera's overtures often seemed empty in places.

Another awkward factor of this production was the English translation of Lorenzo Da Ponte's original libretto. While it highlighted more of the opera's comic elements, some of the lyrics came across as stilted and embarrassing. Understanding the text of an opera has never been a prerequisite for enjoyment.

"Cosi Fan Tutte" is a tale of love and deception filled with numerous comic twists. It was intended as a satire of modern morals in 1790. The degree of the satire obviously upset some as the opera was rarely performed until this century. Two hundred years later, many of the issues involved are still topical and humorous.

The play centers around a pair of officers who trick their fiancées to test their fidelity. The soldiers, Ferrando and Guglielmo, devise a plot to achieve said goal. Ferrando was played by Ed Davis, graduate student in music and Guglielmo was played by Jason Schafer, junior in music. The pair wager philosopher Don Alfonso, played by W.A. Stuckey, sophomore in music, on the outcome of their test.

The duo result to trickery with the aid of Alfonso to gauge their lovers' affections. The men disguise themselves as befezzed Albanians and woo their paramours, sisters Fiordiligi and Dorabella. The sisters were played by Lori Zoll, graduate student in music, and Kim Voth, senior in music, respectively. Assisting the women in their plots is their chambermaid, Despina, played by Ai-Ze Wang, graduate student in music.

Although "Cosi Fan Tutte" was marked by a strong cast, three stood out from the rest. Stuckey's rakish performance of the philosopher was a highlight of early scenes. Stuckey's voice seemed a good match to operatic style. Zoll's characterization of Fiordiligi was bolstered by an evocative voice. Her singing conveyed comedy and tragedy. The definite scene stealer of the opera was an inspired performance by Wang as the wily Despina. Wang's warbling voice was both delicate and powerful but her comic timing enhanced her character and the production.

Despite the obvious emphasis on music, the opera was blessed with memorable theatrical performances by all cast members. Voth's scene where she succumbed to the advances of the mysterious Albanians was subtle yet hilarious. Similar credit should go to Schafer and Davis' faked deaths and subsequent revival. Again, Wang was a standout as the saucy maid, especially during her masquerades as doctor and judge.

Accolades must go to scenic designer Alfred Sheffield and costumer Marta Gilbert. The opera's simple yet elegant set benefitted the intimate confines. "Cosi's" costumes were lavish and ornate representations of 18th century garb.

In spite of its distractions, "Cosi Fan Tutte" is a strong adaptation of Mozart's opera. Inspired performances take the production above any limitations. "Cosi Fan Tutte" runs 8 p.m. today, March 3, 5 and 6 at Nichols Theatre.

Play to address chemical usage, contamination

By Anne Krauss
Collegian Reporter

Conflicts over preservation of the environment and between family members form the core of "Where Moths and Rust Destroy," the first play to be read at the Playwrights' Stage.

"It's about the social issue of the environment and the farmer's right to manage the land," said Mike Solomonson, author of the play and a graduate student in theater. "It also relates to the farm family — a farmer, his daughter, and his young son."

The play is set in rural Iowa during a drought. A local environmental group has become concerned that the use of pesticides by farmers is contaminating the ground water.

The group takes an area farmer to court in an effort to prevent him from using the chemicals.

Environmentalists see the legal battle as a way to insure a source of clean water for generations to come.

However, the farmers in the play see pesticides as necessary for producing crops and making a living. To them it is a question of being able to continue in their profession.

"Often people who are traditionally not rural people try to do a good thing, like protecting the groundwater," Solomonson said. "But the farmers see it as survival and say 'they're messing with my way of life.'"

One of the main characters is a farmer who is president of the Iowa Farm Bureau and is embroiled in the conflict. He is committed to preserving the family farm and thinks his daughter should help him do so by becoming involved in public relations for the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service.

His daughter, however, hopes to go to law school at Harvard. Their different views of her future lead to clashes within the family.

"The woman in the play is under a lot of tension," Solomonson said. "She's playing a lot of roles and trying to see where she fits in."

Solomonson said the personal relationships and conflict be-

Professor patents metal liquidifier

Conductive film made with particles

By Bryan Ackley
Collegian Reporter

A University scientist has broken new ground in the world of metal vapor chemistry.

For the past five years, Kenneth Klabunde, professor of chemistry, has been developing a method by which solvated clusters of metal particles can be used to create highly conductive coatings, or films, on plastics and other materials.

The most practical applications of this method might include coating plastic materials, such as those used in computer components, and uniquely or oddly shaped objects, Klabunde said.

In October, Klabunde received a patent for the method, which involves creating new liquid forms of various metals.

"This usually works best with heavy metals, such as gold," Klabunde said.

To create the liquid form of gold, for example, the metal must first be vaporized at low temperature, he said. As it is being vaporized, particles of the metal are captured from the vapor and surrounded by an organic solvent.

Thus it is accumulations of solvated particle clusters that form the metal's new liquid form, he said.

Once transformed into its liquid form, such as paint, a metal can be poured or sprayed onto other materials.

"If you pour liquid gold out onto a flat surface and let the solvent evaporate, it will leave a gold film," he said.

These films, which typically range in thickness from one atom to several thousand atoms, are highly conductive.

"You can make them as thick as you want them to be," he said.

Although he may receive some royalties, few patents ever earn any money, Klabunde said.

So far, more than 30 companies have expressed interest in this method, but many of them indicated the method needs further develop-

Weekend road trips produce memories

By Clinton Wolf
Collegian Reporter

For some college students the best way to get away from it all is to literally do just that, by taking a road trip. "It all started when Dad bought me a road atlas," said Jennifer McGraw, junior in family life and human development. "He keeps threatening to take it away, but I think I'm too far gone."

McGraw said she has gone to Kansas City twice this semester, and friends have been an important part of those trips.

She said she likes to travel with friends.

"That's the whole fun of road trips," McGraw said.

Jon Frazier, fifth-year student in architectural engineering, shared McGraw's opinion.

"One of the best parts is getting to spend a lot of time with your friends who are going through the same thing," Frazier said.

Doug Base, senior in agricultural engineering, said facing an unexpected difficulty made one road trip especially memorable. During a road trip to the Passion Play in Eureka Springs, Ark., with friends, the transmission went out in one of the cars. The result was eight people riding for an hour in his car in a thunderstorm to get back. Base said, with five of them in the back seat.

"The funnest part (of road trips) is trying to deal with the mechanical end of your vehicle," Base said. "It kind of adds a little spice to your trip."

McGraw said she thinks more about the money she takes with her on road trips now than she did in the past.

"I used to take off on a trip and then look in my wallet," McGraw said.

Now, she takes about $20 cash "and a Discover Card for gas," she said.

Frazier said his road trip habits have changed since he began college.

"I used to be willing to decide on Friday night to go to Kansas City, but I'm a senior now," Frazier said.

Frazier said he and others planned for five days before a one-day road trip to the Iowa State game with friends last semester. Provisions included money for meals, a credit card for gas and a camera, Frazier said.

"We took a lot of pictures to document the trip," Frazier said.

Base said another aspect that makes road trips enjoyable is that people do what they might not ordinarily do.

He said he and other FarmHouse members serenaded sororities in Fayetteville, Ark., during a senior road trip to visit the FarmHouse chapter there. During another trip, Base said, friends would sing in convenience stores they stopped at along the way.

"No one knew who we were, and we'd never see them again," Base said.

Keeping expenses low is part of road trip planning. Frazier said once he and some friends kidnapped his roommate on his birthday and took him to Dallas. There they ate a picnic lunch in a park, Frazier said, and successfully avoided hotel expenses.

"We stayed with friends of friends so we didn't have to pay for lodging," Frazier said.

President's history preserved

More than 130,000 visit Eisenhower Center yearly

By Donna Warren
Collegian Reporter

More than 130,000 visitors pass through the Dwight D. Eisenhower Center in Abilene every year. The center includes a research library and a museum devoted to the former president.

The center is composed of five buildings. It was established to preserve and to provide access to the manuscripts and historical materials relating to former President Eisenhower.

The Eisenhower family home was the first building opened to the public in 1947. It was opened as a memorial to General Eisenhower's wartime service. Since then, more than four million people have visited the home.

The home is a simple, two-story wood structure. It is typical of most Kansas homes built in the late 19th century with its bay windows and front and back porches.

The home was occupied by members of the Eisenhower family from 1898 until 1946. It remains on its original site with its original furnishings.

The second building opened was the museum. It was constructed with funds from public gifts and was dedicated on Veterans' Day, 1954.

Originally constructed in 1952, the museum has undergone three major expansions. It holds about 34,000 objects related to Eisenhower, his wife, Mamie Doud Eisenhower, and other members of his family.

The museum is divided into five major galleries which have been arranged to facilitate self-guided tours.

The introductory gallery offers a brief overview of Eisenhower's life. The walls in this gallery are covered with colorful paintings which depict aspects of Eisenhower's life and career.

The other galleries in the museum offer an in-depth view to the various phases of Eisenhower's life as a military leader and as the 34th president of the United States.

After the passage of the Presidential Libraries Act in 1955, the Kansas Legislature created the Eisenhower Presidential Library Commission. This commission undertook the task of raising money for a third building to be constructed at the Eisenhower Center.

In 1962, the library was dedicated. It was designed to be primarily a research institution. The library consists of a research room, exhibit space, a 165-seat auditorium, a photographic laboratory and archival stack areas which house approximately 11 million pages of manuscript material and thousands of photographs, books and recordings.

The library is the only building to charge an admittance fee to visitors. There is no general admittance to the research areas of the building in order to provide a quiet environment for researchers.

However, access to the library and its holdings is available upon written request. To date, admittance is denied only when the information requested by the researcher is not available.

Although the library is a storehouse of historical material, it is also pleasing to the eye. Its exterior suggests grandeur and power with its stately columns.

The interior is dignified and elegant with extensive use of imported marble. The walls of the lobby and corridors are of bookmatched Loreda Chiaro marble from Italy. The floors in the public areas include marble from France.

In November of 1966, a non-denominational chapel, the Place of Meditation, was built to be the final resting place for Eisenhower and his wife.

The building uses stained-glass windows, Travertine marble wall panels and walnut woodwork to enhance its beauty. There is also a large, embroidered wall hanging which carries the words of the prayer Eisenhower wrote for his first Inaugural Address.

In the year following Eisenhower's death in 1969, over 700,000 people visited the center. Because of this upsurge in visitor attendance, a fifth building, the Visitors' Center, was added to the complex.

Like the other buildings, the Visitors' Center was constructed of native Kansas limestone. It offers books, t-shirts, postcards and other souvenirs.

Five pylons stand at the far end of the complex in a large grassy area. The pylons were presented to the Eisenhower Foundation by the Kansas Daughters of the American Revolution and the Soroptomist Clubs of Kansas.

All buildings at the Center are open every day from 9 a.m. to 4:45 p.m., with the exception of Thanksgiving, Christmas and New Year's Day.

Senate, Bush agree on controls

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Senate leaders and President Bush compromised Thursday on future air pollution controls for automobiles, factories and electric power plants, enhancing chances that a clean air bill will pass this year.

The agreement, after more than three weeks of closed-door negotiations, was viewed as a middle ground likely to attract enough support to thwart continuing regional opposition in the looming Senate debate.

Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, called the compromise a "sound and comprehensive" agreement that will substantially improve air quality over the next decade. He planned to bring the legislation to the Senate floor up on Monday.

"President Bush is extraordinarily pleased with the agreement. It is a milestone, an enormous step forward," said Roger Porter, the president's chief domestic policy adviser.

Porter said the administration would attempt to expedite Senate passage and seek a similar agreement in the House, where clean-air legislation remains in committee. But the compromise is still likely to encounter stiff industry lobbying, largely because of its estimated $20 billion to $40 billion annual cost to the economy.

Some senators also have expressed concern that the bargaining weakened provisions in the original Senate bill that would have required stronger automobile emission controls to combat urban smog. Other have voiced continued concern about the impact of acid rain controls.

Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., the minority leader, called the compromise "a giant step forward" in revising federal air pollution laws for the first time in 13 years. But he cautioned that many senators likely will seek changes when the measure goes to the Senate floor.

He urged Mitchell "not to handcuff anyone" during the floor action by rushing to cut off debate.

The agreement made some accommodations to regional interests, especially those concerned about the local economic cost of acid rain controls.

On that score, the compromise continues to require a 10 million ton annual reduction of sulfur dioxide emissions, but allows Midwest utilities to achieve special credits that could be sold to other utilities to recoup some of the costs. Plants that use new technology — instead of switching away from high-sulfur coal to another fuel — would receive additional credits for early cuts in emissions, a provision designed to help West Virginia's coal industry.

About a dozen senators from the Midwest had threatened to filibuster the legislation if some accommodation were not met to ease their concerns about the high costs of the pollution controls.

do what is right." Still, the debate became one over the broad issue of abortion.

Rep. Elaine Wells, D-Carbondale, told the House that she became pregnant at 16 and chose to have a baby. She also married the baby's father, who still is her husband.

"It was living hell to try to make a decision," she said. "Every time I look at my 21-year-old son, I know he was a human being from the day he was conceived."

Barkis responded that he thought the government had no business making a decision on abortion. He said women like Wells should be free to make their own decisions.

"I think the government ought to stay out of our personal lives," he said. "I don't need to be in the Legislature enough to vote against my beliefs."

Abortion rights legislators also launched a broad attack on the concept of parental notification.

Rep. Joan Wagnon, D-Topeka, said the decision of whether a girl should have an abortion should be left to her. The state, she said, could not create good communication between parents and children.

"Why should my view be given greater precedent or lesser precedent to your views?" she said. "The government must interfere with the private life of a free people. Is our judgment better as a state than that individual's? The state is a bad parent. Let's not make it worse."

Other legislators said some girls won't tell their parents they're pregnant for good reason.

"We are talking about, for example, the 13-year-old girl who is molested and impregnated by that ubiquitous 20th century lecher, her mother's live-in boyfriend," said Rep. Bill Roy Jr., D-Topeka. "We're talking about girls in homes where they'll be beaten or locked in the closet, burned with cigarettes or even turned out in the street."

However, anti-abortion lawmakers said parents had a right to know when their daughters had an abortion. They should be involved in a decision to have an abortion, they said.

Rep. Marvin Smith, R-Topeka, said he supported parental notification because his polling showed that a large number of his constituents supported it.

"What they're saying is that we want to allow some people to get an abortion, but we want parents to be involved with teen-agers," Smith said.

Representatives first had to adopt a motion to accept a committee report on the measure — normally a procedural step taken so that a bill can be discussed as amended by a committee.

Some lawmakers urged their colleagues to reject a motion to approve the committee report on the parental notification bill. The vote was crucial because if the committee report had not been adopted, the debate would have ended.

people step up in various games and give us some quality minutes. That's nothing new."

Kruger's biggest concern coming off the losses at Kansas and Missouri is K-State's poor shooting from the field. The Wildcats shot just 37.4 percent from the floor against the Tigers.

"Shooting has always been a concern," Kruger said of his team's performance this season. "When you play the top teams in the country on the road, and you don't shoot the ball well, it's very tough to win."

But win is something the five seniors want to do Saturday. But win or lose, Kruger said the quintet will always be special to him and to the University.

"It's just an outstanding group of young men," he said. "They've been great representatives of the basketball program and of the University."

Pardon the five if they never want to play in Manhattan again. They'd rather be in one of eight NCAA tournament sites in two weeks — and virtually no one can blame them.

bunal's decision.

"The Tribunal agreed with what senators had decided last fall — that there wasn't a problem," Johnson said.

Even though nothing about the fee was changed, Johnson said he was happy to see the matter resolved by Tribunal.

"Since there were students who were concerned about the constitutionality of the fee, I'm glad Tribunal heard the case," Johnson said.

Jones, too, said he was happy with the constitutional review the fee went through, if not the result.

"I'm glad they heard this, and that the process exists for other students with concerns," Jones said.

policy."

Krause said a new system would need to be implemented to enable the University to store inoculation records.

"We would need to have a sophisticated system to be able to track those records down," he said. "Until we have that, a wide-ranging immunization policy would be difficult to enforce."

Sophomore left-hander Chris Hmielewski will take the mound against Illinois State in Saturday's opener. Staff ace David Hierholzer will pitch against the Rams.

Freshman Sean Pedersen and junior college transfer Kent Hipp, who won his first collegiate start Saturday against Friends, are scheduled to pitch Sunday.

"It will be like a series mainly in how we use our relief pitchers," Clark said. "We'll find if guys who pitch a couple innings on Saturday can come back and do it for us the next day."

"It'd be nice to have that medical history form ahead of time so we could know what we're dealing with," Zweimiller said.

"It's very difficult to enforce an immunization policy, and we run into moral and legal questions as well," Krause said.

"In the absence of a state law requiring updated inoculations, we find it fairly unenforceable," he said. "We find ourselves in a very litigious society. Where do you draw the line?"

Do you ask everyone to have an AIDS test to enter the University?"

Bosco said the University has to follow the guidelines set for the public school system for the state of Kansas. Considering 85 percent of K-State students come from Kansas, the great majority of students should already be immunized.

"Can you imagine as a high school senior getting ready to go to K-State and getting a letter saying you have to have your shots prior to registration?" Bosco said. "Does that mean that they're going to pull you out of line at registration and tell you you have to go get a shot before you go to class on Monday?"

Krause said the students pulled out of line at registration to pay parking tickets, library fines and other holds are another story.

"That's something different," he said. "That's money owed for services rendered. You've received the service and you have to pay for it."

"Any new policy, as good as it looks on paper, has many implications that need to be considered — some legal, some fiscal," Bosco said. "I think we struck a very positive note in having Lafene for the very first time communicate to students a recommended immunization ment, he said. "Many of these companies said it makes a nice film, but it doesn't stick very well," Klabunde said. "We may be able to make these films stick better by experimenting with different organic solvents."

Klabunde, however, would rather see a company take over the commercial development of the method. "I don't really want to do this because I don't have the time," he said.

"But if some company doesn't pick this up, I might try to find the right people and start my own business."

Klabunde is not counting on the method becoming a commercial success. Rather, it is more satisfying knowing what this discovery means to the scientific community, he said.

This project, which was funded by 3M and the National Science Foundation, has proved there are ways chemists can understand relationships between atom clusters and solvents, he said.

Many chemists, however, are intimidated by this type of research, Klabunde said.

"K-State researchers are the only group that worked on this specific project," he said.

Worldwide, only five groups of scientists are researching similar aspects of metal vapor chemistry, Klabunde said.

"This is something that's very technique-oriented," he said. "It's very expensive, and the equipment is very difficult to operate."

Such pregnancies are rarely handled by physicians in the communities of Kansas because of the danger of complications that will lead to lawsuits, the subcommittee was told. Most of them are referred to the doctors at the Medical Center.

"I'm really concerned this (bill) is going to change the referral patterns," Calkins said. "Doctors are going to be second-guessed. This makes it very difficult to deal with the complicated pregnancies."

Solomonson grew up on a farm in Iowa and said his background played a major role in selecting this topic.

American techniques may harm 3rd World

By Clinton Wolf
Collegian Reporter

American agricultural techniques, which show more concern for output than for humans, should not be adopted in Third World countries, Agricultural Economics Seminar speaker Kusam Nair said Friday.

Nair, adjunct professor of economics and geography and native of India, spoke to an audience of about 25. Her presentation was called "Land and Labor in American Agriculture: A Third World Perspective."

"Most of the Third World countries have been trying to copy American techniques, and that's my worry," Nair said.

The Third World countries are the economically developing nations of Africa, Asia and Latin America.

Because of the chemicals used in agriculture production, Nair said, agriculture is the largest American "non-point polluter," which means the effects of pollution are not near the damage they cause.

"If Third World countries adopt these techniques, the pollution will be a calamity," she said.

Nair blamed agriculture-related environmental pollution both here and abroad on technology and its misuse.

"What is responsible for the pollution is technology," she said. "When in India they say, 'Use pesticides, but use them carefully,' it has no meaning, because there is no one there to watch them."

Nair said while chemical pesticides and fertilizers common in the United States can be imported into Third World countries, the laborers those chemicals displace cannot be exported.

"We're talking about human beings here versus something that's lifeless," she said. "If you make labor free, just like you want to make capital free and markets free, Third World countries would send you a million people tomorrow."

Land, not labor, is in short supply in America and throughout the world, Nair said. Because of this, the American idea of efficiency in agriculture — high productivity per person rather than per land area — should not be adopted abroad.

Such practices have led to unemployment and low employment in rural America, Nair said. After being exported to China, where more than 60 percent of laborers are in agriculture, displaced workers have ended up "sleeping on the concrete" in cities there, she said.

In addition, Nair said the American idea of success needs to be changed before it is used as a model for developing nations.

"What would happen if people in

Debate threatens chaos

Notification bill reaches floor, forces vote

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Rep. Bill Wisdom shattered the calm that had settled over the House as debate over an abortion notification bill stretched into its eighth hour. His amendment pulled members out of their seats, caused a group to gather near the microphone and sent the chamber into near chaos.

Wisdom, a Kansas City Democrat, wanted to amend the abortion bill to make it a bill raising vehicle registration fees. His amendment was not in order, but he offered it to make a point.

Wisdom and other legislators opposed to parental notification were outraged over the procedures used to get an abortion bill to the floor for debate. The abortion debate also touched on legislative procedures and even Speaker Jim Braden's leadership ability.

Abortion rights legislators had planned to take advantage of House rules to block passage of a notification bill. Instead, they found themselves out-manuevered.

"I think they were upset that they got beat at their own game," said Rep. Artie Lucas, R-Highland. "We did want to keep them off guard."

The grumbling over abortion began two weeks ago, when the House

Federal and State Affairs Committee rejected two bills that would require notification of parents when minors seek abortions. The committee also rejected a bill that required parental consent for minors wishing to obtain an abortion.

Anti-abortion legislators complained that the committee did not have a full debate on the measures. They attempted to override its decision on one notification bill. They garnered 65 votes on Monday, but they needed 70.

Then, just hours later, Lucas, Rep. Rex Crowell, R-Longton, chairman of the House Transportation Committee, and other anti-abortion legislators engineered an audacious move.

The Transportation Committee took a Senate bill that increased vehicle registration fees and removed its contents, including its title. It then substituted a parental notification bill under the same number and endorsed it.

The move was clearly planned before the meeting, and reporters had been put on notice that it would occur. Abortion rights legislators were stunned by the action.

"If we can't agree on the rules to govern ourselves, how can we agree on the rules for the state?" asked Rep.

Joan Wagnon, D-Topeka.

Anti-abortion legislators defended the action, saying their strong belief that an open debate was required drove them to it.

"We rationalize that such use of the rules is OK when it helps our position and condemn the procedure when it goes against us," Crowell said.

There were process arguments. Abortion rights legislators complained that the Transportation Committee's actions made a travesty of the committee process.

The House must have committees to operate, to provide a mechanism for making extensive hearings and rewriting of bills practical. It is natural that committees specialize so that members develop an expertise in a particular area.

However, abortion rights activists had been counting votes in the House.

One prominent pro-choice legislator said the magic number was 70 — the number needed to pull a bill out of committee or override a committee decision. If they thought a bill could be pulled out of committee, they would work to make it less objectionable. If they didn't, they'd work to have a bill rejected.

Senate accepts funding request

By Kirk Caraway
Collegian Reporter

Student Senate Thursday night moved quickly to pass an emergency allocation request by the student branch of the Associated General Contractors of America to fund travel to two conventions during spring break.

The funding request was added to the agenda during the meeting and moved special orders, which caught some senators off guard. The reason given for the expedited process was the group needed the extra week to plan for the trips, which take place during spring break.

"We tried to get money from Engineering Council, but all their money was already budgeted," said Greg Covington, president of AGC and senior in construction science. "Student Senate is our last stop."

Senate allocated $1,281.00 to send seven people to the national AGC convention in San Francisco and an additional $538.00 to send four people to a convention of student branches of AGC in Fargo, N.D.

The allocation passed by a wide margin, but some senators took exception to the precedent they were setting by funding so many travel allocations.

"We don't want to appear to our constituents as the Student Senate Travel Agency," said Travis Stumpf, arts and sciences senator. Senate has approved allocations in the amount of $4,455.44 for travel expenses in the past two weeks.

In other action, Senate approved the appointment of Todd Heitschmidt as the new Associated Students of Kansas campus director.

Controversy over the appointment started when Student Body President Todd Johnson withdrew Heitschmidt's name from consideration two weeks ago.

Johnson said differences between the two had since been worked out, and he resubmitted the appointment. After being approved, Heitschmidt officially resigned his Senate seat, the major point of contention between him and Johnson.

Retired professor still active in field

Chang writes papers on architectural theory examining relationship of design, science

By Todd Fertig
Collegian Reporter

Amos Ih-Tiao Chang, retired professor of architecture and author of a book that is highly regarded in the world of architecture, continues to contribute to the field at the age of 73.

A professor of architectural design and theory at K-State for 20 years, Chang retired from teaching in 1987. The College of Architecture and Design honored Chang upon his retirement by naming a gallery after him in Seaton Hall. Architectural works are displayed in the gallery.

Chang said such honors inspire and motivate him to remain involved in the education of architecture students even though his days in the classroom are over.

In July, Chang presented two papers on architectural philosophy at the Sixth Congress of the International Society for Chinese Philosophy. The two papers are now being incorporated into the holdings of the East Asia science library of the Joseph Needham Research Institute at Cambridge University.

One of Chang's papers, which examines the relationship of scientific medium and artistic message in architecture, will soon appear in Dichotomy, an architecture journal.

In the paper, Chang examines the predictability and the unpredictability of nature. He uses the term "scientificism" to describe phenomena that possess the characteristics of both science and art.

"Scientificism is meant to bridge the gap between science and art," Chang said. "It involves things which are unpredictable, which have order, but which are not technological."

Chang also examined the interaction of elements in nature in his second paper, "Nothingness and Oneness," which is in the process of being accepted for publication by the architectural journal of Princeton University.

In that paper, Chang described the manner in which different objects and forces depend upon and work with each other to create a harmonious balance. Chang calls the unity formed by the cooperation of elements "translucive oneness."

"Translucive oneness is the order which brings a sense of unity to the tangible and the intangible," he said. "This may help understanding of the relationships of proportion and detail in classical architecture."

Developing a sense of balance and relationships in nature is important to architects, Chang said. In his book, "Tao of Architecture," which he wrote as a doctoral dissertation at Princeton University in 1951, Chang encouraged "creative forgetfulness" as the mindset that allows originality to flow.

"Architecture is expression and imagination," he said. "An architecture student must let his mind be

Two die in trains' collision

POLATLI, Turkey (AP) — Two passenger trains collided Sunday, killing at least two people and injuring 60, the Anatolia news agency said.

Causes of the head-on crash in Polatli, 45 miles southwest of Ankara, were not immediately clear.

A train from Ankara heading for Istanbul rammed into an Ankara-bound train from the Aegean coastal city of Izmir, the news agency said.

Thirty-three of the injured passengers were hospitalized, four in serious condition, Anatolia said.

The engineer of the Ankara-bound train died and rescue workers later pulled the body of a passenger from a derailed car, the agency said.

Police capture 95 guerrillas

LIMA, Peru (AP) — Army and police units working together captured 95 leftist guerrillas in the northern Andes, officials said.

Elsewhere Saturday, rebels shot and killed an employee of a government irrigation project at his home in Ayacucho, 230 miles southeast of Lima, police said.

And in Huancayo, 140 miles east of Lima, rebels shot and killed two men and a woman in separate incidents. Police said rebels left a note on one victim reading, "This is how thieves die."

The 95 Shining Path rebels were captured in Yanama, 215 miles northeast of Lima in the Black Mountains, an interior department spokesman said. Arms and explosives were also recovered, he said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

The Shining Path has been fighting Peru's elected governments since 1980. The government says more than 18,000 people have been killed in the fighting.

FBI suspends 15-year veteran

NEW YORK (AP) — The FBI has suspended a 15-year veteran amid allegations that he spied for Cuba, but colleagues say the agency is retaliating against the Hispanic agent for a discrimination lawsuit, it was reported.

The New York Times reported in Monday editions that Fernando E. Mata, 48, who is based in Miami, also lost his security clearance as a result of the three-year investigation.

FBI spokesman Robert Davenport in Washington confirmed that Mata had been placed on administrative leave, but refused to say why.

Art theft nets $4 million

NEW YORK (AP) — A $4 million art theft netted a ring that its owner says belonged to the family of Vlad the Impaler, the Eastern European prince who inspired the vampire legend of Count Dracula, Newsday reported.

Two men beat up and handcuffed artist-historian Vlaicu Ionescu, 67, in his apartment in Queens and took his collection of paintings. They also took documentation on the paintings, leading police to believe the robbery's masterminds knew what they were doing, Newsday reported Sunday.

Ionescu, who fled his native Romania more than 20 years ago, said the most valuable work stolen in the August robbery was "The Barbadori Holy Family with St. John and St. Elizabeth," a 1516 painting by Andrea del Sarto worth about $3 million.

Lawrence man found dead

LAWRENCE (AP) — Last fall Donald Bread was trying to console an American Indian couple over the mysterious death of their 21-year-old son.

Now Bread's friends are trying to console him after his 19-year-old son, Christopher George Bread, was found dead early Friday beside a rural road outside Lawrence.

Bread thinks "an evil force" took the lives of his son and two other young American Indians who have died mysteriously in the past 1 1/2 years.

And he thinks law enforcement agencies have fostered such an evil atmosphere through prejudice.

"I'm wondering if something is going on: Can we kill an Indian because law enforcement agencies aren't concerned?" Bread said Saturday.

Bread and other Indian leaders complained last November that authorities didn't seem to care about the deaths of the two young Indians, who authorities said apparently died by accident.

Authorities repeatedly have declined to comment on the complaints of prejudice.

Town sues cougar owner

EDWARDSVILLE (AP) — Cougars aren't welcome in this eastern Kansas town.

That's the message officials are sending with a lawsuit filed last week against the owner of a pet cougar named Cougie.

The owner, Ron Aitkens, a Kansas City, Kan., chiropractor, was convicted in municipal court in August of violating the town's exotic-animal ordinance by housing Cougie within city limits.

Now town officials are seeking an injunction to force Aitkens to move the cougar.

Aitkens has appealed the conviction.

Pre-Convocation Forum today

Lelah Dushkin, assistant professor of anthropology, will speak at a pre-Convocation Forum in conjunction with a meeting of the International Activities Council at 12:20 p.m. today in the Union Flint Hills Room.

Dushkin's address dealing with interaction among cultures is a preview to James Fallows' Convocation Lecture Tuesday at 10:30 in McCain Auditorium.

Fallows, Washington editor of the Atlantic Monthly who was based in Japan and Malaysia from 1986 to 1989, will discuss "Sex, Money and the Pacific Rim: The Contemporary Asian World."

Asian countries that border the Pacific Ocean, known as the Pacific Rim, are making such rapid progress in their standings in world affairs that the 21st century is being billed as the Pacific Century.

In his recent book, "More Like Us: Making America Great Again," Fallows comments on the popular opinion that the United States must attempt to emulate these progressive Asian countries.

"Journalists and scholars go to other countries and find themselves in a position to truly observe cultural differences," Dushkin said. "Fallows has reported on the Japanese culture and has seen these differences close up."

"He has said that America doesn't need to try to copy the Japanese, but that we need to become more like ourselves, to progress in the future. He says we must concentrate on the things that made us successful in the past."

Baby fair draws several hundred

By Laura Scroggins
Collegian Reporter

Billed as a fun-filled day of exhibits and classes focusing on pregnancy and parenthood, Baby Fair 1990 attracted a steady flow of several hundred people Saturday to The Houston Street Ballroom.

While a large part of the fair was represented by local businesses, Julie Davenport, director of marketing and public relations for Memorial Hospital, said the educational aspect of the fair was vital. Memorial Hospital and KQLA-FM co-sponsored the fair.

Educational presentations were scheduled between 10:30 a.m. and 4 p.m., including keynote speaker Edward Christophersen, author of two well-known child education books. Christophersen spoke on "Putting Fun Back Into Child Rearing" and was available for autographs following the seminar.

Topics of other presentations ranged from the history of American childbirth to a child's first two years of development.

The audience consisted mainly of expectant mothers, but families with young children and a few elderly people also attended. Overall, businesses were pleased with the turnout.

"We have had a tremendous response," Davenport said during the fair.

"It fits this area well," said Ed Klimek, general manager of KQLA. He said he heard of the idea two years ago on a radio station in Charlotte, N.C.

Klimek said the North Carolina station had successfully been involved in a baby fair in the Charlotte area for a long time. He decided the market here was right because of the number of young families in the Manhattan and Junction City areas.

Planning for the event began in November, Klimek said. Booth sponsors had to be contacted and coordinated, as did the speakers. All the speakers were local doctors, nurses and dieticians.

Davenport and Klimek said they would like to see the baby fair become an annual event in the spring because of the large number of deliveries and pregnancies during this time.

Todd Rokey, junior in agricultural mechanization, tells a cowboy story for kindergartners from the KSU Child Development Center. Rokey used a cowboy rope and some songs to illustrate his story. One of the songs used was "Home on the Range."

Storytelling Students transform classroom into stage

By Margaret Clarkin
Collegian Reporter

Lori Schneider, teacher at the KSU Child Development Center, and Whitney Oakley watch a story being told by one of the students.

Students in Mary Nichols' classes meet twice a week to learn how to tell stories and read poetry and books with emotion and feeling. They learn to use their voices and body movements in expressing the words of the story. They are learning the art of storytelling.

Nichols teaches Storytelling, a class offered by the speech department.

"We work with strange sounds and movement," said Nichols, instructor of speech. "It's theatrical, but we don't like to call ourselves actors."

Nichols has been teaching the class for more than 10 years. She started with one section of the class, and now she has four.

The class usually fills up within the first week of enrollment, Nichols said. Many of the students are upperclassmen and elementary education majors.

"I encourage most students not to use props in storytelling," Nichols said. "I want them to be theatrical without makeup or costume and work mostly with vocal and physical techniques."

Nichols uses one class period to teach students that speaking to a younger audience is different from speaking to other college students.

"College students need to realize that children don't listen to lectures like college students do," Nichols said. "They have a short attention span. Realize that, and you'll be successful."

The class requires students to go into other classrooms to tell stories, and sometimes an audience comes to the class. The live audiences are preschoolers, Nichols said.

Students are only required to do one performance per semester, but sometimes they do more than that, she said.

"Teachers or parents will call," Nichols said. "Boy Scouts will call. We will usually accommodate if they want us to come and do a performance."

Attendance increases at Cattlemen's Day

By Shannan Seely
Collegian Reporter

The 77th annual Cattlemen's Day attracted a larger turnout this year than last year, said Jack Riley, head of the animal sciences and industry department.

Cattlemen from across the region met for Cattlemen's Day Friday at Brandeberry Indoor Complex.

About 39 exhibitors set up displays, showed products and handed out literature to inform cattlemen about trends in the 1990s.

K-State animal science faculty and researchers also spoke on timely topics, including cow herd profitability, developing low-fat beef products and the cattle industry under the 1990 farm bill.

John Meetz, vice president of the National Cattlemen's Association, was the guest speaker.

"I think a day like today is an annual chance for a cattlemen to learn new ideas he can take home with him," Meetz said. "It is also a good social event."

"It's clearly an established tradition," Riley said. "It brings back a lot of old graduates."

The event has improved since it moved to Brandeberry three years ago, said Bill Amstein, associate dean of the college of agriculture.

Amstein said Cattlemen's Day used to be in the corridors around Weber Arena.

"It was not a great way to exhibit because of the dirty floor," Amstein said. "Today, there are more University research projects shown, and the slide shows could be seen this year because the lights were blocked."

Students who attended the event were able to talk about the industry with professionals.

Rex Boley, senior in agricultural education, said he enjoyed visiting Cattlemen's Day for the first time.

"I like it, and I have gained a lot of

Solutions to radio dilemma suggested

Bool! Thought it was Caraway, didn't you? Well, you got me now. I guess this week's column topic was cut out for me — Manhattan-area radio. I try to think of new things to talk about each week; precedent has shown that dogging one theme rapidly becomes nauseating.

But I, inadvertently or not, set up this column by asking for others' opinions on the status of Manhattan radio in my column last week. Instead of boring repetition of theme, you might call this part two of a one-part series.

What does Manhattan want to listen to? (I've got to get off the bad grammar habit — To what does Manhattan want to listen?)

Quite a few people sent in suggestions, and not only on their preferred music types. One letter simply said, "Go Kats Go." Some letters even offered alternative ideas to beating a dead Kat or changing current radio formats.

It seemed the most often demanded music type was, in fact, rock 'n' roll. People's definition of rock varied from Jethro Tull to Bad Company to the Cars. Some thought the only true rock 'n' roll was '50s rock 'n' roll, and others thought Motley Crue was the definitive rock band.

There was also a demand for full-time jazz or fusion, full-time "old album rock" — rock old enough to have originally been released on vinyl — and for full-time new age. One person suggested the ideal station "wouldn't be afraid to mix Jethro Tull and old Elton John, or the Clash and Bob Marley."

Obviously there is a demand for something other than what is currently played on Manhattan-area radio.

Anyone who studies continuously for long periods of time knows how frustrating hours of repetitive music can be — especially if it is not the type of music he or she likes anyway. An architecture student observed that he spends endless hours in studio, shoveling batteries into his walkman almost daily in order to play cassettes. It gets to be an expensive habit.

Many people, including myself, like to listen to KSDB-FM. However, DB92 plays several kinds of music at different times throughout the day. Thus, the main complaint concerning DB92 was that it isn't a radio station a listener can tune to any time and be guaranteed his type of listening.

On the other hand, a big advantage to DB92 is that its music does not conform to the norms of commercial radio — it plays music types other than proven advertising-getters.

David MacFarland, associate professor of radio-television and author of "Contemporary Radio Programming Strategies," said DB92, because it is non-commercial, plays what K-State listeners want to hear. It is free from all need to appease advertisers. Specialty shows on DB92, like "Metalhead," "Into Africa" and "Jam the Box" are aired because, in the past, students have indicated a desire to hear these shows.

John Mussman

While DB92 plays album rock weekday mornings, MacFarland said if enough students write to DB92 and ask for more emphasis on album rock, or any other type of music, the station's student executive staff would do all it could to satisfy the student demand.

MacFarland also suggested writing to local commercial stations to request a change. He said commercial radio stations are required by their licenses to "serve the public interest" — they must listen to their listeners. One of the reasons pop music is played so much is radio stations usually hear from a public consisting only of "pre-pubescent who have discovered radio, New Kids on the Block and the telephone all in the same week."

A business-minded radio programmer doesn't want to fix something that ain't, in his view, broke. So he plays pop — burns out pop — in hopes of maintaining his apparent listeners, and thus his advertising.

If enough disgusted listeners send letters asking for a different type of music, a station may be convinced to revise its format. But until that happens, MacFarland said, people wanting musical novelty on commercial radio are reduced to either flipping across the radio dial, plugging in a tape, or turning the radio off. That statement hits the nose right on the button, or something like that.

There are alternatives to changing local radio format. Manhattan rock fans can sometimes pick up Kansas City's KYYF-FM (KY-102), depending on the quality of the atmosphere. It works best at night, but I tried it during the day and could almost understand which song they were playing. It was kind of like listening to an audio teleprompter. I could think the song out in my brain without getting sidetracked off on the Smurf theme or the Mr. Rogers' Neighborhood "Good Feeling" song.

One person suggested installing a satellite booster tower near Manhattan. This would enable a Kansas City station to be received in crystal-clear stereo. The letter indicated that Kansas City commercials could be replaced with Manhattan-area commercials to fund the cost of the transmitter.

But MacFarland said building a satellite transmitter is extraordinarily expensive and would take years to complete. He said that one of the reasons KSKT-FM had problems with advertising was that it had a relatively short transmitting tower and low wattage. The problems of improving its transmitter prevented the Kat from boasting a large listening radius to potential advertisers.

One last suggestion, if listeners want to hear Kansas City stations, is to contact Manhattan Cable TV. MacFarland said that while cable licenses do not require the company to conform to public demands, it is possible to receive FM signals via cable. Manhattan Cable probably has little desire to decrease its customer base. We might even be able to get St. Louis' award-winning KSHE-FM. Who knows?

There is much more to talk about — I wish that three pages were devoted to this column. Basically, if we want to hear something good on local radio, we have to start writing.

That does it for me today. Coming up later this week we have some Karin Dell'Antonia, Dwayne Lively, and the latest Brad Seaborn lined up and ready to go. This column goes out to KSDB disc jockey Rod Gillespie, wherever you are, for making this job fun. Don't touch that trash can, 'cause here's the latest editorial cartoon — only on Collegian Page 4: K-State's news advantage ...

Observers pronounce election process fair

About 90 percent of the 1.7 million registered voters participated in the election. The Nicaraguan people elected a new government by a 55 percent majority. The observers pronounced the elections fair.

Such a narrow margin isn't a resounding endorsement for President-elect Violeta Barrios de Chamorro. She will inherit one of the poorest countries in the world. Nicaragua has been torn apart by poverty and a civil war.

Chamorro represented an end to the war for the Nicaraguan people. She was the candidate backed by the United States. Her election means an end to the 1985 trade embargo imposed by the U.S. government. It means U.S. foreign aid will be sent to the country, not to the Contras.

Internationally, things look good for Nicaragua — domestic politics are another story.

Chamorro's United National Opposition coalition is made up of 14 parties that range from far right to far left. They united to upset President Daniel Ortega and the Sandinista party in the national election. Now that UNO has won a majority, the coalition might turn into a competition as different groups vie for positions of power in the government.

Until Chamorro takes office on April 25, the Sandinistas maintain control over the military as well as the government, putting them in a strong position to determine the immediate future of the country, especially if UNO becomes factionalized.

The United States played a large part in the demise of Nicaragua. The United States essentially told the Nicaraguan people that to end it, they had to elect the U.S.-backed candidate.

The physical processes involved in the elections may have been fair, but the United States bought the minds of the Nicaraguans by funding years of war and oppression.

The United States should now direct its efforts toward rebuilding the country. Chamorro is going to need all the help she can get.

Padre offers beer, sex

Yabba, Dabba Doo, it's spring break — for some of us. The big decision — where do I go for break if I'm not going crazy? People with money can go to Fort Lauderdale, Fla., for sun, or Vail, Colo., for snow, but some people will be stuck here watching the prairie dogs. For most spring breakers this year's hot spot has to be tropical Cancun, Mexico. But what has happened to tradition this year? What about Padre Island, Texas?

This year I haven't heard anyone walking around yelling "Hey Mon, Padre!" Padre is the traditional spring break hot spot for college students in the Midwest. It's cheap, tropical, and only a 20-hour drive and it's close to Mexico — where they don't have a drinking age. What more could a college student ask for? If you're not going to Padre, you're missing out on one of those unique college-life experiences. I know; I'm still hungover from last year.

The best part about spring break, wherever you go, is getting there. Pack six or seven people and their luggage in a four-person car, take out the air conditioner, and you've got a party. With that many people, gas is cheap — and believe me, you'll have plenty of gas after about eight hours on the road.

A cooler of munchies is a necessity. Bring the old peanut butter and jelly sandwiches, broken potato chips, beef jerky and of course, Dad's favorite, Oreos. Candy bars and chocolate cake are good, but someone always sits on them.

Be sure to stop and enjoy the sights along the Interstate, especially while you're still in Kansas. There's a real-life, simulated Indian Camp on I-35 near Oklahoma. The aluminum tepees are real traffic stoppers.

You should also take pictures by all the state border signs and mail them back as postcards so people will believe you went somewhere.

Driving through the night is the most fun, unless it's your car. All the passengers stay

Audra Dietz

COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

awake and talk, until it's your turn to drive, so bring along some artificial stimulation and some really bad music, and you should stay awake.

At last, after 20 hours of munching, squinting, and Mexican radio stations, you'll hit Padre. Hopefully, by that point, the passengers won't have killed each other.

Padre Island is every parent's nightmare. All the things parents try to protect us from — sex, drugs, sex, beer, smoking and sex — are for sale in Padre. Padre is liberal; the normal rules of morality don't apply. It's probably one of the few places you can go on spring break without hotel reservations. Hit a few parties at the Holiday Inn and the Hilton, and you've got it made. By 9 p.m., no one can ever remember where their real room is anyway, so what's one extra body? Condoms and other various methods of protection are easily available from your corner vending machine and even from some restaurant menus.

Don't worry about food, most people are too full from drinking to even shove down a Big Mac. Fine dining on the island consists of a string of fast food restaurants and pizza places, but that's about it. There's Kentucky Fried Chicken for beach bums with extra crispy skin. There's Whataburger, the restaurant for what-a-stomachache. If you can afford to eat at the hotel, you shouldn't be in Padre.

While in Padre, take the 30-minute drive to Mexico. Mexico is the land of party opportunity. There aren't any drinking laws and silver is cheap, but you have to bring your own toilet paper. The food in Matamoros, a border town, is worse than in Padre. There's a smorgasbord of street vendors with tamales and burritos, but that's all. There is a bright side: the beer down there is better and cheaper. A case of Corona goes for about $8 and gold tequila is about $6 a bottle. Sneaking more than one case and one bottle across the border and back to the States is a challenge. Wear extra-baggy beach clothes — a fifth of tequila can fit in a bikini.

Like police officers everywhere, mad Mexican police don't have much sympathy for drunks. Getting thrown in the can for being disorderly isn't a widely recommended travel tip.

Nightlife in Mexico is fast-paced, if you speak Spanish. The bartenders know two words in English. Just say "beer" or "spring break" and you can get whatever you want. Dress however you want for the social scene, but wear bullet-proof undies. I advise this because when we went to a dance bar, two people got shot. I don't now if they just didn't like the music or what. I didn't see the victims but I saw the smoke. I guess the doormen forgot to check for six-shooters.

Cage dancing was a popular Mexican trend. In one bar, two cages were hanging from the ceiling over the dance floor. The cages were lowered about every two songs so people could get in them and dance. Cage dancing in Kansas wouldn't work — there's not enough room to do the "Bullshit," also known as the "Cotton-eyed Joe."

The drive back is twice as long as the drive down and there are no munchies. You have to trade all that tropical sun and sand for the snow-covered prairie. If you have the chance to experience Padre or Fort Lauderdale, do it. We're probably the last generation to enjoy wild, untamed spring breaks because our parents haven't been there. I don't know if I'd let my kids go to Padre. Would you?

Pageantry on the Plains

For 51 Miss USA delegates, the 1990 Miss USA Pageant Friday was the culmination of years of preparation. For one of them, it meant a year of travel and personal appearances, an open door to career opportunities and $220,000 in cash and prizes.

It was a big night for Wichita, too. The 39th annual pageant, which took place in Wichita, was broadcast live from Kansas and beamed via satellite to more than 300 million people in 30 countries, according to an article in the Wichita Eagle.

Although the 3,500 people in the audience at Century II were applauding, whistling and cheering for their delegates half an hour before the telecast began, local personalities came on stage to warm up the crowd. Wichita Mayor Bob Knight got the loudest response.

"One of every 12 or 14 people on the planet Earth will be watching this thing tonight, and I think that's kind of overwhelming," Knight said.

Signs supporting the delegates popped up throughout the audience. Most of the audience — delegate parents, relatives and boyfriends — had paid $125 a seat to be there.

"Tex-as, Tex-as, Tex-as," chanted a delegation in the south side of the auditorium. It was promptly silenced by a group that roared, "Mississippi!"

A few minutes before the telecast, host Dick Clark took the stage. The delegates, wearing identical black dresses, lined the aisles of the auditorium with escorts from Wichita's McConnell Air Force Base.

"Debra, we love you," called a female voice from the back of the auditorium. Miss Utah, Debra Tingey, looked over her shoulder and waved.

At 8 p.m., the pageant was underway. Recorded music and applause filled the auditorium as the delegates joined Clark on stage. Clark introduced hostess Leeza Gibbons, and the delegates went backstage to change clothes while a prerecorded tape allowed each delegate to introduce herself to TV viewers.

Immediately after the first commercial break, the competition was cut to 12 semi-finalists. Miss Kansas, Rebecca Porter, was eliminated.

"It's a good, healthy competition," said Donna Dilsaver, director of media public relations for the event. "I think people in Kansas are going to be disappointed (Porter is) out, of course, because there's nothing like applauding for your state."

"I think the judges have had a difficult time because there are so many outstanding — there was no one outstanding delegate," Dilsaver said.

The 12 semi-finalists competed in three equally weighted areas: the swimsuit, personal interview and evening gown categories.

During the swimsuit competition, Dilsaver said some Wichitans had objected to the pageant because they thought it exploited women, but most people were in favor of it.

"I think women are coming to the point that they're saying women should have a freedom of choice," Dilsaver said. "If they want to enter the competition or a pageant, they should have that freedom of choice."

After the 12 remaining delegates were interviewed, the field was reduced to six. Judges asked the delegates questions ranging from the qualities of an ideal man to whether women should be allowed in combat.

"The judges have the advantage," Dilsaver said. "We only hear what we heard now. The judges are also basing their decision on interviews from during the week."

The six finalists waited during a commercial break as the judges decided upon the final three delegates. A man jogged out from backstage to touch up the finalists' hair, makeup and lipstick. He helped Miss South Carolina, Gina Tolleson, adjust her dress.

Clark, told he had two minutes for the break, said he would entertain the audience with a medley of his Clearasil commercials.

"Trade you places, Dick," a man yelled to Clark from the upper balcony section.

"You're all winners," a woman called.

Miss Georgia, Brenda Leithleiter, looked toward the balcony and smiled.

Clark announced the three winners as soon as the telecast returned to the air: Miss New Jersey, Karin Hartz; Miss South Carolina, Gina Tolleson; and Miss Michigan, Carole Gist. To determine who would be named Miss USA, each woman had 20 seconds to explain why she should win.

"Each and every one of us is different and unique in our own ways," Miss Michigan said. "I do believe I have something positive to share with the young people of America, especially young women. And any goals you have — only in America can you achieve them if you believe in yourself."

The three winners held hands as Clark read the name of the second runner-up, Miss New Jersey. When he said Miss South Carolina was first runner-up, Miss Michigan, realizing she was the new Miss USA, began to cry.

As soon as Miss Michigan was crowned Miss USA, the other delegates surrounded her to offer congratulations. Television reporters and photographers clustered around her throne, beginning a year of media attention.

Loyola's Gathers dies

By The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Hank Gathers, the West Coast Conference's all-time leading scorer and No. 11 on the NCAA's all-time scoring list, died Sunday night after collapsing on the court during Loyola Marymount's game against Portland. He was 23.

Gathers was pronounced dead at Daniel Freeman Marina Hospital, where he was taken after collapsing with 13:34 left in the first half of the WCC tournament game. He died at 8:55 p.m., a school spokesman said.

As a junior last season, Gathers became only the second player in NCAA history to lead the nation in scoring and rebounding, averaging 32.7 points and 13.7 rebounds.

A 6-foot-7, 210-pound center from Philadelphia, Gathers was forecast as a first-round selection in this year's NBA draft. He passed up the draft following his junior season.

Last season, he led the nation in scoring and rebounding.

It was the second time this season that Gathers has fainted on his home court during a game.

On Dec. 9 against UC Santa Barbara, Gathers went to the foul line with 13:56 left in the second half, missed his first free throw, stepped away from the foul line and went down. He underwent several days of tests in a local hospital and returned after missing two games.

Gathers passed those tests and began taking medication to regulate his heartbeat. Doctors suspected that an accelerated heartbeat may have led to the fainting spell on that occasion.

Lady Cats advance to finals

Lady Cat Mary Jo Miller starts down court after making one of her two steals in K-State's 74-58 victory over Iowa State in the semifinals of the women's Big Eight Postseason Tournament Sunday in Salina.

By Chris Hays
Sports Editor

SALINA — At the women's Big Eight Postseason Tournament this past weekend, things were not looking too good for the Lady Cats after the first two games saw the seeded teams take the fall.

All in all, three seeded teams were upset at the Bicentennial Center Saturday, but the Lady Cats were able to escape the bug, as second-seeded K-State made it into tonight's championship game with a 74-58 semifinal victory over Iowa State Sunday.

Oklahoma State will provide the competition tonight at 7, as the Cowgirls downed Oklahoma 87-78 to advance.

"I thought we played extremely hard," interim coach Gaye Griffin said. "We did a great job in the first half, and that's something we haven't done, really, for about two months."

For most of the first half, neither team could take control, and the game was tied at 24 with 4:44 left, but when the Cyclones started missing their shots, the Lady Cats took the advantage. Iowa State hit just 12 of 27 field goals in the opening period, while K-State shot a blistering 60 percent.

That kind of accuracy allowed the Lady Cats to go on a 9-2 spurt and take a 33-26 lead into the lockerroom at the intermission.

"We shot the ball extremely well tonight," Griffin said. "That's the best we've looked offensively in a long time. We did a good job of pushing the ball inside."

And the person who suffered most from the Lady Cats working the ball into the paint was the Cyclones' Lynne Lorenzen.

Lorenzen, who ended her storied prep career at Ventura (Iowa) High School as the all-time amateur basketball career scoring leader with 6,737 points, felt the effects of the K-State offensive early, spending most of the first half on the bench in foul trouble. She was tagged with her second foul at the 12:33 mark.

"She never really got into the flow of things for us offensively. I hardly remember one (basket). That hurt the team," Iowa State coach Pam Wettig said. "Being in foul trouble had a lot to do with that, but I thought we had better sit her (in the first half) just so she wouldn't go into the half with that third foul."

To add to Iowa State's frustrations, the Lady Cats started the second half just as hot as they ended the first. The Cyclones continued to have bad luck from the outside, while K-State was canning them from both inside and out.

The Lady Cats opened the second half with a 16-10 spurt, and before Iowa State could regroup, K-State had its biggest lead at 49-36. That lead was eventually stretched to 58-43 with 6:11 left — that's when the Cyclones started to fight their way back into it.

If K-State had any ideas of cruising with the big lead, those thoughts were quickly put to rest as the Cyclones used a full-court defense and some missed K-State charities to once again make a game of it.

Before the Lady Cats knew what happened, Iowa State had rattled off seven straight points to pull back to within seven, 60-53.

That, however, was as close as the Cyclones got. From there, K-State would answer each attempt Iowa State made to narrow the deficit.

"We finally started to knock a couple down," Wettig said of the comeback attempt, "but once we warmed it up, things still stayed pretty warm on the other end."

K-State got another balanced attack in the victory. Diana Miller and Nadira Hazim tallied 22 and 20 points, respectively, to lead the Lady Cats, while Kristie Bahner added 10.

Hazim comes on in postseason play

By Dan Wicker
Sports Reporter

SALINA — It is one advantage to have the co-Big Eight player of the year on the Lady Cats basketball team, but to have another player come on strong in postseason play will make it that much easier for K-State to get an NCAA Tournament bid.

Nadira Hazim, a junior guard out of Topeka, has been an added spark for the Lady Cats in the first two rounds of the Big Eight Postseason Tournament, which has helped them rebound from two season-ending losses.

As a result, the Lady Cats will be playing for the Big Eight postseason championship at 7 tonight in the Bicentennial Center.

Hazim, who averaged 15.3 points per game during the regular season, has chipped in 20 points or more in both postseason games. Saturday night Hazim led the Lady Cats with 21 points, 15 of which came from the charity stripe.

Sunday, Hazim added 20, just behind Diana Miller's game-high 22.

"I feel like I have just been giving my part. I feel our team is really on a roll," Hazim said. "When our team feels good I feel a lot better about going out and playing, and that helps out a lot."

Interim coach Gaye Griffin said a lot of Hazim's success comes from her work ethic.

"She is the type of person who is going to spend extra time in the gym," Griffin said. "People who live in Manhattan know that she spends extra time in the gym shooting, and it's a great tribute to her success."

In the Lady Cats' first-round win over Nebraska, Hazim shot just 3 of 13 from the field, but she came alive at the free-throw line, after drawing fouls on numerous drives to the basket, hitting 15 of 17.

Sunday, Hazim did not have to take quite as many trips to the line, where she was 4 of 4. She finally found her range from the outside, going 8 of 17 from the field to end with an even 20 points, 14 of them coming in the second half.

"I haven't really been trying to go to the basket more. I think I have just worked on some different moves and

"I feel like I have just been giving my part. I feel our team is really on a roll."

— Nadira Hazim
Lady Cat guard

stuffs like that," Hazim said. "I always look to drive to the basket. It's just these last few games I have been able to do it a lot more than in some other games."

In tonight's final against Oklahoma State, Hazim will be looking to redeem herself for what she thought was a sub-par defensive effort in the two teams' last meeting.

She will again draw the tough assignment of guarding Althea Cox, who led the Cowgirls to a victory that stifled any hopes the Lady Cats had of winning an outright Big Eight title in regular season play.

Cox has also come alive in postseason play. She scored 36 points in the Cowgirls' 87-78 semifinal victory over Oklahoma Sunday.

"She is a really quick player. She's got a quick drive, and she's also got a really good three-point shot, and you have to respect her on both of those," Hazim said. "I'm just going to have to get down and really work hard to try to stop her."

As far as the team's matchup, Hazim knows that it is going to be a tough game for the Lady Cats.

"We have the co-players of the year (Miller and OSU's Liz Brown) battling against each other tomorrow. I feel it is going to be a physical, tough, tooth-and-nail game," Hazim said. "We beat them at home, and they beat us at home — so we are looking for a little revenge."

Wildcats win 3 in weekend baseball round-robin series

By Scott Paske
Sports Reporter

K-State discovered an area of Frank Myers Field Sunday against Illinois State it seldom found in three previous weekend games — the path from third base to home plate.

After falling behind 2-0 in the second inning, the Wildcat offense produced 10 runs in the middle innings and held on for a 10-7 win over the Redbirds in the final game of a six-game, round-robin series between the 'Cats, Illinois State and Colorado State.

The win was Coach Mike Clark's 100th at K-State, against his 74 defeats. He is the fourth coach in K-State history to reach that plateau.

The 'Cats managed just seven runs in the first three games. But strong pitching performances by David Hierholzer, Sean Pedersen and Kent Hipp sparked K-State to three wins in four games. The 'Cats' record improved to 6-3.

"It was nice to see some runs in that last game," Clark said. "We started looking a little more relaxed at the plate.

"We saw both teams' No. 1 and No. 2 pitchers this weekend. That's something we're going to have to get used to when the Big Eight schedule rolls around."

Junior righthander Kent Hipp recovered from a shaky second inning to improve his record to 2-0. Hipp gave up three earned runs and eight hits and struck out two.

The 'Cats sent nine batters to the plate in a six-run second inning. Freshman Brian Culp hit his first collegiate home run off Illinois State's Matt Herges, 0-1, to start the rally.

Center fielder L.J. Twynier and second baseman Jeff Troll followed with two-run hits, and Kevin Kaufman drove in Troll for a 6-2 lead.

K-State tallied once in the third and three times in the fourth to extend the margin. Right fielder Scott Stroth went 3 for 3 to lead a 10-hit attack.

Illinois State, 2-2, got a grand slam home run from Scott Lothery in the seventh off 'Cat junior Wade Anderson. Steve Scoville struck out three Redbird batters in relief of Anderson for the save.

"We feel our strength is our depth in pitching because we can go 10 or 11 deep," Clark said. "We got good efforts from a lot of people. Offensively, it's a tough time of year, but our pitching is carrying us through."

Saturday, K-State lost its opening game to Colorado State 5-3 in extra innings. The Rams scored a pair of unearned runs off reliever David Christensen in the top of the eighth to break a 3-3 tie. The 'Cats stranded 10 runners in the game.

K-State rebounded later in the day to defeat Illinois State 2-1. Hierholzer improved to 2-1 by tossing a Steve Henson was the inspirational leader, Lance Simmons had been in Manhattan the longest, Billy Ray Smith was the steady force at power forward, and Tony Massop had earned a reputation for ending games in dramatic fashion.

But it was Reggie Britt who may well have been the most popular K-State senior basketball player in the eyes of his fellow students.

And so it was fitting, with just 2:56 left in the regular-season lives of the quintet, that Massop stole the ball and fed Henson, who drove the lane on the left side. Then ...

Boom! Britt's monster dunk off the alley-oop lifted K-State to its largest lead of the day at 30 points, 77-47, and put a dramatic exclamation point on a day that was painted bright purple.

The final before 13,527 screaming fans: K-State 80, Nebraska 57.

Although the efforts of the five Wildcat seniors may have been the focus of many in the crowd, the NCAA Tournament implications of the win may have been more important to the players.

The win, coupled with an Oklahoma State loss to Oklahoma, gave K-State a fourth-place Big Eight finish with a 7-7 conference mark and 17-13 overall record.

That fourth-place finish, as coach Lon Kruger contended all year, should be good enough to get his team its fourth straight NCAA trip.

Kruger hedged a bit on his earlier statements following Saturday's win.

"Until the bids are out, you never know," he said. "But this group in the past 3½ weeks has played awfully well."

"They've lost three ball games during that period — all on the road — to the top three teams in the country (at Kansas, Missouri and Oklahoma). And we had a chance to win each of those games."

"If late-season performance has anything to do with the selection process, we like to think our chances are pretty good."

The efforts of the five who took their final Manhattan curtain calls made sure this one was safely tucked away early.

K-State led the entire game, except for an early 2-2 deadlock.

Henson tied for game-high scoring honors with 21, Massop pulled down a Bramlage Coliseum record 17 rebounds and Britt scored in double figures for the first time since Dec. 23 against North Carolina.

It was an effort, Kruger said, typical of those the seniors had provided during the team's all-important stretch run. It was a run that allowed a team once 12-10 to knock loudly on the NCAA selection committee's door.

"I think at the start of the season, we hoped to win more," Kruger said. "But if you'd have asked us three or four weeks ago, we'd have jumped all over the idea of 17 wins and been very pleased."

"Maybe it's difficult to fully appreciate what this group has done," he continued. "A month ago, everyone had written them off. But because of the seniors' ability to keep everyone together ... I just don't think a group with any less character could have kept it going in the direction this group did."

The direction the team went Saturday against the Huskers was straight forward. K-State shot 54.2 percent in the first half and an even 50 percent for the game.

And in addition to the seniors, Ski Jones had 17 points, and Jean Derouillere had 13 points and eight assists to pace a solid Wildcat team effort.

It was an overall effort that gained praise — and an NCAA tourney endorsement — from Nebraska coach Danny Nee.

"There's no doubt in my mind that K-State's an NCAA tournament team," he said. "There's absolutely no way they shouldn't be in the tournament."

"They're a very good basketball team. They came to play today, and they did the job."

Rich King matched Henson's 21 points, and Clifford Scales had 18 to lead Nebraska, which finished the regular season 3-11 in conference play and 10-17 overall.

K-State opens play in the Big Eight tourney at noon Friday against Oklahoma State, while Nebraska will face Oklahoma at 6 p.m.

Wildcat guard Jean Derouillere slips a pass between Nebraska's Depreis Owens and Ray Richardson Saturday in the Wildcats' victory.

OFF THE BENCH

We'll miss ya', Steve

Dear Steve,

Just thought I'd write you a quick note to say thanks for all the thrills you've provided me over the four years you've worn purple and white.

It's really rare in today's society to have the chance to watch an athlete perform for an extended period of time without reading somewhere about the latest controversy in which he is embroiled.

As a reporter who is admittedly a very big fan as well, it's been refreshing dealing with an athlete of such class. I've never had to write a less-than-flattering thing about you, and that's a credit to you.

You've no doubt been asked countless questions over the past few weeks about your most memorable moments during the seasons you've run the K-State show from the point, so I won't ask you to make a list for me as well.

I've got one of my own, anyway.

My list begins the night a sports writer for the K-State Collegian wrote the first-ever Collegian story about a kid from McPherson who was a track and basketball star.

In case you don't remember it, I was that writer, and I even remember where I did the phone interview. Your dad answered the phone at the Henson residence, if I'm not mistaken.

Enough about me, already. It sure didn't take long for you to make an impression on Wildcat basketball fans.

You've probably blocked out the off-balance shot you were forced to take at Nebraska your freshman year that would have sent the game into overtime. You missed it, and the team lost 78-76. I was in nosebleed heaven at Devaney watching every moment.

Maybe the competitor in you was brought to life in that loss, because in the next time you took the court, you got kicked out for fighting. You remember Ray Alford, don't you? Seems to me the fans on the front row of Ahearn's east bleachers that night of the K-State-Oklahoma State game got a bit more involved in the action than they bargained for.

How 'bout what may have been the biggest game that season, though: the team's 90-89 win in Norman against those big, bad Sooners? It was great watching them choke as you guys turned up the heat late. You had a lucky 13 points that night, including a big three-pointer that started the run that saw the team erase a nine-point deficit in just 1:16.

Your sophomore year certainly didn't see you jinxed.

It's crazy that three of my first four big Henson memories were a bit negative in nature, but here goes with No. 4:

The four-overtime, 82-80 loss to Southwest Missouri State in Ahearn may have been the best basketball game I've ever seen. You played an amazing 59 minutes of that contest. Mark Nelson gave you a minute of rest, if I remember right.

How 'bout four quickie good memories from that year? K-State 69, Oklahoma 62. The win in Ahearn over the No. 3 Sooners in which you played all 40 minutes made that team believe it could win.

When you snapped KU's 55-game home-court winning streak in Allen Fieldhouse with a 72-61 win later that year, you made the rest of the country believe, too.

But your best individual performance that year may have been in the Iowa State game at Ames. Seventeen straight free throws in one game. Wow! You hit 48 in a row before you missed one in Lincoln in a win over Nebraska. Bet you probably don't like Devaney as much as you like Hilton, do you?

You only scored five points against Purdue in the 73-70 win in Pontiac, Mich., that took the team to the Final Eight, but that was the perfect cap to an all-but perfect season.

Oops, almost forgot the last game in Ahearn. You were a

Reggie Britt acknowledged that his final exit from the Bramlage Coliseum court Saturday lacked the flare and flash displayed by Oklahoma Sooners seniors at Lloyd Noble Center earlier in the week.

Forward Skeeter Henry led the celebration of OU's 100-78 win over Kansas Tuesday by running through the aisles, slapping high-fives with everyone in his path. Five Wildcat veterans settled for standing ovations from the sellout crowd of 13,527.

"I'll take a back seat to all of that," Britt said. "I don't think Coach (Lon Kruger) would have approved."

What Kruger did approve of was the play of Britt and the other four seniors in the 'Cats' 80-57 rout of Nebraska. The seniors combined for 47 points and 22 rebounds against the taller Cornhuskers. Center Tony Massop set a Bramlage record and career high with 17 caroms.

"I was really happy for all of our guys, especially those seniors," Kruger said. "To have them go out that way in their last home game is something special."

On a day filled with emotion, the emotional came through. Massop and Britt, who provided several thrilling moments over the past two seasons by using their outstanding leaping ability, skywalked through the finale.

Massop had 10 of K-State's 18 first-half rebounds. The Fort Lauderdale, Fla., native started a 12-4 run midway through the half with a one-handed stuff on a pass from junior guard Jean Derouillere.

"I was trying to give it full tilt every minute today," Massop said. "I wanted to claim every rebound."

"My thoughts were, 'Just go out there and play hard.'"

Massop, who finished with seven points in 33 minutes, watched Britt

K-State's Tony Massop snags a rebound while battling under the basket with Nebraska center Rich King in the Wildcats' 80-57 rout of the Huskers in the final game of the regular season in Bramlage Coliseum Saturday. Massop set a Bramlage record with 17 rebounds.

steal the spotlight in the second half. During a six-minute stretch, the 6-foot-6 reserve scored 10 of his 11 points, pulled down four rebounds and converted a pair of crowd-pleasing dunks. The first, a double-pump breakaway off a steal, gave K-State a 70-43 lead with 5:17 remaining.

Britt even drew praise from the crowd when he leaped over the Nebraska bench going for a loose ball.

"It was a lot of fun out there," Britt said. "I'm glad it ended the way it did."

"Tony had a great game for us, especially on the boards," Kruger said. "Reggie started getting some of those in the second half, which kind of slowed Tony down."

Massop managed to steal the thunder back in the post-game interview room with an outlook on his performance.

"When my stomach hangs way out over my belt so that I can't see my toes, I want to have the personal satisfaction of being able to say I gave everything I had," he said. "And I think I can say that."

Fellow senior Billy Ray Smith said the final minutes were the most special.

"Maybe toward the end, there was an extra pass to get the ball to a senior," he said. "The seniors may have been working a little harder to get the ball."

"We're doing things a little better than we were a month ago," Massop said. "I think we're blending as a unit."

Netters go 2-1 at Arkansas

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. — After opening the weekend with a disappointing 8-1 loss to Arkansas, the K-State tennis team rebounded Saturday and Sunday to post easy wins over Wichita State and Baylor in women's tennis action in round-robin play at the University of Arkansas.

The Wildcats swept four of the five singles matches with the Shockers (No. 2 singles was not played) without losing a set. K-State then won all three doubles matches in straight sets.

On Sunday, K-State posted a 7-2 win over Baylor, again with relative ease. Of the five singles and two doubles matches won by the 'Cats, only two weren't in straight sets.

No. 4 singles player Valerie Rive, No. 5 Theresa Burcham and No. 6 Suzanne Sim won both matches on Saturday and Sunday, as did the doubles teams of Marijke Nel and Rive at No. 2 and Burcham and Sim at No. 3.

Lacrosse team splits at KU

The K-State lacrosse squad, in its first-ever competition, split a pair of games with the University of Kansas in Lawrence during the weekend.

Saturday, K-State tried to work through its inexperience on defense in falling to KU, 8-3, but Sunday, the young K-State players surprised thier cross-state rivals, pulling out an 8-7 victory.

"They were really surprised at us," K-State coach Dave McConnell said. "Our defensive players had never played a game before. The guys were pretty much brand new to the sport."

"It was a real learning experience for our younger guys, regardless of whether we won or lost."

The lacrosse team's next game is March 24 at Memorial Stadium against KU.

Spring favors tornados

Campus prepares, tests warning sirens

By The Collegian Staff

Thanks to the classic movie "The Wizard of Oz," the image of the state of Kansas, for many, includes the common occurrence of tornados.

Rich McNulty, deputy meteorologist for the Kansas National Weather Service, said tornados are possible at all times of the year, but are most common in the months of March, April and June, when conditions are most favorable for severe thunderstorms.

This week has been designated "Severe Weather Awareness Week" in Kansas by Gov. Mike Hayden, with the 13th Annual Tornado Drill for the state scheduled for Tuesday morning.

The National Weather Service will initiate the drill with a simulated tornado warning, and schools across the state will participate in the drill, said Riley County rural fire chief Del Petty.

John Lambert, director of public safety, said K-State will participate in the drill.

The Department of Public Safety will circulate about 200 flyers to department heads and administrators to inform people on campus of the approaching tornado season and of steps to follow during a tornado warning.

According to the flyer, studies of injuries received during a tornado have shown that 75-80 percent of the fatalities were to individuals who were not indoors.

Lambert said the Physical Plant whistle and the siren near Kimball and Denison avenues will sound for three minutes Tuesday morning.

The sirens will not actually interrupt classes, but Lambert said he hopes the sirens make people think.

"I would hope that if threatening weather ever comes up when they're holding class and the siren goes off, they know what the siren means," he said.

The plant whistle is sounded regularly every morning at 10:20 to make sure it works. It is also set off for three minutes on the first Monday of every month at the direction of the county emergency preparedness coordinator, Lambert said.

Lambert said in the past, people in Blumont Hall and other buildings on the corners of campus have not heard the sirens when they were sounded, and some have expressed a concern that better de-

Irishfest brings pre-celebration to campus with UPC activities

By Sandy Hegarty
Collegian Reporter

The Irish festivities have already begun on campus and will continue this week as a pre-celebration of St. Patrick's Day.

The Union Program Council Special Events Committee is sponsoring Irishfest, which began Thursday and continues through Tuesday.

"This is the third year for the event," said Mike Penner, UPC program adviser. "It's a fun kind of event, and it's a good time of year to do something like this."

The Special Events Committee is sponsoring a green carnation sale and a shamrock hunt. The carnations will be sold from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. today outside the Stateroom for $1 each. The shamrocks are hidden throughout the Union and can be redeemed for prizes at the UPC office on the third floor of the Union.

"We hide shamrocks throughout the Union every day, and people go to the office to claim such prizes as green carnations and candy bars," Penner said. "We usually get 100 to 150 people to participate in this event."

Some events that have already taken place include a green Jell-O eating contest.

"It's easy to plan this kind of event," Penner said. "This doesn't take much time commitment from the students, and it's a change of pace for them."

Penner said the attendance of these events is hard to judge, because many people pass through and just stop for a few minutes and move on. There are usually a few hundred people at each event.

The William Jewell College Caledonian Pipe Band, a bagpipe band, will perform at noon today in the Union Courtyard. Penner said this is the third year the pipe band has performed during Irishfest.

The Griffing, Verschelder and Weidhaas Traditional Celtic Band will perform at noon Tuesday in the Union Art Gallery.

"These events seem to go over well with the students," Penner said. "They entertain them while they're in the Union during the lunch hour."

Students attend History Day

By Samantha Farr
Collegian Reporter

About 115 sixth- through 12th-grade students from Riley County and other surrounding school districts attended and competed in History Day Saturday.

Marion Gray, professor of history and coordinator of the event, said History Day began in Kansas eight years ago, but has existed for 15 years on the national level.

"The main purpose is to encourage interest in history and to foster it in young people," Gray said. "It's educational. We help teach them more about what history really is."

Students could enter one of seven categories: historical paper, individual project, group project, individual performance, group performance, individual media presentation or group media presentation.

History Day contests have two divisions according to school grade. The junior division includes students in grades six, seven and eight, while the senior division includes students in grades nine, 10, 11 and 12.

Gray said student projects and presentations follow a different theme each year. The 1990 theme is "Science and Technology in History."

"The theme gives some focus, but will invite a wide variety of topics," Gray said.

The top two winners in each category advance to the state History Day competition May 5 in Abilene. He said the top two winners in each category there advance to the national contest in June.

History Day judges are working historians and professionals who volunteered their time to the competition. Judges consider three items in determining the point total within each category.

Historical quality counts for 60 percent of the grade, quality of presentation contributes 20 percent and adherence to the theme determines 20 percent of the final point total.

Marc Henrikson and Allen Sutton, eighth graders at Pike Valley Junior High School in Courtland, said they used several libraries and the interlibrary loan program to research their group media presentation of "The Robotic Arm."

Sutton said the presentation took hours of work at school and at home.

"We wanted to learn more about history," Henrikson said. "We know and understand more about robotics involved in technology and industry."

Natalae Anderson, an eighth-grader from Fort Riley Junior High, said her teacher suggested she compete in the individual performance category.

"My mother and I were talking on the back porch, and we came up with the idea of Madame C.J. Walker, also known as Sarah Breedlove, and her invention of the straightening comb," she said.

Dorothy Anderson, Natalae's mother, said they started thinking of some things black females had invented.

"Although there's more information available on black men, there's not a lot on black women," she said.

Natalae, who competed for the first time Saturday, was the first-place winner with her performance "Out of the Dark, Into the Light" in the junior division.

Thirty-two of the 115 participants placed either first or second, earning them a place in the state competition.

Gray said History Day began with historians looking at science fairs and deciding it was important to have such events concerning history.

"We want to give the students encouragement, recognition and reward," he said. "I hope the students benefit the most. That's the real goal."

Motley Crue dazzles audience

Stage presence, special effects enhance band's showmanship

By Tomari Guinn
Staff Reporter

Explosions of fire, cannons, and lasers dominated the Motley Crue concert Friday in a show that took the audience from the early sounds of Crue up through its current album.

Lead singer Vince Neil was in fine form from the onset when the band

Review

hit the stage of Bramlage Coliseum with "Kickstart My Heart" amid an eruption of roars from the audience. Neil had the audience following his every movement, from his suggestive gyrations with the Nasty Habits dancers during "Girls Girls Girls," to his working of every corner of the stage during "Smokin' in the Boys Room."

Following a lengthy keyboard and guitar solo by Mick Mars, drummer Tommy Lee, the apparent crowd favorite, went out over the audience, his drum set suspended from cables, allowing him to cross the entire arena floor, only yards from the screaming crowd.

"Hang on," he yelled. "I'm about to play you some of my favorite kick-ass songs of all time."

Lee then proceeded to accompany rock classics from AC/DC and Led Zeppelin with his hard-hitting, pulsating drumming.

The Crue played old favorites such as "Live Wire," "Too Young to Fall in Love," "Shout at the Devil" and "Wild Side." It also showed why "Dr. FeelGood" was a No. 1 best-selling album by playing five strong songs from it, including "Rattlesnake Shake," "Slice of Your Pie" and the title track.

Each of the songs was performed with crisp execution, but the band showed signs of a lack of inspiration and seemed to be only going through the motions at various points in the show.

The injection of a few new songs into the act seemed to be needed as the Crue seemed bored with performing essentially the same act as was performed in Kemper Arena in Kansas City, Mo., three months ago.

For the most part, the band was on its toes and certainly proved it deserves its reputation as a Hollywood-type rock 'n' roll band as each song became a show of its own.

Not a song was played without special effects. A blanket of red and green lasers covered the audience during one song, and fiery explosions rattled many others.

Highlights of the concert came during the encore when the Crue returned for its classic rock ballad "Home Sweet Home." The band then kicked into a rousing rendition of

Gallery displays regional artworks

By Elvyn Jones
Collegian Reporter

The art exhibits in the K-State Union Gallery are designed to give students an opportunity to acquaint themselves with different art media and with artists who create works outside of the mainstream.

Kendall McMinimy, chairman of the Union Program Council Arts Committee and senior in journalism and mass communications, said his eight-member committee shares responsibility with the Department of Art in selecting exhibits for the gallery.

The committee asks faculty members from the art department to recommend regional artists for possible shows. Once it has the recommendations, the committee asks the artists to submit slides from which it can make selections, McMinimy said.

He said he is seldom disappointed in the shows after picking them from the slides, but the slide presentations seem to limit the artist.

"You see a lot of different character in the shows that you don't see in the slides," he said.

The committee tries to select a variety of sculptures, paintings, ceramics and other art forms, McMinimy said. The idea is to expose students to something different in art, such as the Phillip Blackhurst exhibit last fall, rather than just realism, he said. The Blackhurst exhibit incorporated abstract sculpture with paintings and photographs.

Mike Ribble, adviser of the Arts Committee and graduate student in educational administration, said the unusual shows pull more people into the gallery.

In order to better gauge the success of shows and get feedback from students, a sign-in book has been included with the exhibits since last fall, Ribble said.

The committee seldom pays for exhibits. Although sales are sometimes made through exhibits, artists are mostly looking for recognition when they exhibit in a university setting, McMinimy said.

"Artists don't consider universities good places to sell," he said.

The committee can spend about $300 per show, which is used to pay for the artists' shipping and transportation costs, McMinimy said. The spending limit and the lack of security in the gallery limit the exhibits to regional artists.

John Vogt, chairman of the Art Department Exhibition Committee and associate professor of art, said the Union Gallery is not an art department gallery, but the Arts Committee is generous in allowing the art department to use it.

Use of the gallery helps graduate students meet the requirement of an exhibition they need to receive a Master of Fine Arts degree, Vogt said.

The art department also sponsors an annual faculty show and various invitational shows of well-known regional artists.

however, that earned Griffin's praise.

"K.B. did a great job on the inside," Griffin said. "She may not be as big as some other players, but she's got a heart as big as Dallas."

SATURDAY'S GAME

Hazim scored 21 points and Miller added 19 as the Lady Cats downed Nebraska 71-63 in the tournament's first-round game.

K-State struggled from the floor, shooting just 35.8 percent for the game, but outbounded Nebraska 61-46 to get the win.

Hazim struggled to a 3-for-14 night from the field, but burned Nebraska at the foul stripe. The junior from Topeka hit 15 of 19 charity shots.

K-State trailed much of the first half and didn't take the lead for good until Rita Matteucci hit a jumper off an inbound pass early in the second half to move the Lady Cats to a 34-33 advantage.

David Svoboda, sports reporter, contributed to this report.

Concert

"Dr. FeelGood" before taking its bows and departing the Coliseum.

Upcoming group Faster Pussycat opened the show and made its impression on the crowd with biting, guitar-heavy rock 'n' roll. One problem the group had was lead singer Taime Downe's inability to be heard over the guitars at various points in the concert.

Although the crowd didn't know the words to most of the songs, it responded to the group's energy and got into the headbanging mood.

Faster Pussycat played five songs from its current album, "Wake Me When It's Over," including current singles "Poison Ivy" and "House of Pain."

A heavy metal rap song was the high point of the group's performance. "Babylon" was from the group's self-titled debut album.

But it was the Crue the audience paid money to see, and it gave a performance well worth the $20 price of admission.

part of history as the team ended the magic with a 92-82 win over Missouri.

That moves us into your junior year, and the first game in Bramlage. You had 26 points in the come-from-behind 81-77 win over Purdue.

How about that second-straight win in Allen against KU? You played the whole game again and had 18 points. That was the time when Fred McCoy and Lance Simmons put some serious hurt on the KU big men.

It's funny that the biggest win the team got last year came after you missed a jumper off a set play. You remember it, don't you? You got the ball, moved around a pick by La-Keith Humphrey, shot over the Missouri defense, and felt your heart fall to the floor when it rimmed off.

You probably really didn't have time to feel it happen, though, because our buddy Tony "the barber" Massop tipped that sucker in so fast none of us had time to do anything but go nuts. That's the only time I can ever remember screaming on press row.

This year's been pretty great, too. Everyone thought you were having a terrible year individually and that the team was going down the drain with you, and then you go out and lead the team to wins over Missouri, Oklahoma and Iowa State.

If getting married leads to the kind of performances you've given us this year, I hope Lon sets up a mass wedding before the Big Eight tourney.

Oh, well, time to wrap this thing up. I know you get uncomfortable when people talk about you like you're something special.

But, my friend, you are something special. You're just a regular guy who has done some things over the past four years that could hardly be called regular.

If I ever have a son, I want him to be just like Steve Henson — quietly confident, courteous, and a class act on and off the court.

Thanks for showing me and everyone else that hard work can make a big difference in life. It's an example I hope we've all learned from.

Your fan (and hopefully a friend),
David Svoboda

Lambert said the University could use more sirens, and it has been discussed within the department.

"How far that whistle is heard, I don't know," he said, "but I think the extremes of the campus may not get the word."

The Veterinary Medicine Complex and Jardine Terrace Apartments are two complexes that are possibly out of the sirens' range, Lambert said.

A tornado struck the edge of the University June 6, 1966, Lambert said.

The students select whatever material they want to do, she said.

"I've only told one story, and that was to the class, but never before any kids," said Erin White, senior in elementary education, before her first performance. "I am really nervous. I'll probably forget it since we don't get to use the books."

White told the story of Cinderella and made no noticeable mistakes.

Some of the students Nichols has in her classes are filling an arts and sciences requirement. Others may have been advised to take the class to overcome anxiety about speaking in public, Nichols said.

White said she took the class because she thought it would help her speak to groups.

The structure of the class helps make students more outgoing, Nichols said.

"This course is fairly active," Nichols said. "Each student must participate in different ways each class time."

ideas that can have an impact on the industry," Boley said.

Block & Bridle sponsored roast beef lunches for the visitors. The beef came from cattle produced at the University. John Woodbury, junior in animal sciences and industry, coordinated the lunches. Woodbury said more than 500 meals were served.

"The annual Cattlemen's Day is an excuse for cattlemen to see old friends," said cattlemen Henry Gardiner. Gardiner received the 1990 Stockman Honoree award from the Livestock Meat and Industry Council and the animal sciences and industry department.

Many visitors and exhibitors said Cattlemen's Day has been an annual success.

"The main thing that makes the day so successful is that people really look forward to coming back every year," Riley said.

Cattlemen's Day was sponsored by the animal sciences and industry department.

free to reorganize itself and not let his mind be distracted."

Intuition and inspiration make architecture similar to art, Chang said. Inspiration, he said, makes seemingly unrelated elements suddenly fit together logically.

After completing his studies at Princeton, Chang practiced architecture in Thailand for 17 years. During that time, he also taught architecture part-time at the Fine Arts University of Thailand.

In 1967, he became an architectural educator at K-State. He said he finds teaching young people very rewarding and believes it is important that he pass his knowledge and experience on to students.

"No man can stay in this world forever, and it's a nice feeling to know that whatever we learn from experience can be built upon by others," Chang said. "It would be foolish to let young people make the same mistakes the older generations have made. Progress is made when students can learn from whatever is already known and improve on it."

Chang recalls an experience he had at Princeton that encouraged him in his education. He was struggling while learning the English language when an American friend jokingly told Chang that he was compounding the difficulty by trying to speak with an American accent. Chang's friend encouraged him to speak English with the same accent he would use in speaking Chinese.

"He said that my Chinese accent had some charm in it," Chang said. "After that I began progressing every day, because I was speaking English with confidence. You can't progress with fear. Realizing that was an important part of my education."

As a teacher, Chang tried to give his students that same confidence.

"I always told my students that no one is stupid enough to not become a good architect if they work hard enough," he said. "By telling yourself that you can do it, you become a person who can do it."

Chang does not intend to stop contributing to the field of architecture. His two papers will eventually be incorporated into his forthcoming book, possibly to be titled "Architectural Intelligence."

Third World countries had two cars, as many Americans do?" Nair said. "What will the impact on the environment be?"

Nair prefaced her criticism of American agriculture as a role model with a history of its development. She said during westward expansion most farmers used up land and then moved to new soil, rather than maintaining their farms.

Third World countries do not have enough capital to adopt American development techniques used in the past 200 years. She also said a lack of equity still exists among farmers in the United States.

"If, after 200 years, American agriculture is on the way to sustainability — and that is a crawl — there is still no evidence of equity," Nair said. "In your laws, you are still rewarding the farmer who uses the most input."

Nair's material was part of research for an upcoming book on land and labor usage in American agriculture. She said she expects the book to be finished near the end of next year.

Retired general speaks on women in combat history

By Anne Krauss
Collegian Reporter

Molly Pitcher gained fame as a woman in combat, and women like her have been doing the same since the Revolutionary War, retired Air Force Brig. Gen. Wilma Vaught said Monday.

Women have always been involved in the military, Vaught said. She cited examples of women who had fought in the Revolutionary, Mexican, Spanish-American, Civil, World, Korean and Vietnam wars.

"There have always been some women striving to do whatever," Vaught said. "If there were astronauts, a woman wanted to be one. If men were firing guns, there were women who wanted to fire guns. If we were on the front line of Germany, women wanted to be there."

Only the motivation for becoming involved in the armed forces has changed over the years, she said.

"Originally, women wanted to arm themselves against some threat to their person, their family, their home," Vaught said. "Later, they were running away from something or thinking of it as something to do until they got married. Now women look at it as a career move."

About 222,000 women are in active military duty and another 180,000 are in the national guard and reserves, she said, attributing the large number to the government's switch to an all-volunteer force.

"You can look to it in terms of names to numbers," Vaught said. "After the American Revolution, you could find all the women involved and write down their names. Now we have to look at it in terms of numbers."

Although the numbers have gone up, women still struggle for equality and search for total opportunity, she said. Attitudes typical of western civilizations have often held women back.

Vaught said societies often tried to protect women because they bore children, because societies doubted women's ability to withstand the pressure of battle, or because it supported the concept of chivalry.

"To me, any woman who can put up with the stress of three to five school children and their schedules and survive can handle a battle," she said.

The military tended to relax its restrictions toward women in the forces during times of war, Vaught said.

"It was characteristic of the military profession that it didn't want us until an emergency came along and they needed us," she said. "Then, when things were normal, after the emergency, women were sent home and told 'We don't need you now.'"

Vaught said other barriers to women in the military have been restrictions on the type of positions women can achieve. Being unable to occupy combat positions makes women less competitive for promotions, she said.

Concrete changes in the way the military treated women began to take place in the late 1960s, Vaught said.

"It was a turbulent time because of the Vietnam War, but also because of the great push for equality for women," she said. "Everyone was confident the Equal Rights Amendment would pass, especially the military, so they began preparing for it."

Vaught said the first ROTC unit was opened to women in 1969 and the first female general was promoted in 1970.

A number of changes occurred during the 1970s, including two U.S. Supreme Court cases that ruled against military regulations.

The first decision, which came in 1971, said pregnant women in the service could remain on active duty. The second ruling in 1973 stated a service woman's husband could receive the same benefits as military wives.

Other advancements for women included the allowing of female Army and Navy pilots and the opening of the military academies to women.

Lady Cats Stephanie Lane, Elyse Funk and Amy Davidson watch their hopes go down the drain for a women's Big Eight Tournament championship title in the last minutes of their loss to Oklahoma State 72-65 in Salina Monday night.

Lady Cats suffer heartbreak

Oklahoma State Cowgirls win Big 8 Tournament title

By Scott Paeke
Sports Reporter

SALINA — Two weeks. Two heartbreaks.

Moments after the final buzzer sounded Monday at Salina's Bicentennial Center, all five K-State Lady Cat starters buried their heads in their hands as the Oklahoma State Cowgirls were presented the championship trophy for winning the 15th Annual Big Eight Conference Women's Tournament.

O-State's 72-65 win kept K-State from earning an automatic bid to the NCAA Tournament. It also prevented the preseason conference favorites from avenging a second-place league finish to the Missouri Tigers. The Lady Cats lost a share of the crown Feb. 28, when the Kansas Jayhawks pulled off a 73-70 upset in Bramlage Coliseum. "I don't know which hurts worse. They both feel pretty bad," junior guard Nadira Hazim said. "Every game we played in this tournament, we wanted to go out and prove to ourselves that we were better than what we showed at the end of the regular season."

"I guess we didn't raise our play to that extra level that we needed tonight."

"We definitely wanted this tournament championship as bad as anything," senior forward Rita Matteucci said. "Not only would it have put us into post-season play, but we wanted to overcome the disappointment of losing the league title."

For the first 25 minutes, K-State appeared to be in good shape. The Lady Cats held a 45-40 lead with 13:58 remaining, and had led by as many as 11 in the first half. But O-State's pressure defense forced turnover after turnover in the second half, as the Cowgirls built a 64-51 lead.

"They got pretty hot, and we tried to tighten up our defense," Hazim said. "There's nothing we could really do when they hit like they were. It seemed like they were scoring from everywhere."

"When something like that happens, you've just got to keep playing hard," Matteucci said. "I thought we did a good job of staying in there."

K-State rallied to cut O-State's lead to 64-51 at the end of the first half. ■ See REACT, Page 10A

South African troops quiet rioting

Leader says anti-apartheid groups can now operate without restriction

By The Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — South Africa sent troops into the black homeland of Ciskei on Monday to quell widespread looting and arson following a military coup that ousted the territory's authoritarian president.

Brig. Gen. Oupa Gqozo of the Ciskei army, who seized power Sunday, told cheering supporters the African National Congress and other anti-apartheid groups would be allowed to operate freely under his new government.

South African Foreign Minister Pik Botha said his government intervened at the request of Gqozo, who led the bloodless coup in the nominally independent homeland on the Indian Ocean coast.

More than 50 factories, many owned by Israelis and Taiwanese, were set afire in a second day of rioting and looting in several parts of Ciskei, witnesses said. Two hotels and dozens of vehicles also were burned, they said.

There were no deaths reported in Sunday's coup, but doctors at Cecilia Makilwane Hospital said three people were fatally stabbed and dozens more injured in the subsequent rioting.

"All the shops and factories were burning," said an employee at a local hotel. "Everybody was looting and there was complete chaos."

Rioters, many of them drunk, broke into shops, removed goods, and then set buildings ablaze with firebombs, the witnesses said. Looters used wheelbarrows to haul away stoves, refrigerators and other items, officials said.

Witnesses said the looting spread Monday evening to the black and mixed-race townships outside the South African port city of East London, about 40 miles from Ciskei's capital of Bisho.

Botha said Monday his government would not entertain any request to intervene in the homeland, but the troops were sent in shortly afterward when the looting began again.

Gqozo received a rousing cheer Monday when he told thousands of people at a stadium in Bisho that the African National Congress and other anti-apartheid groups would be free to engage in political activity in Ciskei.

The ANC is the main black group fighting South Africa's white-run government. South African President F.W. de Klerk legalized the ANC last month, but some homeland leaders still don't allow the group to operate in the territories they control.

Gqozo made the announcement following meetings Monday with the ANC-aligned United Democratic Front.

"We have extended the hand of friendship" to the Front, Gqozo said.

He said he believed Ciskei residents would back his government if it had the support of the Front and other anti-apartheid organizations.

In contrast, deposed President Lennox

Sebe suppressed anti-apartheid activism in the homeland and detained hundreds of opponents.

Ciskei, a 3,600-square-mile territory of about 1 million people, is one of 10 black homelands in South Africa. None is recognized as sovereign by any country other than South Africa.

South Africa established the homelands in the 1960s to try to create separate, tribal-based states for blacks, while whites would retain control of national politics and the economy.

Neither Botha nor Gqozo, the coup leader, said how many South African troops were sent to Ciskei.

Gqozo, 36, said he was encouraged South Africa sent troops to help control the unrest and that South Africa had given no indication it opposed the new government.

Kickapoo needs revealed

Professor says Indians have right to determine destiny

By Heather Stewart
Collegian Reporter

The need for self-determination of the Kickapoo Indians and the shortage of federal funds provided to aid the self-determination effort is a problem for the small, northeast-Kansas tribe, said Don Stull, professor of anthropology at the University of Kansas.

Stull presented the film "Self-Determination and the Kickapoos" and led a discussion at Farrell Library Monday as part of Native American Heritage Month.

The Kickapoo Indian Reservation is located in Brown County, six miles west of Horton, Stull said. There are 1,300 people in the tribe living on 7,000 acres of land.

"The acres are not together in a group, they are divided into checkerboards around Brown County," Stull said.

The key issue is the right of the tribe to guide its own destiny, Stull said. The enactment of the Self-Determination and Assistance Act of 1975 gave the American Indians "freedom to determine one's own destiny."

The Self-Determination Act helped the Kickapoos to regain sovereignty, Stull said. During that year, the Bureau of Indian Affairs received money from the federal government so the Kickapoos would be able to attain their goals. Some of these goals included implementing their own educational programs and become self-sufficient.

"The Kickapoos do have one basic facility, a water treatment plant," Stull said. "This treatment plant is totally operated by the Kickapoos, and a good source of their water supply."

Stull said the Kickapoos wouldn't become self-sufficient without massive government support.

"They will never become economically viable without massive assistance," he said.

The federal government has to start allocating funds just for reservations of the American Indians for them to survive, Stull said.

"Since the Nixon administration, the funds have dwindled until they actually aren't receiving anything from the federal government," he said.

The tribe does have its own school system, called the Kickapoo Nation School, Stull said. The children are taught Indian history as well as the regular subjects taught in other public schools. They are allotted funds from the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

"Shortly after 1982, the Kickapoos really started to notice how

Study shows last-minute review of material improves retention

By The Associated Press

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. — Teachers who spend the last minute of every class asking students for a quick summary of what they had just learned substantially improve the class's education, said a Harvard University study released Monday.

The "one-minute, low-tech, no-cost" technique is among several recommendations of the three-year study of undergraduate education. The study concluded that modest shifts in academic policies can bring big improvements in college classrooms, said Richard J. Light, the study's author.

Light, a professor at Harvard's Graduate School of Education and Kennedy School of Government, said he found students preferred demanding courses and learned the most from teachers who gave substantial, immediate feedback.

The results were drawn from in-depth interviews of 360 Harvard undergraduates — conducted by their fellow students — and a series of seminars that included faculty and administrators from Harvard and about 20 other schools.

Other conclusions of "Explorations with Students and Faculty about Teaching, Learning and Student Life" include:

■ Students said they learned more in classes with tests, oral presentations and papers, which let them know how they were doing "mid-course," instead of getting bombarded with a test or paper at the end. In particular, students indicated they preferred opportunities to rewrite term papers after red-penciling by faculty.

"Students said they learned more from doing the fourth draft than by doing the first draft," Light said.

■ Students found small study groups of up to six people meeting outside the classroom particularly effective. Light said teachers should encourage formation of such groups.

■ Outside activities, such as athletics or clubs, jobs or volunteer work, didn't harm academic performance if such activities took less than 35 hours a week. Students who participate in outside activities "are by far the happiest students," Light said. Therefore teachers should recommend students "get involved," he said.

■ Students indicated that — contrary to reports about the inaccessibility of faculty at Harvard — they found faculty advisers easy to reach and helpful.

"There's a myth about major research universities that faculty are uninterested in meeting and talking with undergraduates. That's just flat-out wrong," Light said.

Harvard students were the only ones interviewed, but Light said the in-depth nature of the questionnaires and the input from the seminars made the results applicable elsewhere.

"I would say that these findings apply both to high schools and graduate education," Light said.

Power plant cooler spiked

SAINT JOHN, New Brunswick (AP) — A nuclear power plant worker was charged Monday with spiking a lunchroom cooler with radioactive water that eight men drank before the contamination was discovered.

The eight who drank the contaminated water last month at the Point Lepreau plant have a slightly higher chance of getting cancer, officials said, but are in no immediate health danger.

Daniel George Maston, 33, assistant operator at the plant bordering Saint John, was arrested Sunday in the incident, which at least one power plant worker said appeared to be a practical joke gone awry.

Royal Canadian Mounted Police released few details of the investigation that led to Maston's arrest.

During a court appearance Monday, Maston was charged with causing a noxious substance to be administered with intent to endanger lives or cause bodily harm. The charge carries a maximum penalty of 14 years in prison.

The contamination was discovered Feb. 22 during routine urine checks of plant employees.

Police officials said the day before, a glass of slightly radioactive heavy water was dumped into a 5.2-gallon cooler that provides water to a dispenser that mixes it into fruit juice.

Cardinal deals with spirits

NEW YORK (AP) — Theologians expressed surprise Monday about Cardinal John O'Connor's disclosure that the rare rite of exorcism has been performed twice in New York in a year.

But other ceremonies dealing with evil spirits, including a baptismal prayer, are more common in the Roman Catholic Church.

O'Connor mentioned the exorcisms during a sermon Sunday and to reporters afterward. He said heavy-metal music spiked with satanic lyrics created an atmosphere conducive to devil-worship and demonic possession.

The cardinal said the exorcisms were approved by the archdiocese's vicar general and appeared to be successful, but gave no other details. He also said the novel, "The Exorcist," is a gruesomely authentic portrayal of demonic possession.

According to a story published Dec. 12 in the San Francisco Chronicle, Pope John Paul II recently increased the number of exorcists in Rome and in Turin, where there are a reported 40,000 devil worshippers.

Last week, police in Indianapolis asked an unidentified priest to pray and sprinkle holy water in a house after they saw a radio, a vase and other objects inexplicably move.

Party chairman hospitalized

WASHINGTON (AP) — Republican National Chairman Lee Atwater was hospitalized Monday for observation after he collapsed while delivering a speech. A spokeswoman said Atwater recovered moments after fainting.

Leslie A. Goodman, press secretary for the Republican National Committee, said the cause of Atwater's blackout was not immediately diagnosed. Atwater, 39 and a regular jogger, had not been ill and his collapse was a "total surprise," Goodman said.

She discounted the possibility that a liquid diet Atwater had been on earlier this year contributed to the blackout, saying he had given up the regimen several weeks ago.

Atwater collapsed about 10 minutes into a breakfast talk to about 100 longtime contributors to Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, at a Washington hotel.

Ex-lover testifies in Bird trial

JUNCTION CITY (AP) — The former lover and church secretary of Thomas Bird testified Monday she watched as Bird shot her husband beside a Geary County highway a day after the two plotted the man's death.

Lorna Anderson took the stand in the second week of Bird's first-degree murder trial in Geary County District Court. The former Emporia minister is charged with the Nov. 4, 1983, slaying of Martin K. Anderson.

"Tom and I had devised a plan whereby I would drive out on (Kansas) Highway 177 in Geary County," Anderson said. "I would stop the van, pretending to be ill. I would then get out of the van and lose my keys, as a means to lure Marty out of the van."

"While Marty was out of the van looking for the keys, Tom was to come up and shoot him."

"Did that happen?" asked special prosecutor Steve Opat.

"Yes, it did," Anderson replied.

Anderson said Bird took Anderson's wallet to make the shooting appear a robbery. Bird was supposed to shoot her in the shoulder, but the gun was out of bullets.

"I told him to get out of there," she said. "He said, 'Don't worry, I can run.'"

Asked why she participated in the plot, she said, "I was in love with Tom and I really wanted to be with him, and I thought that was the way it was supposed to be."

No charges filed in stabbing

JUNCTION CITY (AP) — Authorities said Monday no charges will be filed in the weekend stabbing death of a 23-year-old man.

Police had questioned a 17-year-old girl who was with Carl Crawford when he was found stabbed Saturday morning in a Junction City home.

"It was a clear case of self-defense," said Geary County Attorney Chris Biggs.

Biggs said Crawford was stabbed several times with a butter knife.

SGA cabinet member resigns

The Student Governing Association public relations director, Charlene Nichols, junior in journalism and mass communications, resigned her cabinet position Thursday.

Nichols cited time restraints as the reason for her decision, but said she would continue her involvement in student government.

"I've given a lot of time to student government," she said. "I just ended up spending more time fulfilling cabinet responsibilities than I had to give."

"The public relations director is a very time-consuming position and Charlene is busy with other projects," Student Body President Todd Johnson said. "But I was surprised when Charlene announced her resignation."

Johnson has proposed that an executive assistant position be added to the cabinet to reduce the public relations director's workload. He said the executive assistant will work with committee research, allowing the public relations director to concentrate on student government promotion and advertising.

At Thursday's Senate meeting, Johnson will submit two nominations to replace Nichols.

Johnson said he will nominate Kim Fankhauser, junior in elementary education, as public relations director; and Sue Meyers, junior in marketing, as executive assistant.

Guides give students campus tours

By Stacie Sanders
Collegian Reporter

One of the first things a prospective student does when on campus is take a tour.

Marilyn Trotter, director of New Student Programs, hires students as tour guides. She has been associated with New Student Programs for three years.

She said she selects the guides through a recommendation and interview process.

Trotter said she looks for several qualities in prospective tour guides including the kind of a first impression the guides will make on prospective students. In addition, she said she also looks at the kind of impression prospective guides will make on the phone when setting up appointments and their office capabilities.

Guides' office duties include making appointments, filling out forms, preparing packets for campus visits and stuffing packets for orientation and enrollment, Trotter said.

"You name it, we do it," she said. Trotter said she also looks at a guide's flexibility.

"We need people who are willing to do anything and everything," she said.

Trotter said she prefers to hire freshmen as tour guides because they will be around for several years and have vivid memories of what it was like when they were considering K-State.

"I stress that even though it's a big school for some people, they can fit in here," said Aireka Key, campus tour guide and junior in finance and accounting.

The number of tour guides hired depends on the time of year, Trotter said. More guides are hired in the spring because the office is much busier at that time.

"There is a big increase in campus visitors once the admissions representatives go on the road," she said.

The tour guides are provided with a script from which to learn the campus. Trotter said the script is so long, however, the guides would never be able to learn it all. Therefore, the guides pick out parts that suit them, she said.

Tour guides have some freedom with the content of the tours, Trotter said. There are certain buildings that the guides must stop at during the tour including Holtz Hall, Farrell Library, Cardwell Hall, the K-State Union and a residence hall.

Operators ham it up

Radio club communicates with stations around world

By The Collegian Staff

From the fourth floor of Seaton Hall, members of the Kansas State Amateur Radio Club communicate with licensed amateur radio operators around the world.

About 20 members belong to KSARC, which operates under the call letters W0QQQ, said Doris Grosh, professor of industrial engineering and club adviser. KSARC members and other amateur radio operators refer to themselves as "hams."

Members must be licensed by the Federal Communications Commission before being allowed access to the Seaton radio station, Grosh said. Many KSARC members were not licensed until they came to K-State.

Steve Schallehn, senior in electrical engineering and club president, said he was unlicensed as a freshman but took a University course taught by Grosh and obtained a license within a semester. He has been in the club for four years.

Being licensed is not a requirement for KSARC membership.

"You can belong to the club if you're not licensed, if you're just interested in radio," Grosh said.

Membership dues are $16 per year and are used to buy equipment for the radio station. Meetings are held twice a month in the K-State Union and are open to anyone associated with the University, Grosh said.

"(Amateur radio is) a hobby that sometimes is very useful to society, like when they help pass messages in times of natural disaster, but primarily you just do it because it's fun," Grosh said.

Schallehn said KSARC participated with other ham operators across the United States in forming a network to relay messages from California, following a large earthquake last October.

"At that time, we were waiting in case someone needed to send a message to Manhattan," Schallehn said. "Luckily, no one did."

Club members recently participated in a training session sponsored by the National Weather Services on spotting tornadoes, said Jeff Smith,

Lecture stresses need for learning foreign cultures

By Todd Fertig
Collegian Reporter

The last phase in adaptation to a foreign culture is developing a better understanding of one's own culture, Leah Dushkin, associate professor of anthropology, said at a Pre-Convocation Forum in the K-State Union Monday.

Dushkin spoke on "Encountering Other Cultures" in conjunction with the International Studies Group's monthly luncheon.

William Richter, professor of political science, said Dushkin is knowledgeable of various cultures through her experience as a member of the Peace Corps and is recognized as an expert in South Asian culture.

Adaptation to a foreign culture involves different phases which begins with the experience of culture shock, Dushkin said. The initial shock, which includes getting used to differences in food, sanitation and social practices, usually requires two to three months of adaptation, she said.

Next is a period in which people begin to affect or learn from the conditions which surround them. The third stage is learning objectively about and understanding one's own culture, Dushkin said.

"Not only do you learn about the culture that is foreign to you," she said. "You gain a new perspective on your own culture. You begin to see the differences objectively and begin to evaluate your own culture, in a sense."

Americans have a tendency to be critical of their culture in view of the recent progress of other countries, Dushkin said. These comparisons, she said, are often unfair and improper evaluations of the differences between cultures.

The cultural differences people observe, and the elements of their own culture people subsequently evaluate, are affected by the situations and environments those people encounter while in a foreign culture.

"Journalists and scholars go to other countries and find themselves in a position to truly observe the cultural differences," Dushkin said prior to the forum.

She said James Fallows, Washington editor of the Atlantic Monthly, opposed the popular opinion that Americans must attempt to emulate the practices of foreign countries which are making rapid progress in his recent book "More Like Us: Making America Great Again."

A journalist who was based in Japan and Malaysia from 1986 to 1989, Fallows will present the Convocation Lecture, titled "Sex, Money, and the Pacific Rim: A Contemporary Asian World," in McCain Auditorium at 10:30 a.m. today.

"As somebody who has reported on the Japanese culture, Fallows has his own observations on how their culture differs from ours," Dushkin said. "He said that America doesn't need to try to copy the Japanese, but that we have to become more like ourselves."

The cultural openness Dushkin called "creative disorder" is an essential element to America's success. To impose the rigid environment found in a country like Japan would be stifling to this country, she said.

"It's all right to have inequality as long as there is the chance for social progress, for social advancement," Dushkin said. "Without the rigidity of society found in many other countries, there is always that opportunity which fosters a creative environment."

Linda Richter, professor of political science, agreed that to evaluate American progress by the same standard as other countries is unfair and could cause a harmful tendency for Americans to emulate the practices effective in other cultures.

"There is no single factor which explains why one culture is more successful at a period of time than another," said Linda Richter, who has lived in India, Pakistan and the Philippines. "America's strength is its social flexibility and availability of opportunities to all people."

Dushkin said Fallows finds many of the proposed efforts to copy foreign practices in direct opposition to the practices that have helped make America successful in the past.

"A lot of his concern was heightened by the recognition that these things (America's social flexibility and creative openness) are the opposite to what the Japanese are doing," Dushkin said.

Fallows, whose recent book won the American Book Award, formerly served as the chief speechwriter for former President Jimmy Carter.

Developments in U.S.S.R. encouraging

The times, they are changing, changing. So fast no one knows where it's going. The so-called satellite nations of Eastern Europe are breaking off from their orbit around the Soviet Union and going their own way. Not only are they breaking off, they are being pushed out of the nest by a once over-protective mother Russia.

A former political prisoner is now running Czechoslovakia. The once-banned Solidarity movement is the driving force in Poland today. There is a real possibility of a unified Germany. Hungary quietly moved toward the West, shuffling off the memories of the Russian tanks that blocked their path in 1956. Romania did away with its leadership by firing squad. And even the Soviet Union is talking about elections and democracy.

I'm sure most people really can't grasp the enormity of these events. I'm not sure that I do. This period of time will be studied and scrutinized more exactly than almost any period in history. Talk of post-war history will give way to post-cold-war history. Political scientists, historians, economists, sociologists and a host of other academicians will publish thousands of papers and books on the subject.

But for now, the subject is on the evening news and open to everyone. It's just part of the current events we see every day. We almost expect to turn on the television every night and see some new revelation in the world. What will happen when we run out of communist countries breaking away from their Stalinist ways? We'll probably change the channel to reruns of "Three's Company."

But will the changes continue? Clearly the impetus for this change is the policies of Mikhail Gorbachev. Whether the changes will stay if he gets booted out of power is a question of debate. Many say you can't put the genie back in the bottle and the reforms will remain no matter what happens. That may be so, but if Gorbachev is kicked out by some of the hard line Stalinist leftovers, it could be a real bloody mess.

The reforms in Eastern Europe don't really rock the Gorby boatride yet. His opponents don't see this as the big threat to their mother Russia. But if some of them begin breaking off from the Warsaw Pact and try joining NATO, then they might give Gorbachev a one-way ticket to Siberia. No one likes a weak leader. Jimmy Carter was soundly criticized for "losing" Nicaragua, and it is just a small country with even smaller strategic importance.

This is where George Bush and his crew of cold-war warriors are screwing up. They insist that a unified Germany become a member of NATO, something the Soviets have deemed totally unacceptable. The Soviets have stated they want a unified neutral Germany, allied with neither the Warsaw Pact nor NATO.

This is one of those little hang-ups that could spell disaster. Many high-ranking Soviets, especially those in the military, will not allow a Germany under NATO, not even if some provision is made to keep Soviet troops in the eastern part of the country. "Losing" Germany could be Gorbachev's downfall.

On the other hand, the internal disputes in the Soviet Union have a much greater importance to the end of the cold war. Ethnic disputes like the one between the Armenians and Azerbaijanis will weaken Gorbachev if he can't control them. There are several of these disputes just boiling under the surface of this country with so many diverse ethnic groups.

Last, but certainly not least, is the national movements in the Baltic states. Gorbachev is going to have to walk a fine line when it comes to this problem. He can give the Baltics some autonomy and hope it makes them happy. But if the Baltics demand full independence now, the tanks will almost certainly have to roll in. If Gorbachev doesn't invade, someone else will take his place and do it for him.

This one is Gorby's biggest challenges. In order to remain leader of the Soviet Union, he has to make sure it stays a union. If the Baltics go, so will Soviet Georgia and the Ukraine. And then a few more will follow, or at least try because there will be a civil war that will make 1917 look like a picnic.

Bush hasn't been much help on this one either. His calls for Baltic independence only give Gorbachev's opponents political ammunition. No matter how much has happened in the last five years, the United States and the U.S.S.R. still view each other as enemies. And when your enemies begin praising your actions, maybe you are doing the wrong thing. If Leonid Brezhnev would have endorsed Ronald Reagan for president back in 1980, we might be looking at a second term for that interminable bore Walter Mondale.

Some may say, so what. Let the Russians fight it out among themselves. We'll just pick up the pieces. This is the hard-line American view held by some conservatives. But let me remind them that in a civil war, crazy things can happen. There can be numerous power struggles and some fanatic could get his hands on the button that controls the second largest nuclear arsenal in the world.

So destruction of the Soviet Union is no longer desirable. If we want to see peace, we need to encourage reform without trying to shove it down their throats. It's in our best interest to see Gorbachev stay in power — but don't let that get out.

Legislators try to push parent notification bill

Politics can be incredibly fun for lawmakers, at least in Topeka. Kansas legislators seem to regard the teenage abortion issue as if it was a huge legal Twister game.

First, Gov. Mike Hayden decided that girls under 16 should have to notify a parent before having an abortion. But the Federal State Affairs Committee, which normally handles issues like abortion, rejected it.

Eventually, Rep. Rex Crowell, chairman of the House Transportation Committee and supporter of the notification bill, had a bright idea. He used his committee to give the abortion bill a second chance.

The stricter parental notification bill replaced the contents of a formerly insignificant transportation bill, yet used the same number. The new bill required doctors to notify both parents in writing, 48 hours in advance of performing an abortion on a girl under 18.

After more twisting and turning, the final result is a transportation bill that requires doctors to orally notify a parent, a 21-year-old blood relative or a clergyman before performing an abortion on a 16-year old. The vehicle bill also allows judicial bypass of the entire notification law.

Proponents of the notification bill are performing these complicated maneuvers in an effort to get what they want. If lawmakers do not have the resources to pass a bill in the open, the bill should be dropped until a more appropriate time. Underhanded tactics should not be tolerated.

Lady Cats overcome hurdles, merit praise

Even in the aftermath of Monday's disappointing loss, congratulations should still go to the Lady Cats for a job well done.

The K-State women's team took second place in both the Big Eight Conference and the Big Eight Post-season Tournament, after successfully recovering from adverse circumstances.

First, the team began the season under the pressure of being the conference coaches' preseason favorite to win the Big Eight title.

Early in the season, the Lady Cats dealt with the most difficult challenge a team could face — the loss of their head coach — when Matilda Mossman resigned Dec. 5.

The team fared well to overcome the difficult adjustment of working under a new coach. Interim coach Gaye Griffin led the K-State women to a 20-10 record, and she should also be commended for what she accomplished after being thrown into the head coaching position.

Although their loss to Oklahoma State Monday denied the Lady Cats an automatic bid into the NCAA Tournament, considering the team's determination and desire to overcome this year's circumstances, they more than deserve a spot among the top 48 teams in the nation.

LETTERS

Logic faulty

Editor,

Well, I guess we all knew it was only a matter of time before someone had to write in about the series of articles called "Gay Life in Manhattan." I'd like to address some of the more interesting points brought out by John D. Meyer and John Renfro.

First off, Meyer stated that editorials belong on the editorial page. That makes sense. I'd like to address that statement by saying letters to the editor that spew out so much discriminatory verbiage belong in the pages of the Ku Klux Klan newsletter. Racism, hate, bigotry and fear are still alive and prospering, and it's not because some verse says so — it's because we learn it.

I can't find much more to rag on John D. Meyer about because his schizophrenic writing style made it difficult to determine what his main point was really supposed to be. But for someone so concerned about logic, I wonder about a person who makes such a ridiculous statement as this: "If God had intended for penises to be in rectums, we'd all be penises or rectums." According to that line of thought, God's actual "intentions" were that we'd all be penises or vaginas. Most everyone I know has a body to go along with their very own rectum to complete the package. Who they share it with is not anyone's business but their own.

As far as John Renfro's letter is concerned, talk about refraining from imposing demented moral values upon the students of a liberal arts college — this guy could take a lesson from himself. The Bible may say a lot of things, but a healthy diet of knowledge includes more than what a few editors hundreds of years ago wanted people to believe. About one specific lament of Renfro's: sodomy is not exclusive to homosexuals. In many states, the definition of sodomy includes heterosexual oral gratification. Maybe Renfro should consider this, so if the opportunity ever arises in his life, he can righteously obey the law by refusing.

Letter presumptuous

Editor,

In John Renfro's letter to the editor March 2, he calls for the heterosexual community to be intolerant of homosexuals. As a member of the heterosexual community who disagrees with this, I feel I must respond.

Renfro first states that homosexuality is illegal because of Kansas' sodomy laws. The laws make all oral or anal sex illegal; the law is not sex specific. This means that upwards of 80 percent of us heterosexuals are criminals as a result of this ridiculous law. Because of this, and since most people don't want sex police peering into their bedrooms, this law is generally ignored and rarely enforced.

Renfro's second point is that homosexuality violates the laws of God and offends him as a Christian. Well, it may violate the laws of his god, but there are hundreds of different religions and hundreds of different views of god and his/her laws in our world. To assert that his god or even some form of the Christian God is the only god is a bit presumptuous.

Renfro then goes on to say that articles about homosexuality also offend him as a heterosexual. I don't know who made him spokesperson for heterosexuals, but I can say with 100 percent certainty that at least one heterosexual, that being myself, actually liked the articles. The articles allowed me to get a better glimpse of a different lifestyle that I don't otherwise have access to.

Fourth and finally, in his conclusion, Renfro calls for intolerance toward homosexuals. By intolerance, judging by his choice of biblical quotes, he seems to be advocating mass murder not only of homosexuals, but also of those like myself who defend them. Talk about violating the laws of man and God! Renfro should consult the Kansas murder and anti-discrimination laws for the laws of man. As for the laws of his god, I would remind him "thou shalt not kill," and "let he who has not sinned throw the first stone."

Soviet candidates supporting reform win voters' favor

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW — Candidates who want faster reform won elections across the nation's Slavic heartland and Boris N. Yeltsin easily gained a legislative seat in the Russian republic, unofficial returns indicated Monday.

Yeltsin has said he will seek the presidency of the republic, which traditionally means a place on the Communist Party's ruling Politburo. That could return the Communist maverick to the membership he lost in February 1988 for advocating speedier change.

Leaders of popular movements in the Ukraine and Byelorussia, an outspoken television commentator in Leningrad and a defiant editor in Moscow also appeared to have won in Sunday's local and republic elections.

"We're so happy! Such success!" said Irina Rozhenko of the Ukrainian pro-democracy movement Narodny Rukh.

Byelorussia, the Ukraine and the vast Russian republic account for 80 percent of the Soviet Union and more than two-thirds of its 290 million people.

Most of the 1,800 contests for seats in the legislatures of the three republics remained undecided, with no candidate getting the required majority.

Activists said strong showings in this round nearly guaranteed victories in runoff elections for candidates who want to step up the pace of reforms begun by President Mikhail S. Gorbachev. The runoffs are expected in two weeks.

Defeat of old guard local Communist leaders probably would help Gorbachev's liberalization. He has railed against functionaries who hamper reform, and people hoping to exercise new economic freedoms have told of crippling obstacles erected by local party officials.

Ukraine party chief Vladimir A. Ivashko, considered a moderate protégé of Gorbachev, qualified for a runoff against an opponent backed by the Narodny Rukh pro-democracy group.

Union preparing budget

Officials hope 'break-even' philosophy is successful

By Angela Tholstrup
Collegian Reporter

The K-State Union has been working on the budget for fiscal year 1991, said Jack Sills, director of the Union.

The Union's revenue-making departments are the bookstore, food service, recreation and vending services, Sills said. The copy center, information counter and Union Program Council are not full departments.

The department heads make out a budget that is reviewed by the associate director, Sills said. The budgets then go to the director and business manager for modifications. Next, the budgets are merged into one general budget that is presented to the Union Governing Board.

The Union has one large account for all the departments, said Jack Thoman, business manager of the Union.

"Generally speaking, the budget is very tight," Sills said. "If we can come up with a break-even budget next year, I will be very pleased."

The Union has a break-even philosophy, Thoman said. It does not expect to make a profit.

In the 1989-1990 budget, a $46,000 profit was budgeted for the $8.5 million non-profit retail corporation.

"It won't make the $46,000 this year," Sills said. "We will celebrate if we break even."

The operating costs and inventory needs exceed the revenue, Thoman said. The Union receives $17 per semester for full-time students and half as much for part-time students, for a total of $580,000.

"The Union would never be in the black without the student fees," Thoman said. The Union depends on state-funded buyers to use its services, and the buyers are having funding cuts, Sills said. He said he hopes the funding cuts won't mean fewer students at K-State.

The Tax Reform Act of 1986 has had an impact on the budget, Sills said. It means the Union must have similar benefits for the newly hired as well as the highest classification of employees.

"We don't have to give dollar for dollar, but the programs for retirement and health insurance have to be the same," Sills said.

The Union tries to keep its retirement plan similar to the plan of the University, he said.

Health insurance has gone up, Sills said. It was $88.73 for a single employee. Single-employee coverage will be $119.34 for this fiscal year. The Union decreased coverage so it would not go over the 34.5 percent

Union cafeteria profits help student services

By Tim Clopton
Collegian Reporter

When students pay for a hamburger and fries at the K-State Union cafeteria, they may not realize they will ultimately receive the profits made from their purchases.

The food service is a non-profit department of the Union.

"It's owned by the students and faculty because it's part of the K-State Union operation," said Jack Sills, director of the Union. "The Union is constructed entirely from student fees and has been maintained and operated entirely by student fees, with the exception of revenue created by our own organization."

No figures were available pertaining to the amount of revenue created by the food service, but Malley Sisson, food service director, said all extra money is put back into the operation.

"If we have revenue over expenses then we can turn that revenue back into services for the students," Sisson said.

Sills said one reason that revenue figures were not kept for the food service is because it is one of several departments in the Union.

"We operate like a family, and the food center is one member of that family," Sills said. "If it were operating alone, then (the Union) would be charging administrative support and we would be charging for the maintenance. There are a lot of things that are not charged for the operation."

"The Union has one bank account

Roadies and local stage hands — the crew — push Motley Crue's stage to the end of the Bramlage Coliseum floor where it was used in concert Friday night.

THE CRUE CREW

Before the members of Motley Crue took the stage at Bramlage Coliseum Friday, members of another crew worked throughout the night rigging the arena with light and sound systems.

Larry Sapp, show producer, said space restrictions in Bramlage made setting up the show, which consists of 11 semi-trailer trucks of equipment, more difficult than most.

"The lack of physical space made for longer load-ins and load-outs because two or three semis can't be fit in the building at once," Sapp said.

That lack of space brought about a smaller show than the other concert performances on the tour, said Jake Berry, production manager.

"It was pretty narrow, from wall-to-wall," Berry said. "Weight restrictions of the roof forced fewer lights to be hung from the ceiling."

"The average person at the concert would never notice the difference, unless the person has been to every show on the tour."

Berry separates the stagehands into groups and personally directs half of them while his assistant is in charge of the other half.

"It's just like being a foreman on a construction site," he said.

Sapp said 45 crew members travel with the tour, and locals are hired to supplement those workers. The lighting crew is sent out through a separate company, he said, but the rest of the crew is hired on the basis of their work with other tours.

"With a tour of this size, the best guys for lighting are usually sent," he said. "Some of the other crew will work for one tour and then try to find another tour to hook up with."

This constant schedule forces many to be on the road for months at a time.

"I was at home a total of 10 days all of last year," Berry said.

"It's good pay, but you're away from home all the time working long, unsociable hours. When you do go home you expect everyone to change their lifestyle just because you're there, but they don't."

Sapp was recently divorced — not because of his absence from home — but because of his presence.

"I spent 15 years on the road, and everything was fine," he said. "When I started staying at home more the past year, we realized we couldn't stand each other."

Still, others wouldn't trade life on the road for anything.

Tim Luzzi, bass guitar technician with Motley Crue for eight years, said he enjoys the variety of life on the road.

"It's a fun job," Luzzi said. "People forget that it's fun and let it become routine. Every job is great the first day, so I look at each day as new and exciting."

Responsibilities for Luzzi include ordering and taking care of bassist Nikki Sixx's guitars, Luzzi said. During the concert, he stands watch to ensure Sixx doesn't break a string.

"I'm the first line of defense for him," Luzzi said. "If something goes wrong, I'm the one he has to turn to."

He said another advantage to the travel is the moment he steps off the bus, he is already at his job.

"Everyone has this picture that we're always busy, but I'm not. I just go from one place to another," Luzzi said. "I may stay another day on the road or for years. It will just depend on how I feel."

One disadvantage to the travel is not being able to be choosy when it comes to suppertime, he said.

"The hardest part is on weekends when you can't reach into your own refrigerator for what you want to eat," Luzzi said. "You take what you can get."

Rob MacKenzie, of the lighting crew, is 20 years old and in his third year on tour with a band.

"I wouldn't know what to do if I wasn't on the road," he said.

"It just comes natural."

"Once you've been on the road for a while there's nothing else you want to do," Sapp said.

Tours are scheduled so that a performance usually comes every 300 miles to 400 miles, which keeps travel time bearable, he said.

"We usually come in, see a building and leave," Sapp said. "We're in most cities for one night only, which doesn't leave us a lot of spare time."

A tour of this magnitude must have a performance almost every night to cover the costs of the equipment, he said.

Most of the road crew has very little contact with the bands, Sapp said.

"They work two hours a day," he said. "We work about 20 hours a day, every day."

Sapp rarely attends the actual performances of the band.

"I occasionally see parts of them," he said. "After a while they're all the same."

For MacKenzie, a typical day's

K-State students and part-time stagehands Pat Ryan and John Berg assemble the stage.

Eleven truckloads of instruments, lights, costumes, speakers and even explosives provided the material for a heavy metal concert.

work starts at 8 a.m. and breaks after 4 p.m., only to start again at 8 p.m. and finally end at 3 a.m.

"I just have to be alert during the concert in case something goes wrong," he said, "but that's enough work for me. The rest of the time I'm doing a lot of physical labor."

Electrician Billy Johnson said he averages 16 to 19 hours of work a day.

"This is a strange lifestyle," Johnson said. "We lead a schizoid schedule. We're either going crazy or doing absolutely nothing."

"Sometimes I sit on the bus and think 'I've been here before,'" Luzzi said.

Johnson is responsible for making sure the cables don't snag during the show. If they do, he must climb thin rope ladders to the problem and fix it.

"It's a good thing I don't have an aversion to heights," he said.

Berry said road crews often feel neglected by the enormous publicity top bands receive while the people behind the scenes get little, if any, recognition.

"Nine out of 10 people at the concert will think the rigging went up by itself," he said.

But some feel the good money makes up for the lack of recognition.

"Most of the time we feel appreciated. Nobody works cheap anymore," Sapp said.

Touring with different groups allows the crew members to ex-

Vince Neil and "the Crue" perform two hours; the crew spent 15 hours on the set.

perience a variety of musical cultures.

Sapp said he has had the opportunity to be on tour with groups such as Alice Cooper, Black Sabbath, Teena Marie, REO Speedwagon and the Bus Boys.

"I toured with Julio Iglesias for a couple of years," he said. "It was a nice change of pace. The music and shows were really boring, but I got to play a lot of golf."

"Every tour is different with a different set-up and cast of characters. It tends to throw together a lot of different people."

Lady Cats' quest for title falls short

By Scott Paske
Sports Reporter

SALINA — Eight minutes prevented K-State's Lady Cats from making amends for losing the Big Eight Conference title last week to Missouri — that and Lisa McGill. McGill, a reserve forward for Oklahoma State, scored 14 of her team-high 16 points in the second half as the Cowgirls won the 15th Annual Big Eight Women's Basketball Tournament, 72-65, over the Lady Cats. The win gave O-State, 20-10 overall, an automatic bid in the 48-team NCAA Tournament, which begins March 14.

The loss leaves K-State, 20-10, hoping tournament selection committee members will award them one of the available at-large berths.

"I'm proud of the way we played," interim coach Gaye Griffin said. "Our goal was to be in the finals and win this tournament. We didn't do that, but at least we were there."

A dry spell midway through the second half kept the Lady Cats from leaving the Bicentennial Center floor with the championship trophy. The Cowgirls, led by McGill and the guard tandem of Althea Cox and Liz Brown, went on a 24-6 run to turn a 45-40 deficit into a 64-51 lead with 5:49 remaining.

Ironically, it was a defensive adjustment that got O-State's offense on track. The Cowgirls offset a 34-percent first-half shooting effort by forcing nine Lady Cat turnovers in a series of 12 possessions.

"We started having someone come out over their screens, sticking a hand in the face or in the passing lane," O-State coach Dick Halterman said. "They weren't getting those easy open passes they got off the screen in the first half."

K-State junior forward Diana Miller felt the wrath of the Cowgirl defense. After scoring 14 points in the first half, Miller managed just six after intermission.

"I think they turned it up a little, plus we had a little lapse on our part," Miller said. "We were hurrying our offense and we weren't moving."

At the other end of the court, McGill, affectionately known as "Mama Barkley" by her teammates, was playing like Philadelphia 76er all-star Charles Barkley underneath. The 5-foot-11 freshman muscled her way to five of O-State's eight field goals during the run. She finished 8-of-11 from the field.

"She was the biggest key to the whole ball game," Griffin said. "She did a great job of posting up and moving back to the ball, and she controlled the boards. That's the bottom line."

Halterman agreed with Griffin's analysis.

"I don't think you'd win without being strong inside," he said. "At the start of the season our inside people weren't very good. Lisa gave us a very good effort there tonight."

With a crowd of 5,325 urging them on, K-State made a final attempt to get back in the game. Sophomore guard Mary Jo Miller sparked a 13-2 run with a pair of layups — one resulting in a three-point play.

Nadira Hazim, one of four Lady Cats in double figures with 17 points, hit a pair of free throws with 2:15 remaining to cut the lead to 66-64. McGill responded with a layup and K-State missed its last six field goal attempts to end the comeback.

Maryland to appeal NCAA sanctions

By The Associated Press

COLLEGE PARK, Md. — The University of Maryland plans to appeal several of the NCAA penalties levied against its men's basketball program, the most serious of which includes a two-year ban on postseason play and three years' probation. "Because we feel so strongly that the sanctions imposed are more severe than our infractions warrant, we intend to appeal several of the penalties," school president William Kirwan said Monday at a news conference.

Kirwan accused the NCAA of failing to take into account Maryland's cooperation with the investigation and the school's previously unblemished record when it banned the Terrapins from 1991 and 1992 postseason tournaments.

Maryland has 15 days to officially notify the NCAA of its appeal, and school officials will use that time to decide which sanctions will be contested, Kirwan said.

Maryland was cited for a lack of institutional control over the program, which was found guilty of 18 rules violations during the three-year coaching tenure of Bob Wade. The NCAA began an investigation last February and sent the university an official letter of inquiry in October.

The Terrapins will also be prohibited from appearing on national television next season, which apparently prohibits them from competing in the 1991 Atlantic Coast Conference tournament. Maryland must also return $407,378 of the money earned from the 1988 NCAA tournament, in which the Terps advanced to the second round.

"The Committee imposed all but the most minor of the prescribed sanctions," Kirwan said. "And, it went beyond the prescribed penalties when it imposed a second year of probation from postseason play and a third year of probation."

"One is left to wonder how the sanctions could have been substantially different if we had repeated violations, been uncooperative, and failed to take decisive actions."

Kirwan estimated the fiscal impact of the sanctions would be $3 million.

Steven Morgan, the NCAA's associate executive director for enforcement, said the committee did consider the university's cooperation when it decided not to impose the restrictions on recruiting or scholarships outlined as part of the NCAA's minimum penalties for major violations.

"The committee gives particular credit to the university and its president for its effort in cooperating with the investigation," Morgan said. "It is also important to note the committee, nonetheless, found substantial violations and thought those resulted from a lack of institutional control from the time the basketball staff was put in place in 1986. That led to some of the substantial penalties here."

ACC Commissioner Gene Corrigan said he was surprised by the severity of the sanctions.

Corrigan also said that because Maryland was not allowed to appear on TV he couldn't see how the Terps could participate in 1991 ACC tournament.

The penalties do not affect the Terps' bid for a postseason tournament berth this year.

Hancock to Manhattan via England

By Scott Paske
Sports Reporter

The road from England to Manhattan through Texas is not commonly traveled, but K-State tennis player Sara Hancock had her reasons for making the journey.

"I'm really glad I decided to come here," said Hancock, one of four seniors on the team. "It's been great for me because it's the type of program that's been building up — something I wanted to be a part of."

That desire led Hancock from North Weald, Essex, England, to Midland (Texas) Junior College, where she was the National Junior College Athletic Association champion with K-State teammate Helen Schildknecht at the No. 2 doubles position in 1987. Before she left Midland, Hancock also was the national runner-up at the No. 1 doubles and No. 4 singles positions in 1988. Hancock is a senior in leisure studies and Schildknecht is a junior in physical education.

"I had no idea where Midland was when I was playing in England," Hancock said. "I was told they had one of the top junior college programs in the nation, and I wanted to play. I wasn't quite good enough to play professionally in England."

Hancock's success caught the eye of K-State coach Steve Bietau. Bietau gave her the No. 3 singles job last season, where she responded with a 14-8 record and a fourth-place finish at the Big Eight Tournament.

The Midland connection of Hancock and Schildknecht have joined forces to be Bietau's No. 1 doubles team the last two seasons. The duo finished 3-9 in 1989, but upset Oklahoma's top doubles team to spark a dual victory over the Sooners in Manhattan last year.

"The highlight of my career was beating OU," Hancock said. "The fact that we won such a pivotal match made it rewarding, plus it was our first-ever dual win over them."

“I'm really glad I decided to come here.” — Sara Hancock

"When you look at her individual accomplishments, there isn't a lot of things that just stand out above all the rest," Bietau said. "But, in every important step this program has made in the last couple years, she's been right there. She's been a rather quiet, but significant force."

The current season has been a topsy-turvy one for Hancock, who sputtered to a 2-3 start in singles play.

After being moved from the No. 3 spot to No. 5 on a recent road trip, Hancock responded with three straight wins. Her record now stands at 6-5.

Hancock said the move down in the lineup served as a motivating tool for her.

"It didn't really make me too happy," she said. "I knew the reason he did it was because other players on the team had been playing well, and I hadn't been performing how I should."

"I thought 'If he wants to play me at No. 5, then that's fine.' I want to prove to him that I can play higher. But every position on this team is important, and there's not a whole lot of difference in any one."

Hancock said having four seniors who have experience in the program has been helpful in competing against some of the country's better teams.

"We've used our losses as a learning experience," she said. "We've been through a lot of tight matches here, and it's something you can relate to the freshmen. I just think the fact that we've been there, helps us know what we need to do."

Oklahoma No. 1; Kansas falls to 2

By The Associated Press

Oklahoma on Monday became the third team from the Big Eight to hold the No. 1 spot in the AP college basketball poll this season.

The Sooners (23-4) jumped to the top from fifth after beating the other two teams from its conference which had been No. 1 this season — Missouri and Kansas — in three days.

The victories were decisive — 107-90 over Missouri and 100-78 over Kansas.

The Sooners received 47 of 63 first-place votes and 1,555 points from a nationwide panel of sportswriters and broadcasters to easily outdistance Kansas (28-3), which dropped one spot to second with 1,473 points.

Oklahoma had its first-ever No. 1 ranking last season when it was in that spot for three of four weeks.

The Sooners went to the top spot on Feb. 1 but lost at Oklahoma State three days later and dropped to fifth in the next poll. They rebounded with consecutive home victories over No. 3 Missouri and No. 1 Arizona and held the top spot for three more weeks before losing to Missouri on Feb. 25.

"We're taking it a little bit different than last year," Oklahoma coach Billy Tubbs said Monday. "When you achieve a top ranking for first time, like we did last year, it becomes bigger than what you try to achieve on the court. Right now we're just going to take it in stride and shoot for our final two goals of winning the next two tournaments."

The first of those tournaments will be the Big Eight get-together this weekend in Kansas City where the Sooners could possibly face both Kansas and Missouri. The second, obviously, is the NCAA.

"If there's a time to be number one, I guess now would be it because it means you're playing good basketball at the most important time of the year," Tubbs said.

Oklahoma was only one of nine teams from last week's poll which didn't lose at least one game last week. It's the same 25 teams this week, with the order shuffled to reflect all those losses.

UNLV (26-5) dropped from second to third after losing at Cal-Santa Barbara 78-70. The Runnin' Rebels had three first-place votes and 1,363 points, 66 more than Syracuse (22-5), the Big East regular-season co-champions with Connecticut, which was fourth last week.

Georgetown (22-5), which lost to Syracuse in the regular-season finale on Sunday, moved up two spots despite the loss and was named No. 1 on one ballot. The Hoyas had 1,224 points to edge Missouri (26-4), which dropped from third to sixth after an ugly 98-67 loss at Notre Dame. The Tigers, who had been No. 1 for four weeks this season, had 1,209 points.

Michigan State, which beat Purdue and Minnesota this week to set the stage for a good chance at the Big Ten title, moved from 14th to seventh and was named No. 1 on two ballots.

The Spartans' 1,156 points was 13 more than Connecticut's total as the Huskies (25-5) dropped from fourth to eighth after being beaten 84-64 by Georgetown.

Arkansas (23-4), one of the teams which didn't lose this week, and Purdue (21-6), which lost to Iowa 64-63, rounded out the Top Ten with 1,032 and 1,018 points, respectively.

The Razorbacks had been 12th last week and Purdue fell one place.

Child safety stressed

Program offers series on student families

By Jan Puls
Collegian Reporter

Personal safety for children is one of the issues emphasized in a program offered to K-State student families Feb. 26 through March 10.

The themes for the five-part series on family life education were chosen from results of a survey given to families living in Jardine Terrace. The series is sponsored by UFM in cooperation with the KSU Department of Housing.

The survey was designed to assess student family needs. The only identifiable group of student families live at Jardine, said Lecia Retter, graduate student in human development and family studies, practicum student at UFM and coordinator of the program.

Retter said the survey indicated nutrition, money management, cross cultural relationships, as well as caring for children and discipline are areas of greatest interest to student families. Volunteer instructors will address these topics in two week sessions over the next 10 weeks.

"The response to the survey was outstanding," Retter said.

Of the 176 surveys distributed to Jardine residents living in two-bedroom apartments, 103 were completed.

Retter said she is hopeful that some of the volunteers needed for the program will be Jardine residents.

"There is a wealth of resources at Jardine," Retter said. "I believe the residents have a lot to offer each other." Retter and her husband also live at Jardine.

The series will be taught through various discussion groups, potluck dinners, field trips and brochures distributed throughout the complex laundry rooms, she said.

Many times families of similar ethnic and cultural backgrounds request to live in the same complex. "I hope international families and American families will have the opportunity to interact," Retter said.

These programs will help families learn from one another, she said.

"We don't quite know what to expect or plan for since this has never been done," Retter said. "Although the family life education series is offered to all University student families, Jardine provides a unique concentration of families. This will be helpful for evaluating the educational programs."

"Every start is difficult," said Susanne Tunstall, family housing coordinator. "We'll find out what works as we go."

Retter said it is the goal of UFM to continue the family life education program beyond the 10-week series.

Scheduled activities for the personal safety for children program include a coloring festival, a visit from McGruff, the crime dog on March 6 and a tour of the fire department March 7.

New policy prohibits acts involving sexual violence

By Sandy Hegarty
Collegian Reporter

A new policy prohibiting sexual violence has been put into effect this semester.

According to the policy, no form of sexual violence will be tolerated or condoned at the University. This policy prohibits not only those acts commonly understood to constitute sexual assault, but all attempts to coerce sexual activity as well.

"The policy was drawn up by a committee of students, faculty and staff," said Susan Scott, associate dean of student life. "It took about two years to complete."

"The University of Virginia was the only school we found having such a policy," Scott said. "We are carving a new trail. There weren't any models to follow."

"I think it covers everything," said Mike Lynch, chairman of the committee and assistant vice president for personal development. "The major thrust of the policy is educational."

Scott said a case came up before, and the University tried to handle it using regular channels. There was a problem with the confidentiality, however, and it was determined that a new, specific policy was needed.

Scott said the purpose of the policy is twofold. First, the policy serves to educate members of the University community so they learn what actions are unacceptable. Second, the policy outlines action against those who violate it.

According to the policy:

■ The University will investigate acts of sexual violence perpetrated by or against students and will respond with appropriate action, including suspension or dismissal.

■ Victims of sexual violence will be encouraged and assisted to seek amends to whatever extent they desire through the relevant laws of society. The University has established an administrative review process through which it may administer its own sanctions.

■ The Dean of Student Life will appoint a review panel consisting of himself or a designee, a faculty or staff member and two students currently serving in the judicial branch of the Student Governing Association.

"Extensive training will occur in March on a group to be the review panel," Scott said.

"The problem is how to put together a pool of people to train," said Judy Davis, director of the Women's Resource Center. "It won't go through the traditional Tribunal route unless a dismissal is involved."

Davis said the WRC is mainly working on a public relations effort to help prevent sexual violence.

"We talk to many living groups about the policy and try to educate them on how to avoid these situations," Davis said. "I think it will make a difference over time."

Davis said she believes the University has shown some leadership by developing the policy.

"It's hard to find a school with this sort of policy, but five years from now, everybody will have one," she said.

"We went into a trapping defense late in the game," Griffin said. "We pushed the ball down the floor — that's what gave us the lead in the first half."

"We outshot them, out rebounded them and did a lot of things better than them, but we also turned the ball over a lot more. That's what hurt us."

K-State had a pair of all-tournament team selections in Hazim and Diana Miller. They joined Oklahoma's Angie Alexander, and Cox and Brown from O-State.

increase.

"Another employee benefit is federal minimum wage increases to $4.25 in a couple of increments," Sills said. "April 1, it goes to $3.80." New employees will start at the new minimum wage, and trained employees will receive a 20 cent raise.

The Union employs about 450 people, Thoman said. Employment is based on the busy seasons like the beginning of semesters, book buy-back and catering for banquets.

The Bookstore has been expanding its inventory and services to students, Sills said.

"In order to do this we have had to tie up a lot more money in inventory," he said.

Other expenses for the year have been moving the copy center, moving the business office and the remodeling of the Union Station, Sills said.

The Union's earnings or profits are used to enhance services and to pay for remodeling, Sills said.

Vaught

The issue of drafting women for the armed forces was raised during World War II and addressed again by former President Jimmy Carter in 1980. Vaught said it is still an issue today.

"Carter asked for the restrictions to be lifted, but the Supreme Court ruled 6-3 that it is up to Congress," Vaught said. "Don't ever think that in a moment of need the legislature won't draft women."

Rep. Pat Schroeder, D-Colo., introduced a bill that calls for the Army to test how women do in infantry divisions. Vaught said she doubts the bill will be debated, but that women will be recognized as having the same ability to fight as men in combat.

Despite the opening of many opportunities for women, Vaught said laws that regulate what type of assignments women can draw still exist. She said one law prohibits women from being assigned to aircraft or ships engaged in combat.

"If we took this literally, it would mean if the ship is not out there fighting, women could be on it," Vaught said. "The military looks at it as a policy decision. Women shouldn't be on those ships or in those planes because they couldn't be mobilized."

She said this interpretation lends itself to using women as peacetime fillers, but she doesn't see this role as continuing.

"If you are in Panama, you can't decide to deploy a unit of 10 people and tell them 'You three are women and can't go,'" Vaught said. "If the job needs 10 people, they have to go."

Although retired, Vaught is still active in military and women's issues as president of the Board of Directors of the Women in Military Service for America Memorial Foundation.

Her main objective has been the establishment of the National Memorial to Women in Military Service for America. It will be the first national memorial to women in the military in the United States.

The memorial will be built near the main gate of Arlington National Cemetery in Washington, D.C., and will include an educational and cultural center.

"This is a part of what women's history is all about," Vaught said.

dependant on the government they actually were," Stull said. "There was a severe winter that ruined the crops. Also, the Reagan administration was not as generous as the previous administration. Some funds were cut, and there was a delay on the passage of other federal funds to the tribes."

Stull said the government was partially responsible for the economic problems facing Indian tribes today.

"I think the American government has put Indians in trouble today," Stull said. "If they (the federal government) would have abided by their promises, Indians would probably not be in the trouble they're in today. If we as a country were to decide that the 'Indian problem' were important enough, we could probably do something about it."

which cash from every sale that takes place in the building is put into so all bills are paid, whether it's purchasing food or paying salaries," said Jack Thoman, business manager for the Union.

Sisson said the department heads of the Union have meetings to discuss problems and talk about how they could better meet the University's needs.

"If McDonald's or Burger King were here, there is no way they would all be sitting around sharing their financial statements, trying to figure out their financial statements together or trying to figure out how to better meet the needs of the students," she said.

Although the Union cafeteria is the only establishment of its kind on campus, Sills said it does not constitute a monopoly because there are so many fast food places surrounding the area.

Students who choose to eat off campus have an abundance of choices.

"It's a pretty mobile society. I think, anymore, the student has a lot of options," Thoman said.

Sisson said that if the Union cafeteria did contract out to a fast food establishment, prices would probably rise and employees would probably be paid less.

Home Sweet Home!

The Birthplace

There's no place like home and the day you bring your new baby home is a special day you will remember forever. But we know that you may have a question or concern after you and your baby are dismissed from the hospital. That's why The Birthplace developed our Home Visit Program.

If you live within a 20-mile radius of Manhattan, you may have one of our Birthplace Obstetric or Nursery nurses visit you within a week after you go home to examine both you and your baby. This provides you with an excellent opportunity to ask questions and be assured that all is going well.

This is another service from our family to yours and there is no charge for the visit. All of us at The Birthplace want you and your new baby to enjoy every moment at home sweet home.

Clark: More run production needed

Pitching staff, defense key success in early portion of spring campaign

By David Svoboda
Sports Reporter

If you believe the old line that pitching and defense win championships, look for the Wildcat baseball team to contend for the Big Eight Conference title in 1990.

If, however, you're also aware that you can't win without putting runs on the board, you better curb your enthusiasm a bit.

If the first nine games of the spring campaign are any indication, Mike Clark's preseason worries as to the ability of his pitching staff may have been needless.

But the concern he had over his team's ability to manufacture runs might have been warranted.

"As offensive-minded as the Big Eight Conference is, we have to score runs in order to win," Clark said after watching his team go 6-3 over the early portion of the schedule.

Though the Wildcats have a .667 winning percentage that Clark would gladly take at season's end, they've scored but 41 runs in those nine games. That's not a bad start at first look, but 27 of those runs came in just three contests, including two against non-Division I foe Friends.

And the team has three one-run wins among its six.

"We've got to be able to control the home plate area, not let the (opposing) pitchers control it," Clark said.

The Wildcats' bats came alive Sunday, and the new-found spark resulted in 10 runs clicking up on the Frank Myers Field scoreboard. That output was the largest of the young season for the team.

That encouraged Clark.

"I saw a real consistent effort by our guys this past weekend to show some improvement," he said. "We saw everybody's (Colorado State and Illinois State) best, and that helps prepare us for the conference season."

Make no mistake about it, wins in the non-conference portion of the schedule will sit well with Clark, but the fourth-year Wildcat coach is more concerned with how his team develops in the time leading up to the conference season.

"Everything we do now is building up to that opening series with Oklahoma," Clark said, pointing toward the four-game series with the Sooners scheduled for Frank Myers the final week of the month.

As the team prepares for that series, Clark has been particularly encouraged with the aforementioned pitching staff, which is, he said, ahead of schedule.

"For being a question mark going in, those guys have been a nice surprise," he said. "If we can continue this over a 60-game season, it will open up some nice opportunities for us."

Clark pointed to the pitching stat sheet to illustrate his point.

"A 2-to-1 strikeout-to-walk ratio is excellent, and our hits-to-innings pitched ratio is excellent as well," he said.

A team earned run average of 3.14 and a strong defensive effort — the Wildcats have just 10 errors — have left Clark with a good feeling.

"An error a game is excellent at this level," he said. "Our pitching and defense have allowed us to get off to a good start."

As for the players Clark will depend upon in 1990, below is a position-by-position look at the Cats.

Pitchers: David Hierholzer, a first-team All-Big Eight choice last season, is the staff ace. Chris Hmielewski, a sophomore, is the No. 2 man in the rotation. Other starters include Kent Hipp and Sean Pedersen. Hmielewski is currently the only starter with no decisions, and Hierholzer's ERA is a microscopic 0.95 through 19 innings of work.

The bullpen is anchored by Steve Scoville and Dave Christensen.

Catchers: Senior Dan Skala is the heart-and-soul of the team, according to Clark. Skala is backed by sophomore Jeff Ryan.

Infielders: Hmielewski and Kevin Kaufman are the first basemen, with Kaufman seeing time at DH when Hmielewski isn't on the mound. Kaufman is one of the team's most consistent offensive threats, Clark and assistant coach Phil Morgan said.

Senior Jeff Troll is the second baseman and No. 2-hole hitter, sophomore Craig Wilson is the starting shortstop, and fellow sophomore Brad Rippelmeyer starts at third. Freshman Brian Culp, a natural second baseman, has seen some time in left field and as a DH and is hitting the ball with some pop, Clark said.

Outfielders: This group has been hurt by injuries to probable starters Russ Ringgenberg and David Amaro. Ringgenberg, one of the top returning outfielders in the country, will be sidelined until at least the opening of the conference season following back surgery, and Amaro is gone for the year with a knee injury.

Despite the losses, the outfield appears strong with Scott Stroth, L.J. Twyner and a cast of thousands leading the way. Stroth leads the team in hitting with a .417 average, and Twyner, the leadoff man, is second with a .345 mark. Both are junior college transfers.

In addition to the Big Eight schedule, K-State will face Creighton, Wichita State and several in-state foes — Washburn, Emporia State and Ft. Hays State among them.

The month of April will see the Wildcats at home in 21 of 25 games.

Before that run at home, the team will make a spring break trip to Florida and Mississippi, and will also face Southwest Missouri State and Western Illinois on the road.

Brian W. Kratzer/Staff

Baseball coach Mike Clark will be looking for youngsters like freshman pitcher Dan Driskill to step up and provide some depth this season for the Wildcats. K-State is 6-3 going into today's game at Creighton.

Outdoor season awaits track team

By Dan Wicker
Sports Reporter

The NCAA Championship this weekend is the only indoor meet remaining on the schedule of K-State's track and field team, but its season is far from over.

Once the indoor season is concluded, there is only a three week lay-off before K-State plays host to its first meet of the outdoor season March 31.

Coach John Capriotti is looking at the outdoor season as a continuation of the indoor season, and he said he thinks the men's and women's squads will remain among the leaders in the Big Eight Conference.

"I think we will be in the top half of the conference again like we were in the indoor season ... in the third, fourth area," Capriotti said. "I think Iowa State and Nebraska are much better than everyone else right now."

On the men's side, K-State will be hoping to repeat its second-place conference finish in last year's outdoor meet. Just two weeks ago, the Wildcat men placed third at the Big Eight Indoor Championships.

From the runner-up squad of last year, K-State returns a corps of experienced athletes. Steve Fritz will be back to defend his decathlon title from a year ago. Fritz set the K-State and Big Eight records in the event last year in Lincoln, Neb. He will be joined by teammates Steve Henson and Terry VanLaningham, who placed third and fourth, respectively.

Charles Armstead and Clifton Etheridge will give Capriotti good depth to the cast of returnees in the jumps. Armstead turned in 14 points in the outdoor meet last year, placing second in the long jump and third in the 110-meter hurdles.

Etheridge returns as the third-place finisher in the long jump, and he recently captured the indoor triple jump title.

The sprint and middle distances will be anchored by Tyrone Watkins and Marcus Wright along with freshman Jared Storm. Watkins was on the third-place 400-meter relay team, fourth-place mile relay team, and he also finished sixth in the 400-meter dash.

Wright is a newcomer for the outdoor season, but will provide an immediate impact after placing fourth at the Big Eight indoor meet in the 800 meters.

Storm, in his first season, set a K-State record in the 1,000 meters, and placed second at the conference indoor meet.

On the women's side, K-State returns three Big Eight champions in Connie Teaberry, high jump; Janet Trieber, 3,000 meters; and Angie Miller, discus.

Capriotti said he thinks the K-State women, who also placed second at last year's Big Eight meet, are more balanced than the men.

Teaberry and Carla Shannon highlight the jumps for K-State. Teaberry is set to defend the high jump crown, while Shannon was runner-up in the triple jump last year, and she will be the top returnee in that event.

The throws will be anchored by Angie Miller, who scored 18 points to lead K-State to the runner-up spot

Tennis coach Steve Bietau is hoping that the K-State women can repeat their upper division Big Eight finish of a year ago.

Netters to face tough schedule

By Scott Panske
Sports Reporter

Tennis coach Steve Bietau's plan for upgrading the quality of K-State's program is highlighted this year in the list of teams the Wildcats are facing.

After posting a 14-6 dual mark in 1989 — the best in school history — the 'Cats are in the middle of a grueling 23-match schedule, which includes four top-20 teams from a year ago.

"There's a risk involved with it, but it's a risk that's necessary to improve," Bietau said. "We've struggled a little bit, but you can look at it in different ways."

"If you're playing weaker people, you don't have an opportunity to get into tough situations, and you don't have to figure out a way to get out of them."

Challenging the nation's finest has shown in the 'Cats' 5-6 record. K-State has fallen to nationally-ranked teams Brigham Young and Utah. Last weekend, the 'Cats bounced back from an 8-1 loss to Arkansas, to defeat Wichita State and Baylor in Fayetteville, Ark.

"I felt like we gained confidence all weekend," Bietau said. "We're doing a much better job

Golf teams look to improve

By Chris Hays
Sports Editor

Being the Big Eight Conference's cellar dwellers for the past decade hasn't given the men's and women's golf teams much to brag about in recent years.

As a matter of fact, K-State's performances on the links have even started to work on the patience of second-year coach Russ Bunker, but he said he knows he cannot let his frustrations rub off on his players.

"The guys are getting there. We just have to be patient and keep working hard," Bunker said. "Now for the girls, it's going to take a little longer."

The K-State men were in a position last year, after two rounds of the Big Eight Championships, to get out of the cellar for the first time in 13 years, but the Wildcats faltered on the final day and fell from fifth place right back from where they had come.

"I think the guys are setting their sights high, and there's nothing wrong with that kind of thinking," Bunker said. "They're looking at a fourth- or fifth-place finish. On any given day, we can play with those (Big Eight) schools. We did last year, but that last round cost us."

The fall season was the first season of eligibility at K-State for freshman Richard Laing. He transferred from Cal-Santa Barbara.

In Laing's opening tourney, he shot two rounds of 83, but from there, he was able to turn it up a notch.

"I was kind of worried and didn't know what to expect after he started out by shooting an 83-83 at Colorado," Bunker said. "I had to renew my faith in him that he could still play, and he went out and shot 73 from that point to lead the Wildcats the rest of the way."

So Laing enters the season as the leader for stroke average, but Bunker said his leadership will come from junior Jeff Sedorcek.

"It's tough to go into a season without relying heavily on a Sedorcek," Bunker said. "He has it in his mind to redeem himself for a disappointing fall season. He wants to be the first guy to lead the team out of the cellar in 13 years."

Bunker said returnees senior T.A. Fowler, junior Brett Vuillemin, and sophomore Brad Stephens will help provide depth, while three transfers will make up what Bunker calls the most talented men's club in recent memory.

Bobby Donlan, Cameron (Okla.) Junior College; Chris Thompson, Old Dominion; and Greg Roberts, Washburn are all expected to step up and fill some spots this season.

Seven players began qualifying rounds last week to fill four spots on the five-man team that will open the season March 25 at the Pacific Coast Intercollegiate at Santa Barbara, Calif. Laing gained an exemption from qualifying due to his fall performance.

On the women's side, K-State will have to rely on six golfers to make up the five-person squad. Athletic department funding and general interest has the K-State women struggling, as far as competitors, which Bunker said makes it hard for the women to compete in such a tough conference.

"Our numbers are so down, and we're in the situation where we're one year away from being able to compete in the Big Eight," Bunker said. "The Big Eight is tougher than ever, and that's scary."

At the end of the fall preseason, sophomore Adena Hagedorn was leading the way for the Wildcats.

"Adena had a pretty good fall season, but I think she could have had a really great fall," Bunker said. "And Adena will miss the first tournament."

With Hagedorn not available for the Sue Berning Classic in Norman, Okla., April 1, the K-State women will be even more short-handed.

Bunker will now have to look to junior Chris Adams and senior Jill Zientara for leadership. Adams led the team in stroke average last spring, but struggled in the fall.

"We've had to evaluate where her priorities were as far the sport was concerned," Bunker said of Adams. "She's struggling right now, but I look for her to come around."

Bunkers said what would provide a big lift for K-State would be for freshman Valerie Hahn to step up and contribute right away. He said she is capable of doing just that.

"We've got to have Val and Chris shoot in the 70s, and Jill and Theresa (Coyle) in the low 80s to get out of the cellar," Bunker said. "Not that I don't think they can, they just have to believe in themselves."

Coyle and walk-on Ashley Johnson will fill out the squad for the season opener, while Hagedorn should join the team for the following tourney.

Richard Laing, Bonner Springs, transferred to K-State from Cal-Santa Barbara last year. After sitting out a semester, he led the men's team in stroke average in his first collegiate competition last fall.

Freshman leads golfers in first season as Wildcat

By Chris Hays
Sports Editor

Given the way Richard Laing started out in his first tournament at K-State, the freshman golfer was probably scratching his head in disbelief.

But after shooting two rounds of 83 at the Colorado Invitational last fall, Laing rebounded to card a stroke average of 73 for the remainder of the fall season, which left golf coach Russ Bunker happy.

"We knew he was going to be a good player for us just by the way he played in practice," Bunker said. "But we were kind of surprised after that first outing."

Laing ended the fall season, his first at K-State after transferring from Cal-Santa Barbara, as the Wildcat men's leading golfer, which is something that the Bonner Springs native takes in stride.

"I don't really see it as being tops on the team," Laing said. "I see it as us trying to work together."

"I want to take it with confidence and help the team as much as I can, and if it happens that I'm the low score, then I'll be happy that I helped the team out in a good way."

Laing has made a rather roundabout route out of a near straight-line passage from Bonner Springs to Manhattan.

Out of high school, where he ended his prep career with a ranking in the American Junior Golf Association's top 100, Laing was courted by the likes of such NCAA golfing powers as Arizona State, but he opted to sign with Fullerton (Calif.) State because of the likelihood that he would play right away.

But a month before he was to leave for his first season at Fullerton, the school's athletic director cancelled the golf program and added a track team. From there, UCSB showed interest and Laing decided he would go ahead and latch on with the Gauchos.

"I kind of liked Santa Barbara," Laing said. "I was kind of excited about going there, but it wasn't like Fullerton. I was still frustrated by Fullerton cancelling out on me."

And, what Laing actually found out was that he wasn't too much akin to the California lifestyle, and, without competing with the team, he transferred to K-State after the first semester, with a full four years of eligibility.

"You would have to fly back and forth to go home, and you are such a long way away, that it puts added pressure on you," Laing said of living in California.

Laing's stay in California wasn't a complete waste of a semester. He said he learned how competitive college golf is, compared to the junior circuit he traveled on two summers ago.

"It helped me realize how tough the game actually is, and how much work it takes to get on top," Laing said.

Laing's said his transition to K-State was not much of a problem since he had known most of the K-State players from playing against them in high school or during the summers.

"I just came in, had to sit out a semester, and I didn't have to adjust golf-wise," Laing said. "I had a lot of good friends on the team when I finally decided to come here, but when I decided not to come here out of high school, I was also thinking of academics. I'm not knocking K-State, but it was a lot easier to concentrate on school and the sport when you're that far away."

Golfer likes small-town life

By Chris Hays
Sports Editor

Manhattan and the street lights of Aggieville pale rather dimly to the bright lights, glitz and glamour of Las Vegas, Nev.

However, freshman golfer Valerie Hahn, a native of the city where gambling, quick weddings, and legalized prostitution reign, actually likes living in small-town America.

"Yeah, it's a lot smaller, but a lot has changed in Las Vegas. It's getting too huge," Hahn said. "I had never really known anything about (Manhattan) until I made my recruiting trip in March."

"I thought I liked it, and I had a lot of fun with the girls on the team ... they took me out, and I really liked them. I think it's really nice here."

"Yeah, but you get her around a little snow and she won't say that," K-State golf coach Russ Bunker said.

It was Bunker, along with former K-State golfer Jim Colbert, who were instrumental in getting Hahn to attend K-State.

Colbert, a former golfer on the PGA Tour who has been one of the K-State golf program's most avid supporters, is the golf pro at Hahn's home golf course in Las Vegas.

"(Colbert) wanted me to apply here, and I applied to some other schools also," Hahn said. "Russ was the first to reply to my letters, and when I first met him, I liked him."

"Plus, I wanted to continue with Colbert, and he still keeps in contact with me."

Hahn finished the fall season as the No. 3 golfer on the squad, behind Adena Hagedorn, Jill Zientara and Chris Adams, but Bunker said that he thinks she can battle for the top spot.

"I didn't think I could do it that fast," Hahn said of playing college golf. "I thought eventually I would play in college, but not right out of high school."

"But now I want to shoot for No. 1. I think I can do it. I've practiced a lot more."

Hahn had a tough time adjusting to college life, but she said she has had an easier time of settling in now that she is in her second semester.

Brian W. Kratzer/Staff

Las Vegas, Nev., native Valerie Hahn should give K-State some added consistency this season. The freshman was ranked No. 3 in the fall.

"The first semester was really tough for me," Hahn said. "The classes were a lot harder, I spent a lot of time practicing and then I had to go home, for a funeral ... everything happened that first semester, but now I feel like this is my second home."

Hahn played high school golf at Las Vegas Western where she finished fourth at the state tourney her senior year. From there she narrowed her college choices down to Texas Christian, Wyoming and K-State.

"My mom really wanted me to go to TCU," Hahn said, "and I liked Wyoming because it was so pretty there. But I finally decided to come here."

And, even though she didn't really think she'd be playing so much of a factor on a team so early in her career, Hahn said she still isn't all that wowed by how fast everything has happened to her.

"But I still get pretty nervous when I get up to the tee," she said.

Club sports looking for success

By The Collegian Staff

K-State has a variety of club sports and below is a brief outlook of those teams which compete with other schools within the region:

LACROSSE

K-State's first-ever lacrosse team got off to a successful start this past weekend with a split in a pair of games against the University of Kansas in Lawrence, according to team captain.

McConnell said the first-year K-State players surprised KU when K-State defeated the Jayhawks, 8-3, in the final game of the two-game set Sunday. KU had won the previous contest, 8-7, on Saturday.

The progress made since McConnell began organizing the team early last semester was evident Sunday. KU's squad is in its third year, but K-State won Sunday, after getting an actual competition under the Wildcats' belts on Saturday.

"We had heard so much about them," McConnell said of KU being a well-respected lacrosse team, "but we got the best of them."

The only other game scheduled is set for March 24, when the K-State squad will play host to KU.

MEN'S RUGBY

K-State's men's assistant rugby coach Greg Barnes is more than anxious to get this season's schedule into full swing.

With the number of players that have turned out this season, Barnes said the squad could be one of the most successful ones K-State has had in recent years.

"We have about 60 guys out," Barnes said, "and we hope to keep that number up around 40 as far as full-time players."

Not being able to put healthy bodies on the field is what hampered the K-State rugbys most of last season, but Barnes said that with the numbers the club has now, things look positive.

The main objective of this season is for the club side team to win back its title that was stripped last year at the Omaha Tournament. The team also wants to defend its Nebraska Invitational title, and to win all four of its Club Merit Table games in the division.

WOMEN'S RUGBY

After its first full season of existence, the K-State women's rugby club is now looking to become a full-fledged member of the Heart of America Rugby Football Union.

Women's coach Ramon Fewell said within the next couple of days, K-State should become a HARFU member, which entails paying dues and maintaining union insurance.

Fewell said he is optimistic about the success the K-State women will have this season, and he is also pleased with the number of players on the roster so far.

"Things are actually going really well," Fewell said. "We've got a pretty solid team with a lot of natural ability, and hopefully they will be able to combine that with what I instill as far as rugby is concerned."

The team opens the season at the St. Louis (Mo.) Invitational March 31 and April 1. Fewell said the K-State women are already talking about bringing home the trophy.

"They've been pretty intense in practice," he said. "Hopefully they will be able to pull everything together and bring home that trophy."

MEN'S SOCCER

After winning the annual Ed Chartrand Soccer Tournament in Kansas City, Mo., last fall, the K-State men's soccer team is looking forward to a successful campaign this spring.

"I'm expecting us to do very well this season," club president Craig Dorroh said. "We've got a good team together, with a lot of older guys who have played for the last two or three years."

Of those older players, Rob Healy (center halfback), Dorroh (forward) and Jeff Adams (halfback) lead the offense, while Brent Jones (sweeper) bolsters the defense.

The squad will open the season at Wichita State March 24, but the main goal of the K-State men is to place high at the Big Eight Tournament in Omaha, Neb., April 14 to 15, and the Lazlo Tournament in Wichita April 21 to 22.

The team's first home match is set for April 24 against Kansas.

WOMEN'S SOCCER

In its 10th year as a K-State club sport, the women's soccer team has become more and more successful with each season.

"I think we should do really well this season," said club president Julie Klusman. "We haven't had an outdoor game yet, but I think we should do well."

The K-State women breezed through an indoor tournament at Nebraska two weeks ago, going 5-0 for the weekend event, in which they defeated the host Nebraska team, 3-0.

Decathlete benefits from indoor season

Returning Big Eight Conference decathlon champion Steve Fritz is eyeing even loftier goals this season. He wants to better the Big Eight record he set last year, and his sixth-place finish at the NCAA meet.

By Dan Wicker
Sports Reporter

For a decathlete, indoor track and field season is a time to develop and sharpen skills for when the outdoor season rolls around.

But, for K-State's Steve Fritz, the indoor season was just as competitive as the outdoor. He competed in the pole vault and 55-meter hurdles at the recent Big Eight Indoor Championships, but now comes the real competition.

Fritz, senior in computer engineering, is the lone returning Big Eight champion from last year's K-State squad, which finished runner-up to Nebraska. The Gypsum native captured the decathlon title with a Big Eight record-setting performance.

This season however, Fritz is looking for a bit more of himself. He said this year was his first season of competition indoors, after he decided it would be better to concentrate on a single college athletic career.

Last year, Fritz was a member of the K-State basketball team, but he decided the two sports hampered his concentration on just one.

He said narrowing his focus has made his training more effective.

"It has helped a lot, especially conditioning-wise and strength-wise," Fritz said. "I have put in, conditioning-wise, as much training as I did all last year. It's like a whole other season shoved in."

Coach John Capriotti echoed Fritz's comments about concentrating on track.

"It gave him more time to prepare," Capriotti said. "Now he has got an indoor season behind him, so he should be much more prepared to go."

As a result of his extra training, Fritz said he is excited about the upcoming outdoor season.

"I am looking forward to it. It should be a good season," Fritz said. "Indoor season is a time for me to work on a lot of things. With the position and conditioning I am in, I think it should be a good year for me — if I don't have any injuries."

Fritz again has his eyes set on a Big Eight decathlon gold this year, and he is also looking ahead. He said he wants to improve on his sixth-place finish at the NCAA Championships last year.

Capriotti said Fritz is the kind of athlete that knows what he has to get done, before setting his sights on a national title.

"I think he wants to win the Big Eight championships again, and I know he has his goals set on being the NCAA champion," Capriotti said. "If he can stay healthy and continue to train, I think he's got a shot to do both of those."

"He's a hard worker and a good role model for the other people. It has to be a big year for him," Capriotti said. "He knows what he has to get done, though. I don't bother him too much. He takes care of business, and goes about doing his thing, which is what you have to do when you are an athlete of his caliber."

Fritz said one problem in track and field is staying in shape throughout the whole year. He said because of his first indoor season, his outdoor season should not miss a beat from last year.

"I should start off the first meet where I left off last year," he said. "If you can do that, you are in good shape."

learning from our mistakes."

Learning has been easier for Bietau's team through the help of four seniors — Valerie Rive, Marijke Nel, Helen Schildknecht and Sara Hancock.

The quartet combined with former captain Annika Emtell to give K-State its first-ever upper-division finish in last year's Big Eight Tournament. Rive, a Lake Worth, Fla., native, is the team's only three-year letterwinner. For the past two seasons, she has teamed with Nel, K-State's No. 1 singles player, for one of the top doubles teams in the conference.

Schildknecht and Hancock came to K-State via Midland (Texas) Junior College, where they were the 1987 National Junior College Athletic Association champions at the No. 2 doubles position. The tandem has competed in the 'Cats' top spot both years.

Last season, Hancock also played doubles with junior Theresa Burcham. The duo was 14-0 at the No. 3 position during the first half of 1989.

"That's a nice thing about our team — there's no real definite spot for any one person," Bietau said. "I like to think of it as a positive thing. It causes our people to compete a little harder for what's available."

Freshman Suzanne Sim has added to the balance of Bietau's squad. The Shawnee Mission West graduate won two of three matches last weekend competing in the No. 6 singles spot. She also teamed with Burcham to win two of three doubles matches.

"There's really not a set pattern in our lineup," Bietau said. "They know if they play well and somebody else isn't, they'll move up."

"I feel fortunate that we've got enough credible players to do that."

The 'Cats will travel to Las Vegas Saturday for four matches in four days. The list of teams includes Yale, the defending Ivy League champion.

The women will next be in action March 24 and 25 at Oklahoma State and Oklahoma, respectively.

CREW

The K-State crew team members are already preparing for their first regatta of the season.

The varsity men's team has been in the water for almost a week now.

The women's varsity team practices every morning at 6 a.m., while the women's freshman team practices every afternoon, Cindy Blaker, women's varsity captain, said.

The men's and women's teams will have their first regatta during spring break in Austin, Texas on March 17.

The second regatta will be at Wichita on March 24.

March 31 the crew will be in St. Louis, and the men's varsity heavy-weight team has been invited to the San Diego-Crew Classic.

Distance runner looks toward track season with anticipation

By Dan Wicker
Sports Reporter

The first season for a college athlete is always anxiously awaited with high hopes and excitement.

And to add to her anxiety, K-State sophomore distance runner Janet Haskin had to sit out of last year's outdoor track season — her first as a collegian.

Eligibility-wise, Haskin will only be a freshman for the outdoor slate, after being redshirted last year because of injuries developed during her first cross country and indoor track seasons. And this season, Haskin should be plenty healthy to test her abilities on the outdoor circuit.

"I am anxious to see how I can do outdoors," Haskin said. "I'll probably run the 10,000 meters. I want to see how I can do in a longer race."

Haskin has already been able to recover from the injuries she sustained last year. In only her second cross country season, she was the top runner for K-State at the NCAA Championships, earning all-America honors, while at the Big Eight indoor championships this year she posted second and third place finishes in the 5,000 and 3,000 meters, respectively.

Haskin credits her comeback to being able to train consistently.

"My training is going a lot better this season," Haskin said. "Being able to train without a break will help me outdoors and hopefully improved times will be a result."

Coach John Capriotti is also looking forward to seeing Haskin perform outdoors. He feels that her training and performances are improving from last year and said that she is only going to get better.

"She needs to keep training and getting stronger and lift and not get hurt. If she does these things, there is no way she can't get better," Ca-piotti said.

Haskin has not actually set specific goals for herself in the outdoor season, however, it's not stopping her from thinking about what she can accomplish.

"I just want to take it as it goes. I don't know what kind of times to expect," Haskin said. "If I just go out and run, it should take some of the pressure off."

"I mainly want to do well, qualify for nationals and run good at Big Eight."

One of the main problems of Haskin's lagging injuries of last year was in her weight. Both Capriotti and Haskin said that it was the main reason for her injuries. However, it did not pose a problem in her cross country and indoor season and it is not expected to hurt her performance outdoors.

Soviets pass Property Law

Private citizens able to own small factories, hire workers

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW — Beset with a sinking economy and rising discontent, Soviet lawmakers made a drastic break with Communist orthodoxy Tuesday by voting to allow private citizens to own small factories and hire their own workers.

Applause swept through the Kremlin chamber as the Supreme Soviet, by a 350-3 vote with 11 abstentions, passed the Property Law, which the official Tass news agency described as "the main plank" of President Mikhail S. Gorbachev's campaign for economic reform.

The law permits Soviets for the first time in nearly seven decades to privately possess "means of production," an approach at odds with classic Marxist thinking, which sees in private ownership the roots of the capitalist exploitation wiped out by the Russian Revolution 72 years ago. Deputy Premier Leonid I. Abalkin said the law, to go into effect July 1, will enable private citizens to own workshops, garages for automotive repairs, farm enterprises and other small-scale ventures to supplement the notoriously ineffective state-run economy.

Also, subject to restrictions from legislatures in the 15 Soviet republics, the law permits one citizen to hire another for pay, a practice that currently is illegal and was a key target of the Russian revolutionaries.

In the early 1920s, Vladimir I. Lenin and the Bolsheviks temporarily retreated from their drive to implement communism and allowed private ownership of the means of production under the New Economic Policy, or NEP. The policy was ended under Lenin's successor, Josef Stalin.

Tuesday's vote was hailed by supporters not as a tactical move backward but as a great advance toward a more just and prosperous society. It again showed Gorbachev's bent for pragmatism, even when it runs counter to policies pursued by his predecessors for decades.

Abalkin stressed to reporters that new approaches were needed to wrench the country from its economic quagmire, which he said was deepening. "Either we speed up the reforms, or we ship things using military transport," he said.

He revealed that Soviet economic performance had worsened in the past two months, with industrial production slipping 1 percent. "There is a crisis of confidence, of confidence in the government," he added.

Although the Property Law conserves large economic monopolies for the state-run sector, it declares all forms of ownership juridically equal, including property owned by individuals, the government and collectives, and says society gains by competition among them.

Gephardt: Direct aid necessary for Soviets

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — House Democratic Leader Richard Gephardt said Tuesday the United States should offer direct aid to the Soviet Union to ensure that its reforms succeed.

"We should be investing in our own self-interest," Gephardt said. "And stability, democracy and a market economy in the Soviet Union are in America's strong self-interest."

The proposal brought immediate criticism from some quarters, with a presidential spokesman saying the Soviets don't want direct aid.

Sen. Bill Bradley, D-N.J., also said that the Soviets haven't requested U.S. help and that, if they did, it would be wasted without economic reform. "Unless they reform the economy, it's going down a rathole," Bradley said.

Others on Capitol Hill said that while they thought Gephardt's proposal would spark a useful debate, the idea would fall on disapproving public ears.

"If you're going to start giving foreign aid to the hated commies of 70 years' worth, you've got a real sales job to do in the United States," said Sen. Alan Simpson, R-Wyo.

Gephardt noted an appeal by Czechoslovak President Vaclav Havel, in a Feb. 21 speech to Congress, to help his country by helping the Soviet Union continue on its reformist road.

If Havel, who was imprisoned by the communists, can call for aid to the Soviets, "the least we can do is listen."

He accused Bush of "a lack of leadership in this most crucial moment," throwing billions of dollars into the military budget to defend against "communists who don't want to be communists any more" while ignoring their economic needs.

Hypnotist Richard De La Font instructs volunteers from the audience to participate in a "Theater of the Mind" exercise as part of his performance in Bushwacker's Tuesday night. ## Hypnotist questioned by officers

By Ellen Dayton

Hypnotism or theater of the mind?

Hypnotist Richard De La Font performed his theater of the mind act at Bushwacker's Monday and Tuesday night.

Monday night, a Riley County Police officer delivered a copy of a Kansas statute to the management of the bar stating that hypnotism for public display is in violation of state law, said Don Ramey, owner of the bar.

Tuesday night at the end of De La Font's show, two police officers entered the bar. After the show, they interviewed De La Font and Ramey. Officer J. Warren said they would be turning over the information they gathered at the bar to the county attorney.

Warren said the maximum fine for the violation is $50. The offenders can include all participants, including those put under hypnosis. De La Font said the act he performs in Kansas is theater of the mind, not hypnosis.

"No one can tell by looking at somebody whether they are hypnotized or not," De La Font said. "All they (the participants) knew was that they were under an altered state of awareness. They got really involved in theater of the mind. It's a game with the imagination."

De La Font said he was aware of the Kansas statute and altered his act to conform to the law. "We're careful when we're in Kansas that we don't do entertainment hypnosis," he said.

De La Font said he bills himself as a hypnotist because his profession is hypnotism. He offers private hypnosis sessions for behavior control.

"I do hypnotherapy," he said. At the beginning of his act, De La Font said his show was legal.

"You'll love this trip," he said to the audience of about 300 as he explained the procedure and asked for 12 volunteers. "It's legal and it's free. You know what you're doing, you just don't care."

Ramey said De La Font is one of the most popular acts at Bushwacker's.

"He's probably in the top five in popularity," he said.

Bushwacker's has booked De La Font's act for about three years, Ramey said.

"This is the first time that anything like this has happened," he said.

Citizens concerned about possible jail site

By Erica Yenni

Collegian Reporter

A group of parents and Manhattan citizens are concerned about the possibility of a new jail building at the corner of Juliette and Pierre streets, across from Seven Dolors Catholic schools.

Members of the Manhattan Catholic Schools' council of education, the Manhattan Catholic Schools' PTO and members from Manhattan's League of Women Voters were at the meeting.

They met Tuesday night at the grade school to discuss the jail, which they say will be too close to the schools across the street.

The PTO formed four committees to gather information to present to the Manhattan City Commission on why the jail should not be built. The committees will be on research, legal assistance, publicity and finance.

"The position we're taking is that we don't think schools and jails go together, regardless of what school it's next to," said Pat Keating, member of the council of education. "It's not academically oriented."

The danger in this, Keating said, was that traffic would be increased in the school area, putting the children at risk. Also, the expanded jail would be one block from the public library, which would jeopardize the children walking to and from the library; affecting not only the Catholic schools' students, but those at the other schools in the area.

Another problem noted at the meeting was the new facility would be landlocked, and no future expansion would be possible. Keating said there was only one square block available for the expansion, and the next time more space was needed the whole jail would have to be moved.

"Just because they're moving the jail and they have available land, should not be the reason to build the

Journalist describes economic challenges

Speaker: American system needs to reform

By Todd Fertig

Collegian Reporter

The progress of the Japanese economy and the economic decline of the United States should be viewed as a challenge at present, James Fallows said in his convocation address on cultural differences Tuesday.

In the future, however, Fallows said, such developments will become a threat.

Fallows, Washington editor of the Atlantic Monthly who was based in Japan and Malaysia from 1986 to 1989, said in his address titled "Sex, Money, and the Pacific Rim: The Contemporary Asian World" that a new economic system is developing in the Asian countries that is leaving the United States behind.

"A new kind of capitalism has been invented in the Pacific Rim that is going to be very difficult for us to cope with," he said. "This is a system that has been taken to its highest form in Japan but one whose influence is spreading through the rest of Asia and one that Americans have not yet begun to understand correctly."

Fallows said the new economic system in Japan is not inherently better than the one in the United States, but Japan has a different purpose for capitalism.

"Their purpose is not to provide for the consumer," Fallows said, "but it is to build up industries within the nation itself, to try to build up a strong economic base even at the sacrifice of consumer welfare."

While the countries with this new economic system seem to be progressing, Fallows doesn't think such a system would be successful in the United States. He said there are necessary cultural ingredients present in these countries which would be impossible for Americans to duplicate. The most impossible of these elements, he said, is the Japanese' ethic of racial unity.

"This point has been very powerful in Japan in the past 150 years, the era of trying to catch up to the West," Fallows said, calling the Japanese unity a motivational tool which the diverse American culture could not imitate.

The American economy, and all of its society, is based upon individuality and creativity, Fallows said.

Americans do not have the same sense of unity which is necessary for such a system as the Japanese because there is such cultural diversity in the United States.

He said that to try to impose such a rigid structure upon America would be potentially stifling.

"There aren't many nations that have the cultural mix that we have here in America," Carol Oukrop, director of the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism, said following the convocation.

"The Japanese are very united as a race and as a society, which is what seems to be necessary for their system to work. We just don't have the sense of unity which they have," Oukrop said.

This lack of unity keeps Americans from backing their economy like the Japanese do. Fallows said World War II was the most productive and prosperous time in U.S. history because an outside threat forced the people to unite. This sense of unity is needed for the United States to be competitive in modern economic times as well.

"Historically, the U.S. only has

Fire extinguished on tanker

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — Firefighters on Tuesday finally extinguished a blaze aboard the U.S.-flagged Kuwaiti tanker Surf City after a 12-day battle, the owners said.

The vessel, in the Gulf of Oman 100 miles off Fujairah, will be left to cool for 24 hours before being removed, according to a statement issued by Chesapeake Shipping Inc. in the United Arab Emirates port city of Dubai.

A Feb. 22 blast and fire aboard the 81,283-ton oil products tanker killed two of the 25-member U.S. crew. Four suffered injuries.

Doctors diagnose brain tumor

WASHINGTON (AP) — Doctors found a benign tumor on the right side of Republican Party chairman Lee Atwater's brain Tuesday and said it would be treated non-surgically with no difficulty.

Dr. Edward Laws, chairman of the department of Neurosurgery at George Washington University Medical Center, said Atwater would be released from the hospital by the end of the week and able to resume a reasonable work schedule and normal activities next week.

An aide quoted the party chairman as saying, "I've never led a normal life."

In a brief statement issued by the Republican National Committee, Laws said, "Lee Atwater completed tests this morning which revealed a small non-malignant growth in the right side of his head. No surgery is planned and we expect no difficulty with follow-up treatments."

Barge explodes in New York

LINDEN, N.J. (AP) — A barge laden with more than 4.2 million gallons of fuel exploded in flames Tuesday on a waterway plagued by oil spills this year, slightly injuring the captain, the Coast Guard said.

The barge, anchored at a Citgo petroleum facility at Linden, was nearly ripped in half by two explosions 15 minutes apart and drifted across the Arthur Kill waterway toward Staten Island, N.Y., officials said.

Oil spread across the heavily industrialized waterway, which connects to New York Harbor, and environmental crews used absorbent barriers in an effort to contain the slick.

Defendant pleads innocent

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Raymond Buckey pleaded innocent Tuesday to eight revived charges involving three girls in the McMartin Pre-School molestation case after his attorney requested that a sex charge slated for dismissal be retained.

"I am innocent, your honor, I plead not guilty," Buckey told Superior Court Judge Stanley M. Weisberg. The judge formally dismissed four unresolved charges against Buckey and held in abeyance one contested charge.

The case now has been reduced from hundreds of counts that once involved 41 alleged abuse victims from the now-defunct Manhattan Beach preschool.

Defense attorney Danny Davis asked the judge not to dismiss one allegation against Buckey involving the son of Judy Johnson, the mother whose complaints triggered the investigation, saying it would allow him to present to jurors "the genesis of this case."

The defense has previously said the case was the result of community hysteria churned by Johnson, who also accused a Los Angeles school board member of molesting her child. She has since died of a liver ailment related to alcoholism.

"It seems a little strange that the defense would be objecting to the dismissal of this particular count," Weisberg said.

Mother, son awarded millions

TOPEKA (AP) — A handicapped boy and his mother have been awarded $2.5 million in damages for birth defects that were allegedly the result of problems in the boy's delivery at a Topeka hospital.

A jury in Shawnee County District Court made the award Monday to Michele A. Schulte and her son, David, 11, of Junction City. The award was reported to be the largest ever by a jury in Shawnee County.

Ronald Heck, a lawyer for the Schultes, said the boy suffered neurological motor defects and impaired speech. Testimony by the plaintiffs indicated the boy would require occupational, physical and speech therapy until he is about 25 and that he might never be able to work in the open market.

The plaintiffs alleged that the baby's birth was complicated because the infant was face up during delivery, requiring a specialist to rotate him to a face-down position. Before the defendant, Dr. Chester Davis of Topeka, called a specialist, Heck said, there were signs that the baby had suffered a shortage of oxygen during the birth.

Water topic of conference

Kansans to address problem of resource contamination

By Stacie Sanders
Collegian Reporter

Kansans and organizations concerned about water quality will converge on Manhattan to attend the Seventh Annual Water and the Future of Kansas Conference today and Thursday.

The purpose for the water conference is to discuss issues relating to Kansas water resources, said Dick Black, an extension irrigation specialist who has worked with the conference since its beginning.

"It's been a day and a half program which tries to look at water issues in the whole state so that we can bring information to lay leaders and any individual who is interested in water in Kansas," Black said.

The conference is sponsored by the College of Agriculture through the Division of Extension. In past years, the conferences have dealt with the quality of water, Black said.

"Controlling Water Contamination" is the theme for this year's conference, because water quality is a major issue as far as the public is concerned, he said. Sub-themes for each of the sessions will focus on this topic.

The conference is divided into four sessions. This morning, state and national departments or organizations will report on developments within the respective agencies.

The afternoon session is split into a general session and a session strictly for research led by the Kansas Water Resources Research Institution, Black said. The KWRRI will update those in attendance on projects completed this year.

The session Thursday morning has traditionally been an issues forum and a discussion session that relates to the conference. He said the committee hopes to attract representation at the conference from organizations and individuals interested in water.

Conservation groups, watersheds, municipalities and government departments attend the conferences, he said.

"They always show up because they want to get a broader perspective, too," Black said.

Some of the featured speakers at this year's conference will include Joe Harkins, director of the state water office; Stan Grant, director of the Kansas Department of Health and Environment; and Tom Lorenza of the Environmental Protection Agency.

The committee wants this to be the primary state conference which would address pertinent water issues each year, Black said.

"This has been the seventh year and we hope that 20 years from now we're still going strong and changing to meet the needs," he said.

John Dunbar, former dean of the College of Agriculture, thought of the idea for the conference, Black said. Dunbar asked Hyde Jacobs, then the Extension program leader, to organize it, he said.

Donald Erickson, professor of agricultural economics, has worked closely with the conference for the past seven years. Erickson, who will chair the committee next year, said planning the conference is a year-round project. Once this year's conference is over, planning for next year's conference will begin in April or May, he said.

Students elect to spend break assisting Kansas communities

By Samantha Farr
Collegian Reporter

While some students will be snow skiing or tanning on sunny beaches, the K-State Community Structural Assistance Volunteer Effort is sponsoring some students with an Alternative Spring Break program.

Volunteering students will travel with the Community Service Program to their choice of two Kansas communities, including Oswego and Wallace County, said Carol Peak, director of the Community Service Program. The groups will leave Manhattan March 9 and return March 14.

"We are focusing on rural communities in Kansas," Peak said. "The program offers us a way to go farther away for projects that give students a way to get off campus to have a good time with other students and do something for a community."

Although funds from federal grants support the program, the students will be housed and fed by community members, Peak said.

Students will work along with community members to add enhancements to the community, or basic renovations such as painting, constructing, cleaning and fixing-up, Peak said.

"Basically, we work at the request of the community," she said. "The communities are often thrilled with what happens. Many of them say having a student team there acts as a catalyst to get things going."

In Oswego, students will help repair and restore the downtown historic district, Peak said. Volunteers will also help paint Oswego's museum, the interior of a caboose and the bath house at the pool.

Students will assist in the "Main Street Revival" in Wallace County, Peak said. They will be painting and repairing buildings on Main Street and an artist will be painting a mural.

"One afternoon, 10 high school students will be let out of school to work with us," Peak said. "The city council is also declaring the week a clean-up week throughout the county. For extra fun, there will be a children's dinner theatre, a pool tournament and many activities for students."

Stacy Sweazy, student coordinator for the Community S.A.V.E. program and a senior in public relations, said an important aspect of the program is to kill the stereotype that college students are not willing to volunteer their time.

"Students aren't as self-centered as some people think," Sweazy said. "They are willing to give their time and services to communities, and often they don't mind going out and getting their fingernails dirty."

Peak said students need to be offered opportunities to show their interest and give something back to the community.

"Students need to be seen as part of the solution," she said. "Too often, they are seen instead as a cause of problems."

In addition to the Oswego and Wallace County groups, 12 K-State students will travel to Harlingen, Texas to tour facilities for Central American immigrants. Peak said this

Refugee speaks on participation in death squads

By Laura Scroggins
Collegian Reporter

Tuesday, a Salvadoran refugee described incidences of torture and mutilation by death squads controlled by the military forces in El Salvador.

During a luncheon at the St. Thomas More Catholic church, Rene Hurtado told of his experiences with the military in that country, and what he and others are doing to help Salvadoran refugees.

Hurtado visited Manhattan as part of the Pastors for Peace convoy taking humanitarian supplies to help people in the war-torn Salvadoran countryside.

Hurtado said he joined the army at age 15 and later became a member of the Salvadoran Treasury Police, a group he described as being a main element of the so-called death squads.

Becoming a soldier to escape poverty, Hurtado said he was mistaken as to the purpose of the military presence and at the time thought what he was doing was right.

"Defending democracy means killing," Hurtado said. "There has to be better ways to defend democracy."

"The pressure was there to kill, and I didn't want to kill," he said.

Nor did he want to continue with the torturing of "communists" as he had been trained to do by U.S. Special Forces personnel.

Hurtado told stories of torture and mutilation with acid and fire, and of decapitating bodies to "terrorize" the people into not rebelling against the United States-backed government.

Hurtado's refusal to participate in the decapitation of a body led to charges of insubordination, and his eventual exile from the country. He says he left gracefully, but knows he can't return.

"If I go back, they'll kill me," Hurtado said.

Hurtado came to the United States in 1981 after hiding from the death squads for several months. He said his family is living in exile in Costa Rica.

Upon arriving to the United States, Hurtado was interviewed by "60 Minutes" and Progressive magazine. This publicity landed him in jail for about six weeks until church groups posted $50,000 bail.

Hurtado said U.S. officials offered him asylum, money and a house if he agreed to remain silent about American involvement in the death squads. Later, they threatened him with deportation because he continued to speak out. He has since been labeled a "terrorist" by the U.S. government and is still under risk of deportation.

The Pastors for Peace convoy of 13 trucks come from several parts of the country and will converge in San Antonio, Texas, Saturday before heading to Central America.

The trucks are carrying building materials, medical supplies and clothing to El Salvador by members of the Interreligious Foundation for Community Organization's Pastors for Peace.

Beth Dischinger, a driver and coordinator of one convoy, said IFCO began with the Civil Rights movement of the 1960s, but has since moved on to other social justice causes.

The reason for the aid is the repatriation of refugees displaced by the civil war that has been going on since the late 1970s, Dischinger said.

Tens of thousands of Salvadorans have fled to Honduras where the government reluctantly put them in what are collectively described as concentration camps, she said.

If the army suspected a village to contain even one guerrilla soldier, they would destroy the entire village to do away with him, Dischinger said. The people were forced to flee with only what they could carry, she said.

Dischinger said she hopes the government will allow them access to the people in Morazan province to distribute the aid. This region has been the scene of fierce

Explosion shatters building

By The Associated Press

CRESTED BUTTE, Colo. — An explosion shattered a two-story bank Tuesday, killing three people and injuring 14 others, officials said. Three people were listed in critical condition.

Firefighters and volunteers dug by hand through the rubble of the downtown Crested Butte National Bank to pull out survivors, witnesses said. The entire building was leveled except for the vault.

The cause of the blast in this Rocky Mountain ski resort was not immediately determined, but authorities said they were investigating the possibility of a bomb or methane gas buildup.

Crested Butte Police Chief Hank Smith said two restaurants received bomb threats over the week, and one of them was evacuated.

The explosion occurred at 9:15 a.m., shortly after the bank opened. The dead were identified as bank employee Jade Woelk, Donna Smith and Monica Henning. Their ages were not available.

Mayor Wes Light said three bodies were pulled from the rubble, and all 15 people believed inside during the explosion were pulled out.

The federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms sent a 12-person response team to the scene, and Gov. Roy Romer made National Guard units available to provide assistance if needed.

About 200 people responded quickly to the scene and started digging with their hands.

"They started digging through the rubble, helping the people who were still alive," said Mark Reaman, a photographer for the Chronicle & Pilot newspaper.

"The whole town would suddenly become silent, stopping to see if they could hear someone. It was the most eerie thing I've ever heard. Luckily, many times they found someone who was still alive."

Hope Osteimer, who works nearby, said the building completely collapsed on itself.

"People started running from their cars and businesses and just started digging," said a passerby who identified himself only by his first name, Brad.

"I started digging, but I wiggled out when I saw the condition of one of the victims," he said. "One guy crawled out," but the rest were trapped.

Personal differences should be accepted

I notice each body, down to the color of the cheek, the rhythm of the stride, the music of the voice. I notice the details. Hair that softens the face, like a curtain shields a room from the afternoon sun. Lips that mumble or laugh or pout. A stride that walks the sidewalk with a hunger. There is no imperfection of the human body or of its movement.

But we pretend we are unlike our external appearance. We pretend we can homogenize ourselves. But our external appearance mirrors the internal chemistry; we are as unique as our features, as our bodies.

Each of us is the product of an experiment, a one time, irreplicable experiment. How can we compare ourselves to each other? There are no grounds on which to compare. And when we do compare ourselves, we label some qualities better, some worse. Then, we acquire a false sense of superiority, or a false sense of inferiority. This tendency of ours is highly destructive and illusionary.

Our society and our religions hand us blueprints, molds of appropriate and expected behavior. Some of these blueprints are integral to our development as social, moral human beings. But some blueprints are ludicrous, and cause more harm than good, more pain than peace, more isolation than cohesion. These should be discarded.

Sexuality is blueprinted. This can be illustrated by the ventings of John Meyer and John Renfro, printed in last Friday's Collegian, commenting, through letters to the editor, against the Collegian articles concerned with gay life in Manhattan. Both men express disgust and distaste for this "alternate lifestyle." Feeling quite secure in their beliefs, they attempt to categorize human sexual activity into the "immoral and illegal" acts and the "heterosexual" and "Christian" acts.

An individual's sexuality is not to be fit into a category. Sexuality is an expression completely unique to each individual. As long as we are loving and being loved, why should sexual preference be of such importance as to overshadow and taint the beauty of the sexual act and of emotional intimacy? Sexuality is a purely private matter, not for others to judge or quantify.

But Meyer likens the homosexual to the rapist, both as individuals who somehow "can't help it." Rape has no connection whatsoever to sexuality, except that the rapist uses his sexual expression as a medium for violence. The homosexual is not performing a violent act.

Jana Leep

COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

Meyer poses the question of sexual deviance — that homosexuality, like statutory rape, is a sexually deviant act. Why should we differentiate and label as deviant a sexual preference shared by two consenting adults simply because they are of the same sex? If no violence exists, the sexual expression is honest and true.

Deviance can only be labeled by use of a blueprint, a pre-defined expectation of what is normal and good. How secure we feel if we fit into this mold. How correct, righteous and superior. But how wrong we are. How harmful.

What I found most interesting was Meyer's imagination, his obsession with the appropriate function of penises and rectums. But lesbians don't experience this medium of love-making. The image, unique to male homosexual activity, overshadows all thinking for Meyer, to the extent that he cannot see to comment on the women's homosexual experience. But my main argument is: why are heterosexual relationships granted the potential for emotional intimacy and authenticity, while homosexual relationships are condensed and isolated only within the physical realm, and specifically as deviant?

Renfro, too, focusing only on the act, ignores the basic philosophy of Jesus, as he concentrates on God and the law, and not on ethics of care and compassion. He asks us "to be intolerant of homosexual activity and propaganda." He warns us that "if you accept homosexuals for what they are and come to enjoy their company, then you are just as guilty as they are." Jesus would never have asked us to judge others, to act inhumanely toward other human beings. In fact, Jesus kept company with the prostitutes, the thieves, the outcasts of the society.

Renfro's beliefs are embedded in Old Testament ideals, where moral intolerance allows security and immunity from God's wrath. But this god that Renfro envisions is not universal. A god that has a destructive and wrathful presence cannot expect humans to then be peaceful, accepting and moral. Renfro's religious orientation, his conception of the angry god, permits and even fosters his homophobic judgments.

If heterosexual activity is the extent of human sexual potential, why does the homosexual exist? I can only conceptualize God as a god of love and acceptance. Thus God would not create us as unique and then condemn us for expressing the unique potentials evolved within us, or born to us.

Our standards of appropriate behavior, while they may seem universal within our life-span, are actually contingent upon this culture and the historical milieu. Being aware of the relativity of law, religion and societal norms will only better the state in which we live.

Our bodies are each different. Our preferences for a range of ideas, activities and behaviors are diverse and unique. And too, one's sexual preference should not be narrowed or restricted according to the dictates of our society, of our religions. If we all respected our differences, instead of classifying and ranking them conditionally, I wonder how much more peaceful and satisfying our experiences could be, emotionally, intellectually, socially and sexually.

Recognition overdue for Native Americans

March is the month to remember who are the true citizens of this land.

Native Americans, popularly known as American Indians, inhabited North America before Europeans even knew of the continent's existence. Over the centuries, a rich heritage developed, filled with beautiful works of art, dances, music and tradition.

Unfortunately this heritage is often forgotten — these people are often forgotten — in the U.S. citizens' quests for money, power, and land.

In the past, the United States waged active campaigns against Native Americans. It started bloody wars against them, brutally murdering men, women and children, all for the "ownership" of land. Land that the Native American believed should have been shared by all. Native American culture that once covered the continent has been squeezed into a few small plots of often inhospitable land.

The United States has done little to repay Native Americans for the suffering it caused them. Instead, Native American culture has been repeatedly exploited without reward. The U.S. military used a Native American language as an unbreakable "code" during World War II.

This month, and always, let us keep in mind who has rightful claim to North America, and remember who are the true Americans. If not for the early generosity with which Native Americans met the pilgrims, this country probably would not exist today. The United States is a guest on this continent, rather than the "owner."

It would not be easy to reverse the damage our forebears inflicted on Native Americans. But we can try to ease the pain of history by attending the various forums and presentations on campus this month. The very least we can do is learn about the culture our ancestors virtually erased.

Homophobia wrong

Editor,

I was dismayed last Friday when I read the Collegian editorial page and saw the homophobic reactions to your articles from the previous week. Homophobia is a dangerous prejudice which leads to violence and discrimination against persons who are hated only because they are different. This intolerant, irresponsible and sick call in support of prejudice can only lead to more violence and oppression.

This kind of intolerance is an unmitigated evil. To understand why I say this, one need only look at a few examples of the kind of actions intolerance brings.

If you want to be intolerant, maybe you should go out some evening and beat a few people up, kill a few people or lock them in mental hospitals. Perhaps you would rather gas them with Zyklon-B like they did in Nazi Germany or just torture them until they are "cured" like they do in Cuba. These societies have heeded calls for less tolerance of homosexuals, though I doubt either of last week's writers would advise us to emulate these countries in other ways.

Faced with quite reasonable fears of social ostracism, legal sanction and physical violence, I found it courageous of these persons to volunteer to be interviewed at all. It was only responsible of the Collegian not to print their names in the interests of preventing harm from coming to members of the University community.

Wills imposed

Editor,

I would like to comment on the letters to the editor written by John D. Meyer and John Renfro in Friday's Collegian.

First of all, I was amazed at the hateful language Meyer used in his flawed discourse on the flawed reasoning of the Collegian. He calls homosexuals "cowards" and many other things. I would not call what the interviewees did (not revealing their identities) cowardice, at least not when there are such blatantly hateful, prejudiced people in the world.

Secondly, I would like to present some facts and clear up some myths and stereotypes about homosexuals which are perpetuated by ignorant people in our society.

In 1973, after a great deal of research, the American Psychological Association said that homosexuality is not a mental illness, as many today believe. Research shows that 6 to 7 percent of the student body at K-State, something like 1200 to 1400 students, is homosexual.

Research shows that sexual orientation is not something a person can consciously decide any more than people can choose if they want to be left- or right-handed. When did you, Meyer, choose to become heterosexual? When did you choose to become left- or right-handed?

Research shows that homosexuality is not the result of a bad parent/child relationship or of a child having a domineering opposite sex parent. Research shows that homosexuality is not caused by being molested or sexually abused as a child. Research shows that homosexuals are not child molesters; in fact, the vast majority of child molestation is perpetrated by heterosexuals, not homosexuals.

Research shows that people do not become homosexual because they fear members of the opposite sex. In fact, psychological research can disprove nearly all of the popular stereotypes attributed to homosexuals. Psychologists agree there is no difference between heterosexual people and homosexual people other than sexual orientation.

Third, Renfro talks about homosexuality being against state law. That is true. Most states have such laws on the books. But such laws are rarely enforced. They are selectively enforced by authorities. Spitting on the sidewalk is also a crime, but the police only enforce the law when they want to get rid of homeless people or derelicts. Having sex with girls under the age of 18 is statutory rape, but this country's jails aren't filled with the vast number of teenagers who break the law. Authorities only enforce laws when they feel like it.

Fourth, Renfro talks about God hating homosexuals and people who accept homosexuals for what they are. You worship a very hate-filled god, Renfro. The god I worship doesn't hate, he loves. He loves humanity; he loves everyone and doesn't make sexual orientation or anything else a condition for his good graces. Your god is vengeful and full of irrational hate and prejudice, just as you are. I pity a man who would worship such a god.

Finally, what business of yours, Meyer and Renfro, are other people's private lives, anyway? What people do in the privacy of their own homes is their business, big brothers. Stop trying to impose your wills on everyone else.

Letter offensive

Editor,

As a heterosexual Christian, I was offended by John Renfro's statements encouraging prejudice and discrimination against other human beings. As long as the choices homosexuals make do not affect others, John, it is (or should be) a free choice. After all, it was God who gave all men free will, so what right do we have to refuse others their personal choices? As for your quote from the Bible, I saw no place within its words specifying homosexuals. It could be applied to bigotry as well. The use of biblical quotes, though, is flawed from the start, considering the contradictions which are found throughout. Simply because the Bible is a product of men, with their own beliefs and prejudices, it is only an idea of the past, an historical account of our faith. If I were to take passages from the same Bible, incest would appear to be acceptable (remember Lot and his daughters?). Of course, such a use of "the word" is obviously a gross misstatement, but so too is yours. As a Christian, John, or simply a member of the race of men on earth — the human race — try to turn the other cheek. Recognize your prejudices as part of you, not a manifestation of others, and work to overcome those biases.

Test of Fire

Most firefighters don't go around setting houses on fire — unless they have a really good reason, such as learning skills that may someday save lives.

Firefighters from four rural departments participated in the controlled burning of a house Sunday as part of a training exercise designed to teach lessons about entering burning structures and searching for victims.

Three adjacent fire departments from St. George, Blue and Wamego townships along with firefighters from Wabaunsee Township were on hand to participate in the event. Most of the training occurred before the house was set on fire.

As part of the training exercise, firefighters donned compressed air tanks and masks, helmets and standard fireproof suits in preparation to enter the house.

Using wax paper across their masks to simulate the effect of being blinded by intense smoke, members of the fire departments entered the house in pairs, on their hands and knees, looking for mock victims.

Lloyd Huntzinger, a four-year veteran firefighter from fire district 10 of St. George Township, said there are a number of strict rules firefighters must adhere to when entering a burning structure.

"Never turn loose of the hose," Huntzinger said. "It will lead you out. If you let go, you may think you know where you are, but you are lost."

Before the house was set on fire, firefighters took turns entering the house searching for victims. The lead firefighter led on all fours with the hose, followed by his partner, who kept in contact with the front firefighter by holding his ankle.

The teams searched each room of the ground floor while crawling throughout the house.

"You have to know exactly what it is by feel," Huntzinger said to the firefighters preparing to enter the house. "Never turn loose of the man in front of you."

With only limited sight, firefighters were instructed to use their legs and hands to search for mock victims. For some of the firefighters, this was their first opportunity to train in this manner.

"If you look down, you cannot even see your feet," said Firefighter Jeff Smith, a member of Fire District 7 of Wamego Township. "All you can see is light changes."

Using his hands and legs to sweep the floor of the house for victims, Smith was able to successfully rescue another firefighter from the house.

"I used my off-foot to fan out about five feet," Smith said. "I kicked him, and I knew it wasn't a wall."

The controlled burn occurred east of Manhattan on a farm owned by Corky Vanpelt.

Vanpelt said he contacted representatives of area fire departments last year hoping they might be interested in using the abandoned house for training. Little interest was shown for salvaging the house.

He said he and his wife will use the plot to build a new house and a smokehouse. The Vanpelt's hope to start a catering business called Corky's Smokehouse.

One of the goals of the training exercise was to facilitate a mutual assistance program already in use by the departments. Huntzinger said because of a lack of water and manpower in many rural areas, the program is necessary to provide adequate fire protection throughout the county.

"The only way we can compensate is to work with the other departments," he said.

Most of the training in the farmhouse was conducted before any fires were set because of the danger associated with entering a burning structure, even during training, Huntzinger said.

Several firefighters have lost their lives in Kansas during training exercises in the last several years, he said.

"The hazard of training with a live fire is so great, (it is not worth the risk)," Huntzinger said. "It is strictly discouraged."

Milton Toy, district 10 fire chief, said breathing apparatus is standard equipment among fire departments, even for brush-type fires.

"We wear (air tanks) because the smoke is deadly — too many synthetic fibers," Toy said. "The days of the fire-eater are gone."

Mike Oakley, assistant fire chief for Fire District 5 of Blue Township, instructed members of the departments on how to search a house.

"Remember, you are going to have a house full of furniture," Oakley told firefighters. "When you come into a house, look at the house and ask yourself, 'Is it two stories, three stories?'"

He said firefighters must constantly be aware of their surroundings and be thorough when searching a house.

"You have to go into every closet, every cubbyhole," Oakley said. "Kids will go in there. Frightened mothers will go in there. Ask yourself, 'What time is it — 11 o'clock?' There probably will be people upstairs in bed."

Members of Pottawatomie County rural fire districts are also participating in a pilot program to certify volunteer firefighters as first responders. This training is similar to that given to emergency medical technicians, although on a lower level, said Brian Fincham, a first responder for Pottawatomie County Ambulance Service in Wamego.

"I think there is a push for more first responders, especially in the rural areas," Fincham said.

Two members of fire district 10, Rodney Davies and Lyle Bergess, were the first volunteer firefighters in the county to earn their first responder certification from the state.

Fincham said a first responder is trained to prepare an injured victim for transport when an EMT or paramedic arrives. First responders know where equipment is stored in ambulances and can retrieve it quickly and efficiently.

"We are primarily set up to give quick first aid and needed assistance," he said.

Fincham said first responders can check baseline vitals, recognize common signs and symptoms associated with different types of injuries and care for spinal injuries until additional help arrives.

Fire resistant suits and compressed air masks allow firefighters to endure extreme temperatures.

Firefighters enter a burning house on their knees to avoid smoke during Sunday's exercise.

Under the guidance of Mike Oakley, two firefighters look for a 'victim' they cannot see.

Coach to be named by April

Gaye Griffin is one of 38 applicants for the vacant Lady Cats head coaching job, which athletic director Steve Miller wants to fill by April 1.

By David Svoboda
Sports Reporter

A new women's basketball coach will be hired "by NCAA Final Four time," athletic director Steve Miller told the Collegian Tuesday.

Miller's announcement ends speculation that the job, which has been vacant since Matilda Mossman's resignation Dec. 5, might go unfilled until the end of the University hiring freeze in July.

The timetable Miller announced would have the new coach on board by the first week of April. Miller said he received permission from University administrators to proceed with the hiring because of the importance of finding a replacement in the process of recruiting players.

The closing date for applications was Feb. 16, and 38 applications were received prior to that time, Miller said.

Confirmed as included among the 38 names on the list were interim coach Gaye Griffin and former Wildcat player Eileen Feeney, currently an assistant at Texas A&M.

Miller said there would be an "additional 10 people we'll contact" to round out the list. A six-member selection committee has been in place since Jan. 9.

"I was disappointed in the overall quality of the applicants," Miller said. "That's not to say we didn't have some excellent applicants."

Miller said some of the names on the list were surprising.

"There were three or four very surprising applications — people that I wouldn't have expected to apply who did," he said.

One person Miller did expect to apply was Griffin, who recently led the team to second-place finishes in the Big Eight regular-season race and in the conference postseason tournament.

"Gaye Griffin is definitely in the running for the job," Miller said. "She is a real candidate (in terms of having filed an application) and a qualified candidate."

Griffin said she would cope with whatever decision Miller and the committee reach.

"Gaye Griffin is going to be OK one way or another," she said. "I want to stay here. I like it here. But I'll go on if I'm not the choice. I really don't worry that much about me."

Though the Lady Cats currently sit 20-10 and eagerly await Sunday's announcement of the NCAA women's tournament field, Griffin said she expects no special treatment as a result of her work since she took over for Mossman.

"I really don't think I'm owed anything," Griffin said. "I've given to this program and done everything I possibly can to make us successful, but I did it for the players — and because it's my job."

Griffin also said, in no uncertain terms, that she would not remain at K-State as an assistant if she is not chosen as just the fourth head coach in history of the program.

"There's no way I would stay," she said. "I'm a coach, and I think what I've done speaks pretty well for my ability."

Griffin said her main concern now is keeping the team prepared for a possible NCAA or NIT berth, and that the firming up of a timetable wouldn't be a negative in that process.

"We've had so many distractions so far throughout the year, this shouldn't be a big one," she said.

A source close to the K-State athletic department confirmed Feeney's interest in the position. Feeney, an assistant to former Lady Cat coach Lynn Hickey at A&M, was at the Southwest Conference Tournament Tuesday night and unavailable for comment.

The leading scorer in history of Lady Cat basketball with 1,670 career points, Feeney played at K-State from 1976-80. She holds several individual records, including the most games played in a career with 134.

Feeney played for Hickey during the final season of her career at K-State: 1979-80. That team went 26-9 to garner the most wins in a single season in the history of the program. The win total was later matched by the 1981-82 team.

The selection committee put together by Miller to assist in the choosing of a coach includes: Steve Bietau, head women's tennis coach; Gunile Devault, assistant registrar; Jim Epps, associate athletic director; Kathy Greene, academic counselor for the athletic department; Mary Molt, chairperson of the intercollegiate athletic council and administrative dietitian in the department of housing; and Veryl Switzer, associate athletic director.

Miller said "one or possibly two" Lady Cat players would be added to the selection committee as well.

Track athletes qualify

By The Collegian Staff

Track coach John Capriotti learned Tuesday that six K-State athletes had qualified for this weekend's NCAA Track and Field Championships in Indianapolis Friday and Saturday.

Only three K-State athletes had met guaranteed national qualifying standards, so Capriotti was waiting to see how many Wildcats would be eligible under the new provisional qualifying rules.

The men's side suffered some disappointments in close decisions and did not have any athlete's qualify. Clifton Etheridge and Charles Armsstead just missed a trip to the NAAs.

The women had a little better luck than the men, qualifying six athletes for the trip to nationals. Angie Miller (shot put), Carla Shannon (triple jump) and Connie Teaberry (high jump) had all met the guaranteed standard. Cross country all-American Janet Haskin made it in the 3,000 meters, and Joy Jones and Laricia Joyner will make the trip in the 55-meter dash as provisional qualifiers.

CHALK TALK

You've probably seen or heard it by now. What do you think?

The Associated Press let the cat out of the bag Tuesday by announcing the 1989-90 All-Big Eight Team. But the only cats to make the first team were a pair of Tigers from Missouri.

K-State's Steve Henson, the preseason choice for player of the year, was chosen as a second-teamer by a panel of 16 writers and broadcasters who cover the Big Eight. What ever happened to the senior sentimentalists?

Henson has received enough ink on this sports page lately to fatten his already healthy scrapbook, but Tuesday's results merit even more. The conference talent pool is a rich one, as evidenced by the fact that Big Eight teams have sat atop national polls for nine weeks this season. But Henson hasn't taken a back seat to anyone, especially of late.

I realize that no matter who gets picked, somebody's going to gripe. Looking at the honorable mention list, fans at every Big Eight location could ask why one of their top guns wasn't given higher priority.

My argument for Henson is based on what he does for his team. This entire season, I've heard "What's wrong with Steve, what's wrong with Steve?"

Tell me this, oh blind critics, if you found out Steve wasn't going to play against Oklahoma State Friday, would you need the Jaws-of-Life to yank your guts from your throat? Don't worry about my hypothetical situations, though. He's OK.

The best way I can justify why Henson should be a first-teamer is to compare him to the other top-five picks. In my opinion, the weight on his shoulders is as heavy as all the others.

■ Henson vs. Missouri's Doug Smith — This is a tough one for me to give Henson the edge in, because I think Smith is the conference's best player. Smith has had a history of disappearing in big games, and without him, the Tigers are in big trouble. But the junior post man is the most dominating physical specimen in the league.

He can score when and where he wants. He can rebound the same way. And when point guard Lee Coward isn't available, Smith, at 6-foot-10, runs the fast break with few flaws.

■ Henson vs. Kansas' Kevin Pritchard — If Henson has had a twin brother running around the league the last four years, it would be Pritchard. These guys have scored, rebounded, handed out assists and sold souvenirs for their respective schools like mirror images of each other.

The fans in Lawrence and Manhattan have treated the pair like Cain and Abel during their careers, which has added another historic chapter to the K-State-Kansas rivalry. To have one on the first team and not the other is difficult to fathom.

■ Henson vs. Missouri's Anthony Peeler — Senior vs. sophomore. Most important player vs. important player. Peeler has had a tremendous season — one that put him with the front-runners for player of the year. A late-season slide will probably keep him from getting it.

The day will come when opposing coaches will build their entire defensive game plan to stopping Peeler, much like they are with Henson now. If there is justification to that, Henson and Peeler should trade places on the respective lists.

■ Henson vs. Oklahoma State's Byron Houston — Many people regard Houston as the Big Eight's best defensive player, and the Oklahoma City native has the offensive tools to be a standout performer. But consider what Henson and Houston have done during the homestretch of the regular season.

K-State was 12-10 after a 74-71 loss to Nebraska. It looked like the 'Cats were waiting for somebody to come by and shoot them. Since that time, Henson has averaged 22.4 points per game. The result: an upper-division conference finish.

Meanwhile, Houston was unable to stop a late-season tailspin by the Cowboys that saw them lose three of four games. The 6-foot-7 center got his points, but O-State heads into the postseason tournament as the fifth seed.

■ Henson vs. Colorado's Shaun Vandiver — Undoubtedly, Vandiver has been the reason that the Buffaloes' ship hasn't sunk faster this season. The transfer from Hutchinson Community College has had two outstanding seasons, making the rare transition from juno reserve to a Big Eight superstar.

I am a believer that standouts

Big 8 1st team eludes Henson

MU's Smith unanimous selection

By Chris Hays
Sports Editor

What has been one of the most pondered questions around the K-State campus in the last month was finally put to rest by 16 members of the Big Eight regional sports writers and broadcasters Tuesday.

The question: Would Steve Henson's late-season flurry that saw him average 22.4 points over the last eight games, be enough to, in the eyes of the Associated Press voters, earn him a spot on the first team of the 1989-90 All-Big Eight list — a spot some said he had lost midway through the season?

The answer: No. Henson was snubbed by this year's voters, landing a spot on the second team, while teammate Jean Derouillere joined Henson among

The All-Big Eight first team consisted of unanimous selection Doug Smith of Missouri, Kevin Pritchard of Kansas, Anthony Peeler of Missouri, Shaun Vandiver of Colorado and Byron Houston of Oklahoma State.

Joining Henson on the second team were Skeeter Henry of Oklahoma, Victor Alexander of Iowa State, Mark Randall of Kansas and Nathan Buntin of Missouri.

"Well, the group that made (the first team) certainly had outstanding seasons," K-State coach Lon Kruger said. "Obviously I'm a little biased, but I can't imagine a team from the Big Eight excluding Steve."

Margaret Clark/Staff

Big Eight preseason player of the year and K-State point guard Steve Henson was voted a spot on the All-Big Eight second team Tuesday by a panel of 16 Associated Press sports writers and broadcasters.

When questions started to surface about whether the Big Eight's preseason player of the year was even deserving of a spot on the first team, the Wildcats were in the midst of an up-and-down season that had them reeling in a three-game losing streak.

But Henson led a late-season K-State surge that saw the Wildcats capture the fourth spot in the Big Eight's final regular-season standings — a spot Kruger said would probably be the key to the 'Cats receiving an NCAA Tournament berth.

That surge led many to believe Henson had worked his way back onto the first team, especially after his 41-point performance at Iowa State.

"Steve has had an outstanding year," Kruger said. "And I can't imagine any player doing more for his team than Steve has done for ours."

Smith, the only unanimous selection on the All-Big Eight squad, was also named the player of the year by the District 5 Basketball Writers Association, on which Henson also landed a spot Tuesday.

Joining Smith and Henson on the writers' all-district team were Peeler, Pritchard, Randall, Houston, Alexander, Henry, Les Jepsen of Iowa, Bob Harstad of Creighton, and Anthony Bonner of St. Louis.

British film lacking in comedy, drama

'Personal Services' follows lifestyle of London prostitute

Mark Schreiner

REVIEW

The British film "Personal Services," directed by Terry Jones of Monty Python fame, chronicles the fall of a London waitress whose intense desire to send her bastard son to a private school drives her to prostitution.

Jones claims to have been inspired by the life of Cynthia Payne, Britain's infamous brothel-keeper known as "Madame Cyn." Payne herself served as a consultant to Julie Walters, who plays Christine, the film's protagonist.

Christine is a hyper, harried waitress — the type who yells so loud at her son to be quiet in church that everyone turns to see what's all the racket.

She sublets flats to prostitutes to help pay for her son's schooling. When Christine's tenants don't pay her, her own landlord demands Christine pay with her personal services.

Christine instantly decides prostitution is her yellow-brick road. She tacks a sign advertising "French polishing" on a notice board and begins stealing her tenants' clients. She laughs about the whole idea. "How much should we charge?" she jokes with her assistant as the first customer trundles into the room.

She daydreams that she is wearing a prom dress, sitting on an elegant couch in a mansion after some ballroom dancing, and that Prince Charming has just proposed to her with a ring.

In reality, her customers are Rumpelstiltskin.

They are uniformly timid old men in business suits with bifocals, hats and pipes who claim their wives are invalids. She fancies they are nice men. She is surprised so many nice men frequent brothels, as if manners equal morality. She offers tea at no extra charge.

"Personal Services" tries at times to be comical. It fails. Director Jones follows the traditional Monty Python formula of men dressing as women and speaking in falsettos with an English accent, but it doesn't work.

Many jokes are lost because British sex-slang is different. Who knows what a "Mr. Popasucalu" is? The other jokes wouldn't even be funny if the film was about anything but sex.

"Personal Services" tries at times to be serious, to show the sad fate of the prostitute. Christine almost cries when she walks in on a couple making love without money involved. Like Holden Caulfield in "The Catcher in the Rye," she tries to talk with her customers as if a relationship existed.

But Christine has too much pride to gain sympathy. She caters to kinky customers because it's an unexploited market niche. She says her parties are "just like Tupperware parties, but I sell sex instead of plastic containers."

She gives her son the services of one of her whores for his 14th birthday. When her son is done, she ushers in her father. She argues that she can raise her kid better than any married parents could.

Director Jones seems to be trying to convince us there is nothing wrong with prostitution and perversion. He tries to equate a naked woman, painted gold with wings like an angel, with the angels who praised the newborn Christ at Christmas.

He has Christine's banker give a tour of her brothel to reporters as if he were Willy Wonka showing off his chocolate factory. He shows the British court system, which prosecutes Christine when she gets nailed by the police, as filled with her customers.

The film's last failing attempt tries to aggrandize women. Men are nothing but animals who women con-

"The overcrowding we expect in our jail is drunk K-State students during the weekend serving their DUI sentences, and the extra prisoners we'd take on would be more hard-core," said Tony Ridder, a parent at the meeting. "The expansion we need is for people drying out until the next day."

Janice Farinelli, member of the core committee for the Manhattan Catholic Schools' PTO, said she wanted to make the public more aware of the new jail.

"I want to make it more of a community issue and not just a Manhattan Catholic School issue," Farinelli said.

She said the main objective is to get the four committees formed and get the information needed to go before the City Commission, before the Commission makes a decision on building the jail.

"We don't know when the decision will be made, but we need to be ready to respond quickly," Farinelli said.

Jan Danenburg, president of the PTO, said she doesn't think the County Commission is not following the zoning rules in making plans for the jail.

"It's not zoned for a jail. They haven't gone through the procedure for putting a commercial building in a residential area," Danenburg said.

this sense of unity in a crisis, typically a war," Fallows said. "This is the permanent dilemma for American society. How do we have the moral or political equivalent of war which brings out something other than immediate self-interest?"

Oukrop agreed this is a problem America will be forced to deal with eventually. She said the media will need to take much of the responsibility in alerting people to the influences foreign countries are having in the United States.

Another difference Fallows noted between the Japanese and American cultures is the social structure. The Japanese, he said, have a sense of hierarchy and social order which may lead to organization that American society lacks due to its social freedom. Part of the Japanese social structure includes a division of labor between men and women.

Making America Great Again," Fallows said because of these differences, the United States should concentrate on the economic policies that helped make it successful, rather than try to copy the policies that are working in another country.

He noted several aspects of the American system which he thinks must be improved for the United States to be competitive in the future.

The most important step, Fallows said, is the reduction of the American federal budget deficit which creates a demand for external funds and dries up its savings. He advocates a gasoline tax as the solution to this problem.

"Nobody likes the idea of paying more for gasoline," Fallows said. "But the Japanese are paying about four times as much for gasoline as Americans; Europeans pay about three times as much."

Fallows said the gasoline tax he proposes would increase what Americans spend on gasoline to only about half what the Japanese pay and would eliminate the federal deficit in a few years.

America also must change its trade strategy with Japan, Fallows said.

John L. Moss listened to witness testimony during a preliminary hearing Wednesday afternoon at the Riley County Courthouse.

Trial ordered in slaying

Officers testify about investigation of student's beating

By Lori Antrim
Staff Reporter

During a preliminary hearing Tuesday in Riley County District Court, Judge Paul Miller decided John L. Moss should stand trial on a second degree murder charge in connection with the death of Shane Harrison.

Harrison, a freshman in engineering, was discovered beaten to death Feb. 20 in an alley in the 600 block of Bluemont Street.

The first witness for the prosecution at the hearing was Curtis Jackson, who said he had known Moss for about seven years and was living with him at the time of the incident.

He testified that on Feb. 19 he and Moss had attended a party in a downstairs apartment at 816 Juliette Ave. The last time Jackson saw Moss was about 3:30 a.m.

Jackson said he had seen Harrison at the party earlier that night, but he later noticed that Moss and Harrison were not in the room.

Moss and Harrison had never met before that night, he said.

Jackson said he was lying on the couch in the apartment watching television at about 4 a.m. when Moss knocked on the door. When Moss entered, Jackson noticed red stains on Moss' cowboy boots and jeans.

"He said he had just beat someone to the ground," Jackson said. "(He) said he killed somebody."

Jackson said Moss' tone of voice was calm and cool when talking about what happened. Moss' actions, however, were all "hyped up," and he began making growling noises and flexing his muscles.

"At first I didn't believe him," he said. "Then he showed me a wallet."

Jackson said Moss changed his clothes. After about an hour had elapsed, Moss took Jackson outside and they looked at Harrison, who was laying face down next to a pickup truck.

"The individual on the ground was making choking sounds," he said.

Jackson said he questioned Moss why he attacked Harrison.

"He said, 'I did it because I'm crazy and I'm evil,'" Jackson said. "I turned around and ran back upstairs."

Jackson testified that Moss was drunk and stumbling around and had been drinking beer and wine that night.

The second witness for the prosecution was Detective Richard Trobaugh of the Riley County Police Department, who had been assigned to the case. He said he made initial contact with Moss at 11:15 a.m. on Feb. 20 and asked him to sign a waiver after advising him of his Miranda rights.

He said he recorded the conversation in its entirety and it took about 45 minutes.

"He told me he was involved," Trobaugh said. "Moss acknowledged that he got into a fight that night with someone he met at the party and he thought the guy's name was Shane."

Trobaugh said he questioned Moss concerning the injuries sustained by Harrison.

"The deceased had several lacerations on his head and I asked Moss what caused them," Trobaugh said. "He said he kicked Shane with his

Tuition increase decade's smallest

Colleges, universities credit modest rise to cost cuts, sense of student outrage

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Many colleges and universities are announcing some of the smallest tuition increases in a decade for next fall.

College officials credit themselves with cutting costs, especially in administration, and passing the savings on to students.

But some higher education leaders believe next fall's modest increases also are a response to a growing sense of outrage among students, legislators and others after a decade in which tuition increases were far in excess of the nation's inflation rate.

"The market and the political context are beginning to have an impact," said Robert Atwell, president of the American Council of Education. "I think we're approaching the end of the big increases. What's doing it is the demographics, the student response, the legislative response in some cases, the governing boards getting interested in this issue, the editorial boards of newspapers and magazines."

Especially sobering, say Atwell and others, has been a recent falloff in applications at many colleges, including at top ones such as Harvard, suggesting that schools no longer can simply raise their rates with impunity.

Harvard's fall tuitions won't be announced until later this month, but spokesman Peter Costa said fees probably will be up by 5-to-7 percent.

Average tuitions rose by 5-to-9 percent during the current school year, according to the College Board's most recent annual college cost survey. Costs rose in double digits from 1981 through 1984. Rates at four-year public colleges shot up 20 percent in 1983-84. They leveled into the 5-9 percent range for the past five years.

Still, some like Richard Rosser, president of the National Association of Independent Colleges and Universities, aren't ready to declare an end to the college cost spiral.

He and others point out that next fall's announced increases are "all over the map."

East Bloc students expected to apply

By Todd Ubben
Collegian Reporter

No East German students are enrolled at the University, but that may change by fall 1991, as requests for admissions to U.S. universities and colleges continue to pour in from Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union.

"There's a real push in higher education to make the linkages with the German educational systems," said Richard Elkins, director of admissions.

Elkins, who is also vice president for international education of the American Association of Collegiate Registrars and Admissions Officers, travelled with a five-member delegation to West Germany and East Germany last week to meet with education officials there. He was selected to the delegation by the U.S. Information Agency, which is part of the State Department.

The delegation met with the West German Rectors' Conference Feb. 26-March 1 in West Berlin to discuss West German students coming to U.S. universities.

"The West Germans were starting to get a number of applications from East Germany, not only numbers, but people wanting to enroll immediately," Elkins said. "We discussed how we could better help the exchange."

The group met with East German and Eastern European education officials in East Berlin March 2-4 before returning to the United States.

Even though the East German educational system may change after elections there in March, he said studying the old system is important in setting up admissions criteria.

"The students we will be seeing within the next few years will have come through that old system," Elkins said. "It will be a while before the new students get into the system."

Elkins said the educational system differs from the U.S. system in that the curriculum is set by the state and the students are paid to attend college as full-time students.

Educators in East Germany are lacking books and computers, Elkins said, and the country's lack of hard currency and students' lack of English proficiency are obstacles to speedy admission.

"I think the language proficiency is something that can be solved very quickly, but the currency problem is not," he said.

K-State has received a handful of admissions requests from students in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe, but Elkins said these requests have come primarily from relatives of people who already live here and faculty members.

East German students seeking admissions will probably be working on masters, doctoral and post doctoral degrees, he said.

"At the graduate level, there's always been the support for graduate assistants, teaching assistants and research assistants," Elkins said.

Transferring the credits for the graduate students should not be a problem, he said.

Twenty-six West German students are currently enrolled at K-State. Walt Kolonosky, associate professor of modern languages and coordinator of the international student exchange program, said K-State and Justus-Liebig-Universität in West Germany exchange seven students each year through the Giessen exchange program.

Ray Dempsey, senior in industrial engineering, was recently named the top engineering student in the nation. He was awarded Outstanding Fellow by the National Society of Black Engineers for his participation in regional and national chapter levels.

Dempsey excels as college student

By Tomari Quinn
Staff Reporter

With the ability to master math and science concepts, engineering just seemed to come naturally to Ray Dempsey.

It was soon after Dempsey's high school American Collegiate Testing Program exams that colleges began recruiting him with a passion.

"The best scholarship offer came from K-State, and I was recruited on a more personal level," said Dempsey, a senior in engineering. "They sent Christmas cards and little notes just to see how I was doing."

Although the University had high expectations of Dempsey from the beginning, no one could have placed more pressure on him than he placed on himself.

"I had a rough first semester at college," he said. "I never had to study in high school, and I started to doubt that I could do it."

After receiving a 2.8 grade point average his first semester, Dempsey became involved in a learning skills program that helped him achieve a 4.0 GPA his second semester. Dempsey eventually taught other students in the program for two semesters.

"It really helped me to develop more of a focus in my academic pursuits and the things I needed to do to be successful," he said.

Professors now view Dempsey as the ideal college student.

"Ray, to me, is the total student in every way," said Don Rathbone, dean of the College of Engineering. "Ray is highly committed and motivated in everything he does."

Dempsey was named an Outstanding Fellow by the National Society of Black Engineers for his participation in regional and national chapters.

Academic performance and on-campus activities outside NSBE were also a consideration for the award, Dempsey said. This year NSBE honored 39 college students with Fellow awards and one student — Dempsey — with the Outstanding Fellow award. He had been awarded two previous Fellow awards in past years.

NSBE is a student-run organization containing between 6,000 and 7,000 persons nationwide and is the largest of its kind in the world, Dempsey said.

"It's made a big difference in not just my life, but in others as well," he said. "I wouldn't have the opportunity to share my thoughts or even to be visible if it wasn't for NSBE."

Dempsey has the opportunity to speak at symposiums and conferences to high school and college students.

"I like to take those opportunities to stress how everybody needs to take advantage of opportunities given," he said. "At the high school level especially, we need to show them the kind of things they are going to be able to do."

"I just tell the students to make

Libya producing chemical weapons

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The White House said Wednesday that Libya has renewed production of chemical weapons, posing "a major threat" and requiring "vigorous action" to shut down the plant.

White House press secretary Marlin Fitzwater refused to exclude the possibility of a military strike to knock out the poison-gas plant.

"We don't rule out anything," he said.

However, Fitzwater also suggested the plant could be closed if foreign suppliers denied it the raw materials needed to produce chemical weapons.

"The international community should step up its efforts to deny Libya the ability to continue operating the plant," he said.

Chemical weapons are considered the poor nations' atom bomb because they are relatively cheap to produce and hard to detect. Libya is one of about two dozen countries considered capable of or actually producing poison gas, which was used by Iran and Iraq in the Persian Gulf war.

The latest U.S. charges underscore the hostile relationship between the United States and Libyan dictator Moammar Gadhafi. Tensions reached a crisis point in 1986 when the Reagan administration ordered that Tripoli be bombed.

Fitzwater said the United States was consulting with other governments to express serious concern about the facility.

The plant at Rabta, 60 miles south of Tripoli, is producing limited quantities of mustard gas and nerve agents, U.S. officials said.

"Rabta is dangerous and becoming more so," Fitzwater said. "This points to the necessity for heightened international vigilance of Libyan procurement activities and for vigorous efforts to stop the operation at Rabta."

Asked what he meant by "vigorous action," Fitzwater said, "We aren't willing to speculate on what specific efforts, but nothing is ruled out."

He would not comment on the type or quantity of weapons being produced.

Former Afghan official defects

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — The former Afghan defense minister who led a coup attempt against the government defected Wednesday to the Moslem insurgents he fought for more than a decade, guerrilla and Pakistani government sources said.

Gen. Shah Nawaz Tanai fled Afghanistan on Wednesday with his wife, two daughters and son, then returned with the guerrillas, according to the sources.

The situation in Afghanistan was unclear. President Najib again claimed that the coup Tanai launched Tuesday had "absolutely been broken. Of that there is no doubt."

But Western diplomats and guerrilla leaders based in Pakistan said fighting continued, although on a smaller scale.

Gas explosion, fire kill 11

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — A gas explosion and a fire in an Asian restaurant in downtown Frankfurt killed at least 11 people and injured six others Wednesday evening, officials said.

Frankfurt fire brigade chief Guenter Burbaum told reporters at the scene that the blaze broke out about 8:40 p.m. (2:40 p.m. EST) and gutted the "Koryo" Chinese-Korean restaurant on the second floor of a five-story building near Frankfurt's Cathedral.

Burbaum said a gas explosion in the restaurant's kitchen was believed to have triggered the fire, which he said had left at least 11 people dead and six others injured.

Shellfish become menace

WASHINGTON (AP) — A prolific, inedible European shellfish that stowed away on freighters has become a multi-million dollar menace in three years, Great Lakes lawmakers said Wednesday as they introduced bills to prevent more waterways from becoming mussel-bound.

Unchecked, the exotic zebra mussel has the potential by the turn of the century of causing $5 billion worth of damage in the Great Lakes region and beyond, said Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio.

"I can tell you it's no joke," said Glenn, who was joined at a news conference by seven lawmakers who want the federal government to spend $40 million to fight the barnacle-like creature and prevent further infestations.

Subway derails; crash kills 3

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — A subway train derailed and smashed into support beams during Wednesday morning's rush hour, shearing one car "like a sardine can." The crash killed three people, injured 130 and left some trapped for hours.

Officials said it is the worst accident in the 21 years the Southeastern Pennsylvania Transportation Authority has operated the regional commuter system.

Doctors amputated the right leg of one woman to free her from the wreckage of the six-car train. But the woman died four hours later of complications from a second broken leg and severe chest injuries, said Hahnemann University Hospital spokeswoman Linda Clossey.

Of the 162 people treated at hospitals, five were in critical condition at the University of Pennsylvania Hospital.

House kills admissions bill

TOPEKA (AP) — The House killed a bill Wednesday that would have ended the state's longstanding tradition of open admissions to its universities.

Representatives voted to strike the bill from the House debate calendar. The action came on a voice vote after no discussion, just a week after the House debated the bill for four hours and refused to advance it to a final vote.

Current law allows any Kansas high school graduate to enroll in a state university. The bill would have changed the law, effective in the fall of 1994.

The bill would have required Kansans to graduate in the top third of their high school classes, score 21 or better on the American College Test or pass a pre-college curriculum established by the state Board of Regents with a "C" average.

Farmers warned of herbicide

TOPEKA (AP) — Attorney General Robert Stephan warned Kansas farmers Wednesday to be wary of telephone solicitations by a Florida company seeking to sell them a herbicide called Stampede or Mustang.

Stephan identified the company as American Farm Products of Margate, Fla., which he said also uses the names of Pioneer Farm Products and Victory Farm Products.

He said last fall the herbicide being sold was called Stampede, and more recently a similar product is being promoted called Mustang.

The attorney general said he is concerned about claims made about the effectiveness of the product, its price and its contents.

House approves ethics bill

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A bill touted as a sweeping overhaul of state ethics laws received House final approval Wednesday, although some members expressed strong concerns about its contents.

Representatives passed the bill, 107-7, with 11 members abstained on final roll call. The action sent the bill to the Senate.

The bill makes the standards of conduct for legislators stricter, restructures and strengthens the stage agency that enforces ethics laws and tightens some lobbying and campaign finance laws.

The provisions dealing with legislators' conduct received the most attention during a debate Tuesday on the bill, with some members saying they were so severe they would endanger the Kansas tradition of a citizen Legislature by driving professionals from its ranks.

Still, many members felt they couldn't vote against the bill.

"It's not an easy bill to vote against," said Rep. Dale Sprague, R-McPherson, who voted against the measure. "It leaves the wrong impression."

Sprague was joined by Reps. Don Crumbaker, R-Brewster; Dick Eckert, R-Westmore; Marvin Littlejohn, R-Phillipsburg; R.D. Miller, R-

Russell, and Jack Shriver, D-Arkansas City.

Fifty-six of the House's 57 Democrats joined 51 of the House's 68 Republicans to pass the bill.

"My Dad told me years ago, when I was a little bitty boy, 'Don't trust people who tell you they're honest,'" Shriver said. "I think everybody up here knows what's in the bill, and they assume the Senate is going to kill it. I don't assume anything."

Among the bill's provisions are ones that limit the amount of business legislators can have with the state and with clients who have cases pending before state agencies.

It would prevent them from lobbying for compensation. It also would prohibit them from having a substantial interest in or being employed by a business with a state contract or involved in a state program, unless the contract was competitively bid or the program is available to the general public or a general class of people or businesses.

However, the bill would not prevent attorneys in the Legislature from representing clients before state agencies.

Seven Republicans, Reps. Gene Amos of Shawnee, Jayne Aylward of Salina, Ginger Barr of Auburn, Nancy Brown of Stanley, Fred Gatlin of Atwood, Keith Roe of Mankato and Marvin Smith of Topeka, voted for the bill but told their colleagues in a statement that the thought the bill could limit the field of candidates for legislative seats.

"My vote against it has nothing to do with ethics," Shriver said. "It's a bad bill."

The 11 members who abstained by voting "present" were all Republicans. Under House rules, a member is supposed to vote present if he or she feels voting for or against the measure represents a conflict of interest.

Those legislators were Barbara Allen of Prairie Village, Bill Buntin of Topeka, Ben Foster of Wichita, David Heinemann of Garden City, Rex Hoy of Fairway, Martha Jenkins of Leavenworth, Phil Kline of Overland Park, Mike O'Neal of Hutchinson, Vince Snowbarger of Olathe and Bob Vancrum of Overland Park.

Heinemann said he handles workers' compensation claims. Hoy said he occasionally sells airline tickets to the state and is not sure whether the bill would affect him.

"I'm playing it safe," he said.

Snowbarger added: "Everyone understands that it's an extremely political vote."

City bids for depository

Patent research site requested for Farrell

By Gregory A. Branson
Collegian Reporter

Manhattan is making a bid against other cities in Kansas to establish a state patent depository to be located in Farrell Library, which would give researchers and inventors background information on projects.

A bill creating the first such depository in the state passed 40-0 in the Kansas Senate Wednesday and is now in the hands of the House of Representatives, said Sue Peterson, assistant to the president for legislative affairs.

No location is specified in the bill, and competing cities may include Lawrence and Topeka. Some Wichita businesses are trying to convince lawmakers to locate the depository in the library at Wichita State University so they have local access for research, Peterson said.

John Walters, president of the KSU Research Foundation, said a patent depository has every patent granted in the past 20 years on microfilm for public use. More than 102,000 patents were issued in the United States last year, 316 of which came from Kansas.

Kansas is one of at least five states that doesn't have a depository, but some states have more than one depository. The closest depositories are located in Kansas City, Mo.;

"We do considerably more research here at Kansas State than anywhere else in the state."

—John Walters
President, KSU Research Foundation

Lincoln, Neb.; Stillwater, Okla.; and Denver, Colo.

Walters testified before the Senate Commission on Economic Development that the depository should be located at K-State because of its central location in the state and the amount of research done at the University.

"We do considerably more research here at Kansas State than anywhere else in the state," Walters said. "We do eight to 10 times more research here than at Wichita State."

John Johnson, chairman of Research and Information Services at Farrell, said the library is enthusiastic about the prospects of getting the depository because it would be a great addition to the government documents section.

Johnson said space requirements would be minimal. About five cabinets for microfilm and possibly a new microfilm reader/printer and fax machine would be needed.

A librarian would be hired to take care of the patent depository, but could also help with other duties in the government section.

No money amount was appropriated in the bill, and the Legislature may require some matching funds from the city or University where the depository is located.

Walters said a depository usually needs about $150,000 for start-up costs, two-thirds of which would pay for the backlog of patents. The rest of the money is used to pay for equipment and the librarian's salary.

It is possible, Walters said, that some of the large businesses in Wichita may offer a lot of money to get the depository located there.

Johnson said the University may be willing to invest enough money for a the microfilm reader/printer and the fax machine, plus the space in the library.

Senate to discuss bill on ticket sales policies

By Kirk Caraway
Collegian Reporter

Student Senate will debate a bill dealing with the annual campout for basketball tickets and other athletic ticket sales policies at 7 p.m. today in the Union Big Eight Room.

The bill sponsored by the Athletic Ticket Sales Committee sets strict guidelines for the conduct of those groups wishing to camp out for basketball tickets next fall.

Changes were made to prevent a repeat of the problems experienced last year by residents of Putnam Hall, who were forced to go to Tribunal to settle a dispute over their position in line.

The proposed rules state that a group has to sign in first before setting up their tent. The sign-up will begin when a purple flag is raised over Anderson Hall sometime in the week preceding the first basketball practice. Only the athletic director and the chairman of the ATSC will know the exact time the flag goes up.

Also to be debated are two opposing bills dealing with the disposition of excess money collected under the Associated Students of Kansas line item fee.

The excess fund was created when Senate last year passed a 15 cent per student fee increase for ASK. However, the increase was not passed by Wichita State University and the extra 15 cent fee has been collected and held in the ASK account.

Confusion over who controlled this money led to the two bills being introduced.

Coming up for first readings is a proposed fee increase for Student Publications Inc. The increase of 70 cents for full-time and 35 cents for part-time students is being requested to offset changes in the tax laws that now require Student Publications to pay sales tax. The change in tax status is estimated to cost Student Publications $24,114 for this fiscal year.

Chain letters quickly becoming problem

"There's a sucker born every minute." Phineas Barnum (1810-1891), showman.

"Hello, my name is Dave Rodes. In September, 1983 my car was repossessed and bill collectors were hounding me like you wouldn't believe. I was laid off and my unemployment ran out. In January of 1984, my family and I went on a ten day cruise. In February of 1984 I bought a 1984 Cadillac with CASH. I am currently building a home in Virginia and will never have to work again. In October (sic) of 1983, i(sic) received a letter in the mail telling me how to earn $50,000 anytime I wanted to. Of course, I was skeptical, but because I was so desperate and had nothing to lose, I gave it a try. Today I am rich. You can be too if you believe and ACT ON THIS! I have earned over $200,000 to date and I will become a millionaire within the next four to six months. This money program works perfectly every time. I have never failed to earn less than $50,000 each time. This is a legitimate business opportunity, a perfectly legal money making program. It does not require you to sell anything or come in contact with people. Best of all, you only have to leave you(sic) home to mail these letters. If you believe that someday you will get that luck(sic) break, simply follow these instructions and your dreams will come true."

I was preparing my income tax return last week when I decided to stop and go through the day's mail. I must add, since I began writing for the Collegian my mail has been ... well ... fascinating. At any rate, on this particular evening, after completing Schedule A of the itemized deductions, entering that value on line 34 of Page 2 of Form 1040, subtracting line 34 from the adjusted gross income on line 32 and entering that value on line 35 of Page 2 of Form 1040, multiplying 2,000 by the total number of exemptions claimed on line 6e of Page 1 of Form 1040 and then subtracting this number from the number on line 35, then looking up the "married and filing jointly" federal income tax for my level of taxable income on Page 31 of the tax preparation booklet, I was not, at this point, a happy camper. I was also not in the mood for the latest version of the Billy Graham Crusade via the U.S. Postal Service.

Well, well, well. You can imagine my surprise when I read Dave's letter. Hot dog! "A millionaire ... $50,000 each time ... legitimate business ... never failed ... dreams will come true ..." Where do I sign, what do I have to do? I read on.

"Follow these instructions and in twenty to sixty days, you will receive $50,000 in cash:

- 1) Immediately mail $1.00 to each of the names listed below. SEND ONLY CASH.
- 2) Remove the name in the number one spot, move the others up and place your name in the number five position.
- 3) Xerox or print 100 copies of the letter with you(sic) name in the number five position.

Brad Seabourn

COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

4) Get a list of 100 names from CMS Inc., 13843 N. Tatum Blvd., Suite 5-232, Phoenix, AZ 85032 ... $10 per 100 names, this is the MOST IMPORTANT part of the program ... DO IT!

5) While you are waiting for your mailing list to arrive, place the letters in envelopes and stamp. Do not put your return address on these envelopes.

6) When your lists arrive they will be pre-glued labels. Place the labels on the envelopes and mail. Within twenty to sixty days, you will receive $50,000 in cash. This is legal, and what's more important, IT WORKS!

7) DO IT NOW!

I looked at the five names at the bottom of the letter thinking maybe I would see the name of Ed McMahon to add instant credibility to this "money program," but no such luck. The last name was Edward Silverman, Woodland Hills, California. If instructions were correctly followed, I could assume Ed was the generous guy who mailed me the letter. But I'm confused. Why didn't the letter begin, "Hello, my name is Edward Silverman?" Well, I guess Dave's story is pretty convincing.

I let my wife read the letter, just to get a second opinion before I zipped my ten bucks off to CMS Incorporated. She said it was a chain letter, and chain letters are illegal. Never ask your wife for a second opinion. Women are just too skeptical and practical to make important business decisions.

I decided to call the Postal Inspector before mailing my ten bucks, just in case my wife was right. No sense taking any chances.

Alfred Howe, a postal inspector for the Kansas City Postal Inspection Division, Kansas City, Missouri, kindly answered all my questions.

It seems chain letters, or "pyramid schemes," as they are referred to within the postal service, are fast becoming quite a problem, and Dave's letter was no exception. The advent of affordable personal computers and printers has caused these kinds of so-called money programs to proliferate at an alarming rate.

The schemes can take a number of forms, but they all rely on the person receiving the letter to select an additional number of people to place on the list, who will in turn select an additional number of people, and so on. Howe pointed out it does not take a math whiz to figure out, eventually, and quite rapidly, there will not be enough people in the solar system to keep the scheme going. "But what is it that makes these schemes illegal?" I asked. "I get mail all the time from people soliciting money — universities, churches, public TV stations — all kinds."

Howe made it clear that these particular schemes violate federal fraud statutes by making the direct misrepresentation of "getting rich," as well as violating the federal lottery statutes since they depend on the solicitation of other people, which brings in the element of "chance," thereby functioning as a lottery without benefit of a license.

Howe's Kansas City office, just in the month of February, received 240 letters referred to them by skeptical citizens. Assuming this to be a monthly average, that adds up 2,880 letters per year. He quickly added this was just the tip of the iceberg, since the majority are actually sent or thrown away. A rough estimate of the number of pyramid schemes actually mailed to people in the Kansas City area could be as much as three to five times higher. That's approximately 14,400 per year. And if each recipient wrote down five names who sent back $1 ... who wrote down five names who sent back $1 ... who ...

"Hello, my name is Dave Rodes. In September, 1983 my car was repossessed ..."

Nah! I can't bring myself to do it. It's illegal. But ... wait a minute!

"Hello, my name is Rev. Dave Rodes. In September, 1983, the Lord told me ..."

Senate Tribunal not functioning properly

Last week, Student Tribunal decided the Fine Arts/Athletic fee was indeed constitutional and rejected arguments contrary to that effect, saying only the motives of the petitioner "were of a political nature."

This isn't a decision, it's a cop out. Some very good points were brought out questioning the process of how the fee was approved. But Tribunal failed to address a single one of these in its abbreviated statement upholding the fee.

Several questions are brought to mind by this action, or lack of action as the case may be. Is the athletic department specifically prohibited from using any money from the fee to help pay off Bramlage Coliseum? The SGA constitution seems to suggest this. But Tribunal is silent on this point.

Does this decision mean anything of a "political nature" will not be decided? How non-political would something have to be to be decided by Tribunal? Would it come to the rescue if, let's say, the student body president tried to make off with the student treasury? Or would it stand by and watch, afraid it was too "political?"

There are also questions about the Tribunal itself. How can the old Tribunal hear the case when the new Tribunal was approved and sworn in several days before? Does this mean we have two Tribunals? How about the fact that one member of the Tribunal that heard the case also sits on the Athletic Ticket Sales Committee? Could this be a conflict of interest?

The job of Tribunal is to decide on such things as the constitutionality of the Fine Arts/Athletic fee. It is there to protect the interests of the students and the SGA constitution. Students are not served by a judicial board that is afraid to act or doesn't give reasons for its actions. Tribunal needs to have the guts to make decisions and give the reasons for doing so.

Current ticket buying method not fair to all

Camping out for tickets to the Wildcats' home games has become a tradition in recent years. Crazy 'Cats fans will brave the elements in a pup tent just to get their hands on the precious few non-reserved tickets. This is the only way to fly for these fanatics.

But the campout system is not fair to everyone. It is biased in favor of those living in residence halls and greek houses. The average Joe Basketball Fan had better have a good number of friends if he hopes to get the primo seats. It is quite difficult for a single person or a small group to take a week off of classes to man a tent for 'Cats tickets.

There is a better way. There are 4,007 reserve seat tickets that should be put up for sale by a lottery system. This would allow Joe Basketball Fan equal chance at getting a reasonably good seat as anyone else. The crazy campers can still fight over the 1,002 non-reserved tickets which can be sold first. And if a big group wants to get reserved seats together, there are ways to engineer a lottery to accommodate them.

We like seeing the crazies in the front row with their painted faces and outlandish attire, but let's give the average guy a chance to see the 'Cats from somewhere below nosebleed level.

College system flawed

We may not need Selective Admissions, but we need something. Somewhere in our educational system is something that needs a change. Why? Because too often I feel that I — like the majority of other University students — am just marking time.

"Marking time!" you may object. "Marking time? You've got to be kidding. I'm taking tests, going to class, working to get a degree and get out of here — how many times have we heard that? How many times have we said it?"

I value my education and have every intention of going after another degree after I get out of here. But sometimes I feel like I'm just marking time until I get to the school I want to go to. I spent a year of that time taking classes I'd already taken in high school because the University doesn't believe I learned anything while I was there.

So I'm marking time toward a goal of my own. But how many people are just marking time until they get out and get a real job? I don't mean the kind of job that really requires four years of hard study; for those you usually have to go beyond college. I mean people heading for jobs where most of their training happens on the job. Jobs like running a restaurant or a shop, working on a newspaper, middle management in a business, travel agents, and others do not require four years of college preparation, although some students may benefit from it. Ask any journalism student if they didn't learn most of their stuff at the Collegian, or ask students in other majors if they didn't learn more during their internship than in four years of college.

The problem is not the jobs or the majors or the people in them. Those jobs are as important as any others and require just as much specialized knowledge and training. The problem is with the system. As a society, we have given up on our public education system to the extent that a high school diploma is almost meaningless. Consider the kinds of jobs you can get with nothing but a high school degree. You could be a secretary — if you went to secretarial school. You could be a construction worker or a waitress or work in a fast food restaurant — if you underwent some training first. Basically all a diploma means anymore is that you made it for eighteen years before your parents threw you out. It's no wonder we live in a country with a self-perpetuating poverty rate. There are very few jobs left that pay more than minimum wage that you can get without actually investing money in an education of some kind.

What about that basic core curriculum that we are all supposed to get at college? I'll list it for you: English Comp I and II, Public Speaking, and Physical Education. Period. Most high schools at least offer all of those classes, or even require them. As for all of the other requirements they toss in there to make you a broader person before you get your degree, well, that's where you're marking time. If they're really necessary, why aren't they universal? Why does it take more science to get a degree in, for example, modern languages than in business? Because they're more likely to need it or because we don't offer enough language classes? If that's the case, maybe it shouldn't take as long to get a degree. If a student doesn't want to be in a class, that student is wasting the instructor's time and his own. The University cannot force people to broaden their minds. Most of the information learned in required classes that a student is not interested in goes in one ear and out the other. This leaves us all broadened by the ability to take multiple choice tests.

We need a system in which people learn what they want to learn and then use it. That shouldn't leave anyone with fewer opportunities for education. I know plenty of people who loved their fine arts elective and took it happily, or people who wanted to learn a little philosophy or extra sciences or languages so they tried that. No one should be denied the option of attending college if they truly want to come here and learn. Neither should people who neither want nor need this experience be forced into it because they want more out of life than minimum wage.

Vocation has become a dirty word, and vocational schools are a joke, but in truth a vocation is the urge to have a certain job. To have a vocation is to want to be a journalist, a photographer, a restaurant manager, a salesman or, in fact, to want to be anything. The key word is want. The place to learn how to practice such a vocation is the place where you can get experience doing what you want to do. It's a place where you learn what you need and then you try it out. You can call it an apprenticeship, an internship, a vocational school or whatever you want, but for some jobs, it is all that is necessary. If that is the kind of education a person wants, that is all they should be required to have to get a job. A real vocational school or degrees that have fewer requirements should also be options.

We, as a society, need to put the burden of education back on our high schools. There is no reason a high school graduate should not be prepared to enter many fields. If the only reason for the years spent in high school and college is to fill the time until an individual is mature enough to enter the workplace, we should admit that — and then we should consider the many great men and women in history who accomplished so much with only a high school education. I believe the problem is not in the students, but in the schools. There was a day when a high school education included Latin, logic, geography and the kind of mathematics that involves doing fairly complicated equations — in your head. That was an education that taught you to think, and one that prepared you for work and for life in a way we don't see today. To get that now, you have to go to college, an option that simply isn't available to many people.

I've heard people claim that young people today grow up too fast, that we are "older" than people used to be at the same age. If that's so, then why aren't we given credit for it? Our high school education should include everything I mentioned, plus computers, higher math, languages, business classes. It should prepare us for something besides college. Why aren't we being given opportunities for education equal to those our grandparents and great-grandparents had? We deserve that and more.

■ The Texaco Metropolitan Opera Broadcast may be heard Saturday at 12:30 p.m. on KANU-FM 91.5 and KHCD-FM 89.5. This week is the 50th Anniversary Celebration.

In place of an opera, artists will be performing arias and duets from some of the operas heard in broadcasts over the past half-century.

These performances include Barbara Daniels, Mariella Devia, Marilyn Home, Tatiana Troyanos, Samuel Ramey and the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra and Chorus.

The conductors will be Placido Domingo, Charles Dutoit, Thomas Fulton, James Levine, Julius Rudel and Nello Santi.

The first intermission will feature "A Singers Roundtable" with host Richard Mohr and panelists Marilyn Home, Regina Resnik and Robert Merrill.

During the second intermission Edward Downes, who for thirty-two years has been the quizmaster for Texaco's Opera quiz, will recall 50 years of Texaco-Metropolitan Opera broadcasts.

■ The opera for March 17 starts at 12:30 p.m. and is Puccini's "Manon Lescaut" featuring Nello Santi conducting, with Mirella Freni (Manon Lescaut), Peter Dvorsky (Des Grieux), Brian Schexnayder (Lescaut), and Italo Tajo (Geronte).

■ The New York City Opera National Company will present the story of four impoverished Parisian artists in "La Boheme" at 8 p.m. today in McCain Auditorium. The performance will be subtitled: an English translation will be projected above the stage.

The story of "La Boheme" is about the lives of the poet, Rodolfo, and the seamstress, Mimì, who share a few moments of passion before death claims the sickly young woman. A contrast to this scene is the on-again, off-again romance of the painter, Marcello, and the fickle, flirtatious Musetta.

The opera's combination of humor and pathos, drama and lyricism, realism and romanticism, has been cited by critics as its most outstanding quality.

Tickets to the opera are on sale at the McCain Box Office. Prices range from $10 to $27.50.

Food-labeling system to change

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Health Secretary Louis Sullivan said Wednesday the government will propose a more informative food-labeling system to replace the "Tower of Babel" that shoppers now encounter.

The proposed changes would require disclosure of the fat, fiber and cholesterol content of nearly all packaged foods and require that they meet standardized definitions to be labeled "low fat" or "high fiber."

"The grocery store has become a Tower of Babel, and consumers need to be linguists, scientists and mind readers to understand the many labels they encounter," Sullivan told a food policy conference.

"Some food labels are hard to read and understand. Vital information is missing, and frankly some unfounded health claims are being made in the marketplace," he said.

"It's a real mess."

Sullivan said the Food and Drug Administration will propose a three-phase change in food-labeling regulations. Final regulations would be in place sometime in 1991, he said.

Once the proposals are printed in the Federal Register, the public is given time to comment on them. After that, the department can put the rules into effect.

Two bills pending in Congress, sponsored by Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif., and Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, would impose requirements similar to those Sullivan discussed.

Consumer groups praised the intent of the proposal, but criticized the FDA for moving too slowly to address a problem that has been building for years.

"We've been here before," said Ellen Haas, executive director of Public Voice for Food and Health Policy. "What consumers do not want is to continue in the nutritional minefield that is the supermarket with the messages they bombard us with every day."

Simmons rebounds from injuries

Wildcat forward recovers from kneecap breaks

By David Svoboda
Sports Reporter

For Lance Simmons, the end of five years of almost constant struggle is in sight.

Pardon the St. Louis native if that upsets him a bit.

The 6-foot-5 senior forward is readying himself for his final Big Eight Conference Postseason Tournament as a member of the Wildcat basketball team.

It's a tournament many — Simmons included — would have had trouble believing he'd play in just two short years ago.

Simmons, in April 1988, suffered a second broken kneecap. He had sustained his first prior to the 1987-88 campaign, and it had sidelined him for the entire season. It was a season in which the 'Cats qualified for the final eight of the NCAA tourney.

Watching his teammates perform in college basketball's biggest dance in March 1988 was painful for Simmons.

"I really felt like quitting after the second time I hurt my leg. I felt like I couldn't go on. But my family pushed me to take another shot, and I did."

— Lance Simmons
K-State forward

but he was just a few short weeks from an even greater physical and mental pain.

"I really felt like quitting after the second time I hurt my leg," Simmons said, recounting the events. "I felt like I couldn't go on. But my family pushed me to take another shot, and I did."

The time between the injury and Simmons' first action in the 1988-89 campaign — about 6½ months — was some of the most agonizing the husband and father of two ever spent.

There was work on the court, in the pool, on the track. Everywhere rehabilitation could take place, Simmons and head basketball trainer Steve Brace were.

Simmons gives Brace a great deal of the credit for his recovery.

"He pushed me every day and every workout," Simmons said. "He kept telling me that the second break was a freak accident, and that I could play again at 100 percent if I worked at it."

And work Simmons did. He saw limited playing time over the first portion of the 1988-89 season, but he gained his first start against Kansas in Lawrence, and responded with six points and 10 rebounds.

Simmons was back.

"When I first came back off the injury, I was hesitant to make that extra move, to explode when I jumped," he said. "I can do anything I want to off the leg, but it took a while to realize that."

Simmons drew the starting nod in each of the final 14 games last year, and has started eight contests this season.

His four starting berths at the beginning of the season and his four since the Oklahoma State game Feb. 20 sandwiched a year in which he saw his playing time drop drastically at the start of conference play.

But since the win against the Cowboys that propelled the team to a fourth-place conference finish, Simmons has been a mainstay. And he's provided enough physical intimidation and made enough amazing shots to have people around the Big Eight talking about him all but constantly.

His well-publicized forearm blow to the throat of O-State's Byron Houston as the two battled for position inside gained national publicity. It even led to the team being dubbed the "Bramlage Bullies" in some circles.

But it's his dazzling array of shots that has kept his teammates and those in the crowd at Wildcat games on the edge of their seats each time he has touched the ball.

Are his moves awkward? Is his shot ugly?

Teammate Steve Henson has said several times this season "that's just the way Lance shoots." Though Henson's comments were delivered with his tongue planted firmly in his cheek, they may not have been that far from the truth, Simmons said.

"Those type of shots are nothing that I practice," he said. "When I know I'm getting fouled, I just try to get the shot off. And when I have it inside, I want to score. It doesn't matter if it looks good."

Margaret Clark/Staff

Fifth-year senior Lance Simmons has endured the hardships of two knee injuries and limited playing time during his stay at K-State, earning respect for his hard work.

Chances are Simmons would have been a bit more conspicuous about the appearance of his shots if he were still playing for the man who recruited him out of Soldan High in 1985. That man was Jack Hartman, and Simmons was definitely aware of the aura that surrounded the coaching legend.

"Coming to K-State put me in a new atmosphere," said Simmons about the transition from the hustle and bustle of St. Louis to the laid-back nature of Manhattan. "And I was wondering about how tough it would be with Coach Hartman. When I was a freshman, I didn't want to make a mistake."

Hartman's surprise resignation gave Simmons a new coach for his sophomore season: Lon Kruger.

Kruger, Simmons said, was quick with an encouraging word from the outset. Not that Hartman didn't offer praise, it was just that the legend's pupil handed it out a bit more freely, Simmons said.

"I didn't feel near as much pressure when Coach Kruger got here as I did with Coach Hartman," Simmons remembered. "Coach Kruger has always just encouraged me to be the best I could be."

When Simmons arrived at K-State, he was hoping that the best would someday result in a scoring average in the teens and a rebounding mark around seven per contest.

The injuries — and a lack of confidence in his shot and limited playing time that resulted because of them — changed those priorities.

"When I came back, I didn't have as much confidence shooting the ball as I did before I got hurt," he said. "My goals now aren't individual. I want to help my team get as far as it possibly can in the (NCAA) tourney."

Gathers ignored doctors

By The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Doctors told Hank Gathers to quit playing basketball after he fainted during a game in December and he may have stopped taking heart medicine before his death Sunday, a newspaper reported Wednesday.

The high-scoring Loyola Marymount star also did not appear for his weekly treadmill test in the days before he died, the Los Angeles Times reported in Wednesday's editions, quoting a cardiologist it did not identify.

It didn't matter what tests or advice were given to Gathers because he was determined to play, the heart specialist said.

"He was told not to play, you're through as an athlete," the cardiologist said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

"We told Hank that if he wanted to live the best he shouldn't exercise. Hank Gathers was going to play basketball. It didn't matter what some doctor told him."

"He was known to have cardiac arrhythmia, no question about it," the doctor said. "But it was well-treated and well-controlled and it had been well tested every time. We don't know if Hank took his medicine the last week, in fact we're pretty sure that he didn't."

"And we know that he didn't show up for his testing, which is supposed to be done on a weekly basis. And we know this was the week he was out to show the NBA scouts that he was big stuff."

Gathers died Sunday after collapsing near midcourt in a West Coast Conference tournament game against Portland. He was pronounced dead at Daniel Freeman Marina Hospital about 90 minutes later.

Gathers had a pulse immediately after collapsing, according to Chip Schaefer, the head trainer at Loyola Marymount. His heart stopped beating after he was put on a stretcher and carried off the court.

"(Dr. Benjamin Schaeffer, the team physician) said 'let's move him somewhere where we can monitor and treat him.'"

The team doctor connected Gathers up to a defibrillator, a machine used to shock a failing heart into a normal rhythm.

The machine had been purchased after Gathers' first fainting incident on Dec. 9 in a game against Cal-Santa Barbara. Schaefer kept it courtside and carried it with him to all road games.

Gathers was aware of the courtside defibrillator, but "I was discreet about having it," Schaefer said. "I carried it everywhere we went, it was part of my luggage. Everywhere."

Schaefer said the decision to buy the machine was made by the school's medical and administration staff and that the device was intended to be available for any fans suffering heart trouble as well.

The New York Times, also citing a physician it did not identify, reported Wednesday that Gathers was diagnosed with a potentially fatal heart condition called cardiomyopathy, which features a thickening of heart muscles.

Arrhythmia is a condition where the heartbeat is irregular.

Missouri's Smith player of the year

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Doug Smith, who averaged almost 28 points during Missouri's stretch drive to the conference championship, has been selected Associated Press Big Eight player of the year.

Smith was a clear winner over teammate Anthony Peeler for the award. But the same media panel had a much tougher time deciding between Rick Calloway of Kansas and Jackie Jones of Oklahoma for Big Eight newcomer of the year.

By one vote, the award went to Jones, whose emergence helped boost the Sooners to No. 1 in the final regular season poll, the third Big Eight team to hold the distinction this year.

Smith, a 6-10 junior, goes into postseason play as one of the nation's hottest players. Overcoming an early tendency to foul, the Detroit native averaged 28 points and 14 rebounds in Missouri's last four conference games. On the night the Tigers clinched the title by beating K-State, he had a career-high 17 rebounds. His 44 points against Nebraska this year set a record for Missouri's Hearnes Center and fell just two points short of the school record.

"Doug Smith has just had a tremendous year," said Missouri Coach Norm Stewart. "He is an outstanding athlete and a great competitor. He's played at times this year with illness and with some injury. And he's great to work with. You couldn't ask for a better player or a better individual."

Smith, voted by fans to Missouri's all-decade team of the 1980s, finished the regular season averaging 19.4 points and nine rebounds while shooting .569 from the field and .723 from the free-throw line. He also has 60 assists, 43 steals and a team-high 26 blocked shots.

He is fifth on Missouri's career scoring chart with 1,423 points and 10th in rebounds with 718.

In addition, he has scored in double figures 17 straight games.

Smith drew 10½ votes for player of the year. Peeler, a 6-4 sophomore, was the mid-season favorite for player of the year and, like Smith, was a two-time winner of the Big Eight's player-of-the-week honor. But he ended the season in a perplexing shooting slump and got 4½ votes for player of the year votes. Kevin Pritchard of Kansas and Steve Henson of K-State got one vote each.

For newcomer honors, the AP panel gave three votes to K-State guard Jean Derouillere, 6½ to Calloway and 7½ to Jones.

The versatile Jones, another Detroit native, got off to a bit of a slow start while Coach Billy Tubbs smoothed out the rough spots on an almost entirely rebuilt team.

But he was a key factor in resounding victories over Kansas and Missouri, which were both ranked No. 1 at the time. Jones, 6-8, wound up the regular season averaging 14.1 points and 7.2 rebounds. The transfer from Barton County Community College was second in the league with 55 blocked shots.

Schools making 1st trip to NCAAs

By The Associated Press

The bad luck, the hard knocks, the gamble and the doubt. For South Florida, Towson State and Coppin State, it was finally worth it all. They're going to their first NCAA basketball tournament.

"This is history," South Florida coach Bobby Paschal said. "Regardless of how many other teams we get in and how far they get, this team will always be the first."

So, too, has it been for 225 other NCAA Division I schools. That's how many have been in the tournament since it began in 1939 and, at one time or another, each had to have been in its first one.

"All the hard knocks we took in the past paid off now," South Florida forward Fred Lewis said.

While the attention of fans across the country this weekend will be affixed to the big conference tournaments — the ACC's, SEC's and Big Easts — the conferences of little distinction were the spawning grounds of South Florida (20-10), Towson State (18-12) and Coppin State (26-6).

South Florida was the only school in the Sun Belt Conference which never had been to the tournament. Towson State comes out of the East Coast Conference, none of whose representatives has ever won a first-round game. Coppin State won the Mid-Eastern Atlantic Conference tournament and is the first school from Baltimore ever to go to the NCAA's.

The conference champion in each of those three leagues is awarded an automatic tournament berth by the NCAA. The 64-team field, which includes 34 at-large berths, will be announced Sunday. Wednesday night, Wisconsin-Green Bay and Northern Iowa played for the Mid-Continent Universities Conference, adding at least one more first-time team to the field.

"We got a bunch of players that no one else wanted, and we put together a team, and we've been traveling around the country for two years teaching people how to spell our name," said Coppin State coach Fang Mitchell.

"This should take care of that."

We're there. We're really there."

Maybe, but the amount of recognition these teams wind up with probably won't be much. What generally happens to the little newcomers is, once they're in, they're promptly out, but richer by $240,000.

"Without offending the rest of the league, I really think this is the most athletic team and may have the best chance to represent the league in the postseason tournament," Towson State coach Terry Truax said.

"Traditionally, the East Coast Conference champion has been one of the lower seeds. Of the 64 teams, we're probably 59th or so. We'll definitely draw one of the top eight seeds."

Grain facilities hard to locate

Feed Technology building houses flour mill, baking laboratory

By Clinton Wolf
Collegian Reporter

Many students can quickly locate the K-State Union or Anderson Hall, but if asked where the Feed Technology building is, the response might not come as fast.

"An awful lot of people walk right by it everyday, but they might not realize it," said Charles Deyoe, head of the grain science and industry department.

The building is located beside the east wing of Waters Hall and behind Shellenberger Hall, connecting the two.

Because Feed Technology is sandwiched between Shellenberger and Waters, it's difficult to realize it's a separate building, said Walter Eustace, professor of grain science and industry.

"It's almost hard to differentiate between the three," Eustace said. The building houses the department's pilot feed mill, he said. A pilot mill is a full-size mill that is used for training and research purposes.

Eustace said many students are unaware the facilities exist.

"Students don't know we have a feed mill, or a flour mill or a baking laboratory, except for during the All-University Open House. Then they come in, get their free doughnut and then forget about it," he said.

Deyoe said the mill is equipped with grinding, mixing and receiving equipment used in the feed industry.

"It's used in undergraduate training to teach students how feed is manufactured," he said.

Eustace said the feed mill is important because it allows students to actually see how feed is manufactured.

"I don't know of any other university that has a feed mill for research," he said.

The feed mill has been used to make exotic bird feed for the San Diego Zoo, as well as make feeds for various departments on campus, Eustace said. The feed mills may also be used to supply any special rations needed for cattle in research projects.

A drafting room, two research and analysis labs, and an extrusion lab are also located in Feed Technology, he said. Waters Hall houses part of the feed technology facility.

Deyoe said because the building is difficult to locate the first time, most first-time visitors are instructed to come to Shellenberger and are guided from there.

The construction and equipping of Feed Technology was a result of close interaction with the feed industry and feed equipment suppliers through the years, he said.

The building was constructed after the Midwest Feed Association, an organization of feed millers, expressed an interest in starting a curriculum in feed technology at the University, Deyoe said. They offered to equip a feed milling laboratory if the University would provide a building for it. An agreement was reached, and over 275 firms contributed cash, equipment and services to equip the facility.

Feed Technology was dedicated as an addition to the east wing of Waters Hall, called East Waters Hall, in November 1955, he said. At that time, the pilot grain mill was located in East Waters, and the University had a well-established curriculum in milling.

Shellenberger was constructed after a fire gutted East Waters in 1957, Deyoe said. A fire investigation committee appointed by the governor recommended that the pilot flour mill not be located in Waters again. Shellenberger was then built adjoining Feed Technology to house the displaced mill.

Co-sponsored series focuses on sexuality

By Tammy Breitenbach
Collegian Reporter

Although nearly everyone is self-conscious of his or her body, most people look better than they think they do, according to a video presentation and discussion Wednesday.

The presentation was part of the Brown Bag Learning Series, a new program offered by U-Learn and co-sponsored by Lafene Student Health Center.

The series this semester deals with sexual issues and features professionals speaking on such topics as incest, acquaintance rape, body image and AIDS, said Kenyon Madden, director of U-Learn.

The series focuses on sexuality issues because that seems to be what most people want to know about, Madden said. Five more sessions about sexual issues will be offered this semester.

"We receive a lot of sexuality phone calls and information requests concerning sexuality," Madden said. "So we figured sex sells, and that it would be the best place to start with a series."

Cindy Burke, health educator at Lafene, said cases of eating disorders at Lafene have increased rapidly in the past few years.

"Something that has been maybe a monthly telephone call requesting information has almost turned into a daily call," Burke said. "They are estimating that 25 percent of individuals could be bothered with eating disorders, which contributes right back to the body image issue. We are dealing with a large population on this campus."

Steroid abuse is becoming more common in people who place such a high priority on body image because steroids are easy to get and provide results quickly, said Barbara Lewis, a nurse at Lafene.

"I think that definitely the college-age group does not think about the side effects of its behavior," Lewis said. "If you were starting to use steroids in your teens and through college, chances are that unless you personally know someone who has ended up ill because of it, you can still make excuses because it is such a quick fix."

Lewis said she has seen the same pattern with anorexics.

"The anorexic is going to continue until she really gets the consequences slapped in her face, like going to a place where people are in bed, hooked to IVs," she said. "From the anorexics I've seen that have been successful recovering, they all say that it took that kind of situation to bring them around."

Faculty offspring search for college

By Monica Marcotte
Collegian Reporter

Choosing a college to attend can be difficult, and if one's parent is a professor at K-State, the choices are not any easier to make.

David Flinchbaugh, junior in business management, said his father's only concern was that he did go to college. David's father is Barry Flinchbaugh, professor of agricultural economics.

"It was pretty much set down in law that I would go to college, no matter where it was," David Flinchbaugh said.

Rob Feyerharm, junior at Manhattan High School, is in the process of looking into different colleges. Rob is the son of William Feyerharm, associate dean of arts and sciences, and Ann Feyerharm, associate professor of environmental design.

Marti Marsh, junior at MHS, said she started thinking about colleges right after her older brother left for college four years ago. She is the daughter of Harry Marsh, professor of journalism and mass communications.

Rob Feyerharm and Marti Marsh, who have lived in Manhattan since they were in grade school, said they would like to leave Manhattan. Getting away from home is part of going to college, they said.

The three students said they briefly considered attending the University of Kansas.

"My dad does not have a very high opinion of KU at all," Flinchbaugh said. "He had hoped that I would pick K-State."

"We were not pleased with what KU had to offer Rob," said William Feyerharm. "Rob is interested in Colorado University at the moment."

David Flinchbaugh said he decided to stay in Manhattan and attend K-State for personal reasons. One reason was his girlfriend, who is now his wife.

Marti Marsh said her primary concern was to obtain an athletic scholarship on her track ability. She has competed in track and cross country at MHS. She said she is also hoping for an academic scholarship based on her 3.7 grade point average.

A strong interest in science is influencing Rob Feyerharm's college choice.

"I'm interested in astronomy, and I would like to find a college with a strong arts and sciences department," he said.

The students said their parents went out of the way not to make them feel pressured to attend K-State. "My parents have never pressured me to make any choices about what I wanted to do," Rob Feyerharm said. "I realize that there is not a lot of money in astronomy, but my father has never tried to persuade me otherwise. In fact, I'll probably end up getting a teaching degree in order to make money."

"Rob is very independent-minded, and I knew the decision would be one he would make on his own," William Feyerharm said.

Attending Baylor University in Texas has been a family tradition in the Marsh household. Both of Marti Marsh's parents graduated from Baylor, and an older brother is currently a junior in political science there.

"I've always said for as long as I can remember that I was definitely not going to go to Baylor," Marti Marsh said. "But now I'm actually considering it. They have a good pre-med program."

Marti Marsh's change of heart is partially because she wants to go into physical therapy, and a close friend, who also runs track, was just offered a scholarship there.

College tuition costs did not seem to be a major concern for either students or parents.

"But if Marti decided she wanted to go to Harvard University, then yes, I guess I probably would have to step in," Harry Marsh said.

education a big goal and work hard to be successful at what they do."

Demographic data shows that in the next 10 to 20 years, a majority of the work force is going to be minority and female, Dempsey said.

"I've certainly been afforded a great number of opportunities because I'm black," he said. "But I think once I got into the positions that have been afforded to me, I was able to show that I deserve to be there, that I am just as good as anyone else who might have been there."

"I don't look at being black as being a negative, I see it as a door. As long as I walk through and do what I need to do, then it will be a positive thing for me throughout my career."

Goals for Dempsey include graduate school in the next five to 10 years after obtaining more work experience. He plans to start his own company after receiving his master's degree.

"I'm really interested in management," Dempsey said. "I think that is where my skills lie, and as soon as I am qualified and know what I need to know, then I want to be a manager."

Dempsey is still trying to identify the type of company he will plan, but getting out on his own is a goal.

"My ideal job is one where I'll be involved soon with a lot of people and be able to lead in capital development projects," he said.

Dempsey credits much of his success to the engineering program.

Traveling for NSBE and various job interviews forces Dempsey to miss many of his classes.

"I have to use the weekends a lot to study," he said. "I don't sleep nearly as much as I would like to, and I have to be very focused in terms of what I have to get done and what can wait."

That hard work and dedication have also contributed greatly to Dempsey's college career.

"Engineering is tough, but not because the subject matter is impossible," Dempsey said. "It is tough because it requires discipline and a lot of time."

Rathbone said one of Dempsey's strong points is that he always follows through with what he sets out to do.

"He accepts responsibility and does a great job with it," Rathbone said. "I think Ray, most of all, is a complete individual."

Dempsey said any student can succeed in college and in engineering courses if they apply themselves.

"Get all the support available," Dempsey said. "Nobody can do it by themselves and don't give up."

"It's too easy to quit. I know, I was there."

boots and stomped on his head as hard as he could.

"There were also bruises on the neck and I asked what caused those," he said. "He said he kicked him there too, as hard as he could."

Trobaugh said Moss admitted that he was drunk at the time of the incident.

The third witness called by the prosecution was Detective Alan Rinkner, who investigated the crime scene and took photographs and attended the autopsy.

Public Defender Ken Smith said during closing arguments that he believed the prosecution did not have enough evidence for second degree murder. He said the evidence warranted a lesser charge of manslaughter or involuntary manslaughter.

After a 20-minute recess, Judge Miller said he reviewed the evidence, including the pictures and the autopsy report, and that the defendant showed malice in his actions. Sufficient evidence existed to try Moss on a second degree murder charge, he said.

An arraignment will be at 10:30 a.m., March 19, when Moss will enter his pleas on the murder charge and a misdemeanor robbery charge.

Simmons

I want to help us get farther than the team did in 1988."

If Simmons is to contribute over the tournament stretch run, he said it would be through continued strong defensive play and an increased proficiency in shooting.

"I'm proud of my defense," he said. "I always want to hold guys bigger than I am to points fewer than their average."

"And I want to begin hitting my outside shot — to have more confidence in it. I have a decent shot, it's just that I'm not real comfortable shooting right now."

If Simmons can put the package together, and help the 'Cats to successes in the Big Eight tournament and possibly the NCAA's, he'll leave an additional legacy.

But, for now, Simmons wants to be remembered in years to come as the hard worker he believes he's demonstrated he is.

"I want to be thought of as someone who played 100 percent every time he went out on the court," he said. "Someone who played hard every second of the game."

Those games are now dwindling down for Simmons, but the memories are great. That's what makes the end painful. But, he added a postscript to his eulogy.

"I also, now, want to be remembered as someone who had some good moves and made some pretty funny-looking shots."

A smile for himself following several years of painful grimaces is all Simmons wants now. And it's all he hopes to hand out.

Bus services cut in half due to strike

By David Frese
Collegian Reporter

Despite a strike by Greyhound union workers, the 9:55 p.m. west-bound Greyhound bus arrived at the Greyhound station on McCall Road in Manhattan on schedule.

However, seven prospective passengers waiting at the station breathed heavy disappointment and irritation when they realized it was not the eastbound bus they had been expecting. It was supposed to have arrived an hour before.

"Damn," said an unidentified passenger, who was headed for Lawrence. He hadn't yet purchased his ticket.

"I came here to the station this afternoon and they weren't open," he said. "Somebody said I could buy a ticket from the driver... but I don't know, man."

The driver himself had little time to talk about striking Greyhound drivers and chuckled when pressed on the matter.

"Nope," he said as he closed the bus door. "I got nothin' to say." The driver declined to be identified.

Some 6,300 bus drivers and 3,000 maintenance and office workers walked out of talks last Friday morning after Greyhound Lines, Inc., and the Amalgamated Council of Greyhound Local Unions failed to reach an agreement in talks concerning a new three-year contract.

The company has been running at reduced levels using 700 replacement drivers plus union members who crossed picket lines to continue operation of the bus line, according to the Associated Press. While the company claims 350 union drivers are at work the union says only 95 returned.

Glenn Miller, manager of the Manhattan Greyhound station, said the effects of the strike on his services have been minimal, but the number of buses passing through Manhattan have been reduced by half.

"We're able to offer limited services," Miller said. "We have two buses headed east each day and we have two buses headed west each day."

Picketers have walked lines in front of bus stations across the country, but Miller said that has not been the case in Manhattan.

"We're still here," he said. "When people see Greyhound on strike, they automatically assume that includes us also. Our hours are shortened, but we're still here."

Miller said he has done his best to

AIDS-fighting method found

'Genetic ambush' effective against viruses in test tubes

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Researchers working with live human cells in test tubes have developed a genetic ambush of the AIDS virus and say the experimental technique could combat other types of viruses.

Dr. John J. Rossi, a researcher at the Bechman Research Institute of the City of Hope in Duarte, Calif., said Thursday that his laboratory has made a synthetic ribozyme that is able to genetically cripple the AIDS virus and prevent it from reproducing in test tube experiments.

The ribozyme, Rossie said, "is inside the cell and its waiting there like a soldier waiting for the enemy to come."

Although the technique is promising, he said it is still far from being available for treating patients.

Rossi, in a telephone interview, said his team developed an artificial gene that secreted the ribozyme and then put the gene into living human cells in test tubes. When these human cells were exposed to the AIDS virus, the ribozyme blocked the virus from reproducing.

The ribozyme works like "molecular scissors," that slice the ribonucleic acid of the AIDS virus, thus blocking the virus from making copies of itself.

Ribonucleic acid, or RNA, is used by the virus to force cells to make more virus. By cutting the RNA, Rossi said, the virus is permanently crippled.

The ribozyme itself is a copy of an RNA that other scientists found in a plant virus. Those researchers discovered that a small part of the plant virus RNA acted like an enzyme and was capable of selectively cutting any part of the genetic pattern in a target virus.

The term ribozyme refers to an RNA that acts as an enzyme by permitting a reaction to occur within a cell.

Rossi said his team copied the molecular structure of the plant RNA and then developed a synthetic gene that manufactured this ribozyme inside the human cells in a laboratory.

A major advantage of the ribozyme, he said, is that after it attacks and cuts the RNA in one virus, the molecule releases itself and can then attack other virus particles.

"It can do it again and again and again," Rossi said. "It is like one soldier cutting down 10 or more of the enemy."

The ribozyme can be designed to attack any part of the viral RNA and leave other portions alone. Rossi said he believes the ribozyme could also be used to combat virtually any kind of virus, including those that cause colds and flu.

"It could be used to treat any virus at all because they all use RNA," he said. "By destroying the RNA, you can inactivate the viral function."

Rossi said the use of ribozyme to treat viruses has still not been proven in animals or in humans and that much more work will have to be done before the technique could be used clinically.

He said two other laboratories now plan to test his ribozyme in combatting viruses in laboratory animals.

Even if it proves effective in animals, Rossi said the technique could not be used against AIDS until some way is found to introduce the ribozyme gene clinically into humans, a process that could take years to develop.

Some method, he said, will have to be found to assure that the ribozyme gene goes directly to the proper place within the target cells. He said there are several theoretically possible ways of doing this, but none are ready for tests.

"We don't have any scientific proof yet that a genetically engineered cell in a living animal will do anything," said Rossi, but in test tube experiments the technique appears to be "powerful."

In addition to Rossi, scientists that took part in the study were Nava Sarver of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases, a part of the National Institute of Health; Pairoj S. Chang of Loma Linda University, and four others from the City of Hope Medical Center.

A report on the study is to be published Friday in Science, the journal of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Team lands grant to finish research

By Steve Franzen
Staff Reporter

A K-State research team received a $20,000 grant in August to finish developing guidelines for human sexuality and AIDS education in Kansas schools.

"The aim is to provide a resource tool for state school districts that will help them in their program development," said Jackie Laue, project coordinator.

The Human Sexuality and AIDS Education Addendum is a set of nine components that outline ways schools can meet state guidelines in the education of sexuality.

The addendum is in its third year and has four of the nine components completed. The addendum grant is funded with federal money by the State Department of Education. The overall program, which began in 1987, will cost about $50,000, said Barbara Havlicek, one of three project directors.

The program received $10,000 and $20,000 in its first two years. Laue said the addendum is to be completed by the end of June. As each component is finished, it is sent to each of the 304 Kansas school districts.

"We have good feedback from the first four components we have sent out to school districts," Havlicek said.

The four completed components are sexuality, personal relationships, sexual responsibility and parenthood education. These components target grades seven through 12.

The five remaining components are self-esteem, communication skills, emotional development, physical development and growth, and abuse and violence.

The addendum was created in relation to a 1988 State Department of Education mandate requiring all accredited schools in Kansas to implement a human sexuality and AIDS program. The program is required in both elementary and secondary levels.

Kansas schools are not required to use the addendum, but are required to have a human sexuality and AIDS instruction program on file.

The addendum is created by an advisory committee and a task force, Laue said. The 22-member task force consists of school nurses, counselors, administrators, parents, community leaders and teachers from different disciplines. The task force creates the ideas, rationale, key concepts and skills for the addendum.

Laue said the advisory committee takes the ideas and edits them into the finished components. Each group will meet three times this year. As project coordinator, Laue works between both groups.

Man shoots four in spree

Police discover goose, bomb in suspect's car upon arrest

By The Associated Press

WICHITA — A man with a "documented history of violence" crisscrossed east Wichita, shooting people at random Thursday. One person was critically wounded.

Wichita Police Department Lt. Mike McKenna said the 50-year-old man who was arrested has been the subject of several reports to police, the latest just days before Thursday's string of shootings. McKenna said the man was sent to a local hospital for a mental evaluation.

The toll could have been much worse if the outbreak had been just 90 minutes later as morning rush traffic built, police said.

The most seriously injured of the shooting victims, William F. Brown, 41, Newton, was in extremely critical condition at HCA Wesley Medical Center. An employee of The Wichita Eagle, he was stocking a coin-operated newspaper box outside a restaurant when he was shot once in the back of the head. McKenna said Brown was on life-support equipment.

One other victim was hospitalized. Allen T. Cox, 54, of Kechi, was in good condition. He suffered a bullet wound to the jaw that also cost him several teeth.

Four others were treated and released.

One man, Arthur J. Belcher, 50, Wichita, was treated by ambulance attendants for scratches atop his head after he was fired at four times. Another, Kyle D. Aune, 19, Maryville, Mo., refused treatment for scratches on the back of his neck and on his scalp.

McKenna said most of the victims were cut by flying glass and didn't suffer bullet wounds.

He said there were at least 10 separate shooting incidents in a little more than an hour, some of them nearly 10 miles apart.

The suspect was arrested after stopping at an east Wichita fast-food restaurant that he discovered wasn't open yet.

Police who had been patrolling the area seeking his vehicle closed in and surrounded the red station wagon as the suspect drove away from the restaurant.

Officers recovered a revolver from the car. McKenna said the suspect told police that a package on the front seat was a bomb. Police and experts from the federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms decided the bundle looked like it could be an explosive device.

A major north-south street was closed more than three hours and nearby businesses were evacuated as the bomb squad removed the package for detonation in a rural area. Morning rush hour traffic was detoured.

McKenna said detonation confirmed the bundle was some sort of incendiary device.

Police found the fresh carcass of a goose in the back seat of the suspect's car.

"Each and every one of these shootings had no apparent motive," McKenna said.

He said the only common denominators were the fact all of the victims were white males and they were going about their normal early morning routines.

Cox, the second most seriously injured victim, was driving in his van when he was fired on. An unidentified jogger went to his aid.

"A van locked up its brakes and skidded along the curb. By the time I got down to him, the man was out asking me to call for help. He'd been shot," the jogger said.

The newspaper delivery man was shot outside Jimmie's Diner.

A restaurant employee said he had moved patrons away from windows because of a phone call warning of the random shootings. He said a jogger knocked on the restaurant's door and said someone outside was wounded.

"It just shocked us because we didn't hear a thing," the employee said.

Investigators said the shooting incidents apparently started about 4:30 a.m. near the junction of Interstate 135 and U.S. 54 just southeast of downtown Wichita. The Kansas Highway Patrol reported the motorist shot at there, Lee Bunch, 33, Winfield, wasn't injured.

The rest of the shootings occurred along the interstate and on eastside city streets.

Wendell J. Newell, 56, Newton, drove himself more than five miles to St. Francis Regional Medical Center after suffering facial wounds as he drove along the interstate north of Wichita. He was treated and released. A hospital spokeswoman said he suffered a severe lip cut that will require plastic surgery.

Lynn B. Decker, 32, Wichita, suffered an eyebrow cut from flying glass and was treated and released at St. Joseph Medical Center.

William King, 24, and Russell Maddux, 26, both of Wichita, were treated and released at HCA Wesley Medical Center.

Edward G. Palmer, 31, Granby, Mo., was fired at several times, but wasn't injured.

The suspect is a Boeing Military Airplanes production employee, a company spokesman confirmed.

Parliament to honor border

BONN, West Germany (AP) — Parliament agreed Thursday that a united Germany should honor Poland's western border, and Chancellor Helmut Kohl tried to fend off charges that he heightened international fears about unification.

A lawmaker from the opposition Social Democrats, Juergen Schmude, said during a raucous debate that Kohl's handling of the border issue amounted to "political arson in the European house."

Parliament passed a resolution that said the two Germanys should adopt twin declarations that "the Polish people are assured their right to live in secure borders will not be questioned by us Germans through territorial claims either now or in the future."

It says the future government of a united Germany should sign a border treaty on the basis of those declarations.

Poland's deputy prime minister, Leszek Balerowicz, told a news conference in Gdansk, Poland, that Bonn's declaration was progress, but that Poland still should attend talks on German unification.

President calls for holy war

DAMASCUS, Syria (AP) — President Hafez Assad on Thursday bitterly decried the changes sweeping Eastern Europe as a boon to Israel and called for a holy war "as long as time" against the Jewish state.

The Syrian leader also fiercely denounced the recent wave of Soviet Jewish emigration to Israel in his first public comment on the matter, saying migrating Jews would force Palestinians from their homeland.

"Let us now perceive that Israel was the first beneficiary, among all nations of the world, of the international changes that have taken place," Assad told a youth rally marking his socialist Baath party's 27th anniversary in power.

The 6,500 youths and party activists gathered in a basketball arena interrupted the president 61 times with applause or chanting during his 95-minute speech.

Assad complained that in socialist countries once resolutely opposed to Israel, "Zionists are now active everywhere."

Senate rejects clean air bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate, in its first major vote on a compromise clean air bill, rejected a proposal to tighten controls on toxic air pollution Thursday night after Senate leaders said it threatened an agreement with the White House.

The vote to kill the amendment was 65-33.

The amendment, one of a string expected to be brought to the floor aimed at tougher controls on air pollution, would have required additional controls on toxic emissions from automobiles.

The vote was seen as an indicator on the strength of support for a compromise worked out by Senate leaders and the Bush administration to ease Senate approval for the first toughening of federal air pollution controls in 13 years.

Sen. Frank Lautenberg, D-N.J., called his amendment necessary to protect citizens from cancer-causing chemicals, noting more than half of such chemical releases come from automobiles, trucks and buses.

But the measure, opposed by the Bush administration because of its reported $1.5 billion price tag, was described by Sen. Max Baucus, D-Mont., as a "deal breaker" — meaning its passage would cause a compromise agreement with the Bush administration on clean air to fall apart.

Bush answers prank call

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush was tricked into taking a call from a man he thought was Iranian President Hashemi Rafsanjani to talk about the hostages but the caller turned out to be an impostor, the White House confirmed Thursday.

The call was first reported by CBS News.

Confirming the network's account, White House spokesman Steve Hart said a call first came to a staff member of the National Security Council "from a man who claimed to be an Iranian official" about a month ago.

The caller said the Iranian president wanted to speak to Bush, and "various methods were used to check" the legitimacy of the call, Hart said.

Since the president "has stated he would talk to anybody if it would help free the hostages," Bush agreed to take the call.

"He did take the call. It turned out to be a hoax," Hart said.

Hart declined to answer further questions about the affair, such as how the hoax was discovered or what Bush said to the caller. "I can't go into specifics. I am unable to offer you any more on this," Hart said.

But Hart said Bush had not changed his policy of being ready to talk with anyone on behalf of the hostages.

Eight Americans and 10 citizens of other western countries have been held in Iran, some as long as five years, by groups believed to be susceptible to Iranian influence.

Escapee switches ID cards

WICHITA (AP) — A man convicted of kidnapping and torturing a teen-ager has slipped out of the Sedgwick County Jail after switching identification cards with another inmate.

Cedric Scott, 21, was being held in lieu of $100,000 bail. He was scheduled for trial in Sedgwick County District Court Monday on a drug possession charge.

Last week, Scott was convicted of kidnapping, aggravated assault and aggravated battery in the abduction and torture of a 14-year-old who was burned with a clothes iron and beaten. Police said the incident was drug related.

Maj. Lyman Reese of the Sedgwick County Sheriff's office, said Scott switched identification cards with an inmate he resembles. That prisoner was scheduled to be released. Scott took his place and was processed out of the jail Tuesday afternoon, Reese said.

Authorities discovered the mistake Wednesday afternoon, nearly 24 hours later.

Man receives 6 life sentences

EMPORIA (AP) — A man convicted of killing one person and wounding others when he fired into a church during Sunday services was sentenced to life in prison Thursday.

Cheun-Phon Ji was also given six consecutive sentences of 10 years to life on charges of attempted murder.

Ji was convicted in the slaying of Thomas DeWeese and of the attempted murder counts for firing shots into the Calvary Baptist Church congregation March 6, 1988.

"The judge was prejudicial all along and we are not surprised by the sentence," an angry Ji said after the hearing.

The sentence was handed down by Judge James Smith after he heard motions from Ji's attorney, Courtland Berry, to set aside the verdict, to hear a new trial and that a hearing should be held to Ji's competency.

"His crime was not heinous, atrocious and cruel," Berry said. "It was common, ordinary murder. This was a trial short on justice and long on error committed by the principal participants in this court."

Commissioners discuss landfill for 3 counties

By Bryan Ackley
Science Reporter

Riley, Geary and Dickinson county commissioners met with area residents Thursday night in Junction City to discuss the progress being made in the search for a new regional landfill site.

Speaking to a crowd of about 70 local residents, Riley County Commissioner Dick Jepsen outlined a three-county plan to share the cost of operating a new landfill.

"We don't have a lot of information about this, but we want to keep you (residents) as involved with this as possible," he said.

Representatives of the counties have reached a tentative compact agreement, which specifies how they will split the operating cost among themselves, Jepsen said.

The amount each county pays will be determined by the size of its population, he said.

Because Riley County's population accounts for about 65 percent of the combined population of the three counties, Riley County will pay for 65 percent of the operating cost, Jepsen said.

Geary County will pay 26 percent and Morris County will pay the remaining 9 percent, he said.

Riley County Engineer Dan Harden, who was also at the meeting, addressed some of the residents' other concerns about other proposed sites being considered for the landfill.

Harden said only three areas remain under consideration for the new landfill site:

■ An area of land near Walker Quarry in Dickinson County.

■ An area of land owned by the military near the northeast corner of Fort Riley.

■ An area of land south of Manhattan and the Kansas River near McDowell Creek.

Although site investigations are still incomplete, the Walker Quarry site has been rated the highest, Harden said.

The Fort Riley site probably ranks last of the three because of difficulty.

Veterinary officials warned after killing

By Ingrid Erickson
Collegian Reporter

One month after a veterinary school dean was murdered in Knoxville, Tenn., K-State's veterinary college dean said he is not taking any major precautions.

Knoxville police said they received claims from the animal rights groups People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals and the Animal Liberation Front for responsibility for the killing. Rumors also spread that the murders would continue at a rate of one dean per month.

"I'm not as nervous today as I was when the report came out," said Michael Lorenz, dean of the K-State College of Veterinary Medicine. "Of course, people will become more nervous if someone else is killed."

Detective Mike Upchurch, of the Knoxville Police Department, said investigators do not believe the animal rights groups were involved.

"At this point we are still checking leads and evidence," Upchurch said.

"However, there is no evidence that points to any involvement with any clandestine groups or organizations."

Warnings were issued to many southeastern universities by Knoxville police following the Feb. 8 ambush and murder of Hyram Kitchen, dean of Veterinary Medicine at the University of Tennessee. Lorenz said he was contacted by the University of Illinois after they had been contacted by the University of South Carolina.

Lorenz said although he is aware of the warnings made by police to veterinary deans in the Southeast, he has not been contacted by any law enforcement or protection agencies.

He said he has taken some minor precautions since the announcement of the warning, including "being more aware of who is calling and who I am talking to."

Lorenz said the notes could be hoaxes and that Kitchen could have been murdered for a totally different

Transportation plan unveiled

Bush proposal would pass cost to travelers, cities, states

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Bush announced a national transportation policy Thursday that would cost travelers more and increase local governments' share in meeting air, land and sea travel needs into the next century.

Just as the Model T and the Wright brothers' plane "prepared the way for today's millions of cars and thousands of passenger jets, so it is now our turn to invest in America's future," Bush said in unveiling the policy with Transportation Secretary Samuel Skinner.

Bush said it would help keep America "the world leader in transportation."

The 129-page plan, "Moving America Into The 21st Century," calls for more toll roads, local gas taxes, user fees, private investments, competition, deregulation, research into futuristic systems and openness to foreign air carriers as well as increased attention to safety and protection of the environment.

The policy was hailed as an important step by some industry groups, but most expressed some disappointment, and Democratic members of Congress were critical.

Aviation and ground transportation groups opposed "user fees" and other taxes that Skinner acknowledged would require travelers to pay more. The American Public Transit Association said the policy was "long on advice and short on help" from the federal government.

Rep. Norman Mineta, D-Calif., chairman of the House surface transportation subcommittee, called it "a good start" but said shifting programs to the state and local level without financial resources "would be the shift and the shaft."

Bush did not immediately field questions on the proposal, leaving Skinner to face news media.

The secretary, who had the policy drawn up after holding 117 hearings across the country, justified proposals for increases in local gasoline taxes and fees by saying polls show that people are willing to pay if they get improvements.

Skinner denied the policy represents a shift of responsibility for transportation away from the federal government, saying it was an attempt to "strike a balance" after years in which the federal government has assumed "almost all of the responsibility" for funding some transportation.

New committee structure ludicrous

When Joseph Heller, the author of "Catch-22," spoke at a Convocation lecture at K-State a number of years ago, one of the passages he read to the audience was from his novel "Good as Gold." The passage followed the conversation between a university student and his adviser as the adviser attempted to explain the confusing organization of the college catalog. Nothing was where it was supposed to be, archeology had been moved to history, history to anthropology and anthropology to English, or something like that. The adviser took glee in the seeming disorganization of the catalogue and attempted to explain the reasons behind it.

I thought I was reading fiction at the time. Then I started paying attention to the Kansas Legislature.

Evidently the committee structure of the Kansas House was modified and someone forgot to tell us. The change became apparent, though, the day the House Transportation Committee entered the abortion debate by gutting a highway bill and turning it into a parental notification bill.

This left me asking a number of questions: If the Transportation Committee is responsible for abortion legislation, who's responsible for transportation legislation? Have other committees been changed? Is anyone in charge?

After considerable research, I think I have found the answer. And as a service to my readers, I would like to briefly explain the New Kansas House Committee Structure.

The new structure is based on the idea that we need to streamline big government, and that, because the work of most committees overlaps — abortion and transportation for example — it should be no trouble to alter, combine or eliminate committees to produce a more efficient system of government.

For example, under the new system, since most students ride buses to school, and those buses have to pass over highways and streets, any new transportation legislation will be handled by the Special Committee on School Finance.

Since financing of schools is no longer considered a responsibility of the state and is not on the legislature's list of priorities, as this session has proven, the former duties of the special committee will be eliminated.

Any other education-type legislation has been shifted to the Special Committee on Agriculture and Livestock, for obvious reasons.

In order to encourage economic growth in Kansas, as well as for the sake of refining the bureaucracy, the Energy & Natural Resources; Pensions, Investments, and Benefits; and the Economic Development committees have all been combined under the heading Labor and Industry Committee. Easier access to such resources by business will improve Kansas's economic climate for the better for someone.

The Public Health and Welfare Committee is now the Elections Committee, since elections are the only time anyone pays attention to such issues. The Elections Committee is now responsible for the duties of the Appropriations Committee and for establishing any sort of governmental organization needed.

The Governmental Organization Committee, once responsible for organizing government, will be abolished, as the organization is no longer a factor in Kansas government.

The Insurance Committee will be combined with the Taxation Committee and will be responsible for rural development, including promotion of agriculture and small businesses. Plus, if Kansas ever suffers another severe drought, it will be much easier for state officials to collect taxes on crop insurance. Plus with all the property tax problems of the last several months, anyone responsible for collecting taxes in this state should have easy access to insurance.

Are you getting how all this works yet?

The constant, phoenix-like reintroduction of two specific pieces of legislation on an annual basis has necessitated the creation of two new standing committees: the Closed, Selective, Qualified Admissions Committee, and the Death Penalty Committee. These committees will be established until such time as these bills are actually passed in Kansas, or until the legislators get sick of dealing with them, or until they take the hint that no one really wants either one of them.

The Judiciary Committee, as a result of the increased corruption evident in today's political climate, will now fulfill the duties of the Legislative Budget Committee, shortening the line of red tape legislators must go through to get their hands in the till. The Education Committee will take over as the Judiciary Committee, since all those little monsters are really interested in sex, drugs and rock and roll.

The duties of the Education Committee will be left to the parents, who should have kept an eye on, and taken part in the education of their children in the first place.

As you can see, this new structure guarantees an end to big government and makes the committee structure a much more efficient machine. However, if you're still confused about the new committee structure, or if you liked it the way it was in the good old days when a dead bill stayed dead and wasn't re-born under a new committee heading, then write your representatives and ask them what the deal is. Hopefully they'll have a clue.

Sound vacation advice: Have fun and don't die

Don't drink and drive.
Don't jump from balcony to balcony.

These are some of the slogans one hears at spring break time. The specific messages differ but they all have one meaning: Don't die.

And have fun.

Rain forest depletion must be reckoned with

Are we about to say good-bye to the late, great planet Earth?

The fragile rain forest disappears at a rate of 50 acres per minute, 24 hours a day, every day of the year.

If this environment disaster of epidemic proportions does not alarm you, it should. It is an ecological travesty unfolding before our eyes.

The world's rain forest system is a complex web of interdependencies where fish live on fruit and spiders are big enough to prey on birds. Several species of moths, beetles and algae live on the fur of sloth; and there are more species of uncataloged organisms than we have time to document, study and understand before they disappear forever.

The doom of the rain forest is due to an equally complex web of economics that perhaps world leaders have not taken the time to understand.

The governments of the United States, Japan and several European countries along with the World Bank are using the tax dollars of their respective countries to fund the destruction of rain forest worldwide.

Large scale development of rain forests have succeeded only in redistributing wealth upward, not outward where Third World nations need it.

The veracity of this sad saga lies in the misconceived Third-World schemes causing the deforestation.

The most destructive projects are excessive and poorly conceived road building, logging, agricultural clearing, mining, oversized hydro-electric dams and slash-and-burn destruction to support cattle ranching.

The slash-and-burn practice of ranchers is to cut down trees and burn the forest where it lies. Most of the nutrients are in the living organisms — the trees, not the topsoil. So when the forest is cut down and burned, there is a thin layer of ash in which one can grow crops for only a few years before the land becomes wasteland capable of supporting nothing.

This large-scale cutting and burning of the rain forest releases huge amounts of carbon dioxide in the atmosphere, contributing to global warming.

Coffee, sugar cane and cocoa all have their genetic roots in the rain forest. Fruits, latex rubber, managed timber harvest and pharmaceutical development can generate from 300 percent up to 600 percent more income than can cattle grazing or total timber cutting.

And, when the rain forest is managed, we have it forever.

We must demand that the government stop wasting our tax money to support and condone destruction of the world's rain forest.

The world cannot have long-term sustainable development without conserving global biological resources that include the world's rain forest.

Senators doing job

Editor,

I wish to clear up some apparent misconceptions regarding some of the happenings in student government over the last three or four weeks. It appears that Student Senate has been blamed for most of the undesirable events, when in fact it has been members of Senate who have been preserving the principles of democracy.

Many of the tumultuous occurrences in student government happened outside of the Senate meetings and involved Student Body President Todd Johnson and various officers of the Senate. The foremost incident was Johnson's decision to commandeer the Associated Students of Kansas account without Senate's knowledge and send up to six people on a so-called lobbying trip to Washington D.C. over spring break. When news of this endeavor leaked, another senator, the Senate chairman and I went to the Collegian in a successful effort to halt this unethical act.

Additionally, when Johnson set up a rec center task force without Senate's consent, Senate's executive committee appropriately sent the issue to a standing committee.

Furthermore, when President Johnson violated the SGA Constitution (which he is supposed to protect) by ignoring the prescribed appointment process, he was reprimanded by several senators. The event involving the full Senate was to send Johnson back to the drawing board when he used irrational judgment to select members of the Student Tribunal. This controversial action was warranted, but it made headlines primarily because President Johnson and I went overboard and orally machine-gunned each other during the ordeal.

As you would guess, many of the conflicts that arose from these occurrences dealt not merely with issues, but with ethics. It would have been a great injustice for senators to look the other way while events like these were going on. Fortunately, those of us in Senate have our priorities straight and did what we had to do.

The voters should feel assured that the vast majority of student senators are responsible, concerned public servants with respect for their constitution. The acerbic, elitist attitude portrayed in Senator David McIntyre's letter that appeared in a Collegian last week is far from typical in Senate. Moreover, this group of devoted individuals is probably the best Senate to hold office in years. Debate on issues has been thorough and senators have demonstrated the ability to think independently and arrive at conclusions in a rational manner. Senate won't tolerate covert activity, and it will always remember that its purpose is to formulate good public policy for the students of K-State. Overall, it's about time Student Senate is commended for the good job that it is doing.

Deny acceptance

Editor,

I would like to respond to Matt Narramore's retaliation at John Renfro's March 2 letter to the editor concerning gays and declining morals.

I personally support Renfro's views and disagree with Narramore's assumption that Renfro advocated mass murder of homosexuals. Renfro made no such advocations. The issue is intolerance. We have an intolerance for social deviants. Things like theft and rape are not tolerated because they violate the moral codes of society. In this way, homosexuals are social deviants as their behavior deviates from accepted moral standards. They have been established for reasons of social unity, and a specific group cannot expect to change these morals simply because they don't fit their ideals and preferences. Morals do not stretch to accommodate specific interests.

Homosexuals are not any less human because of their sexual choice, but it is essential that they understand no one owes them acceptance. I disagree with the gay community's expectation that the heterosexuals recognize gay lifestyle as a viable alternative. As a correlation, polygamy, having two or more wives, is also an alternative lifestyle but is against our nation's moral code and we do not support it. And Matt, like it or not, the country you live in has been founded on deeply-rooted religion. Many moral standards and laws we currently enforce have come from religious origins. As a member of the Christian faith, I know of no religion which condones homosexuality.

Our country has also been founded on the principles of freedom and choice. We are free to make decisions pertaining to our actions, beliefs, and preferences. However, we do not make our decisions based on the assumption that society will accept them. Social acceptance is one right we are not guaranteed.

Society is not responsible for accepting each and every social group that cries out for social acceptance. We must not and cannot stop gay lifestyles, however, for that would go against the very morals I spoke of earlier. We cannot, however, be expected to accept their actions or propagate homosexuality as a respectable alternative lifestyle.

Put faith in God

Editor,

Homosexuality has obviously become a big issue in the Collegian in the past month because it is such a controversial issue and attracts strong feelings from both sides. These strong feelings have caused people to voice their beliefs and opinions. I too have my feelings and opinions about this subject.

I agree that we are all individuals and have the freedom of choice in almost everything, including sexual preferences. I am also a Christian and believe in God. I believe that the Bible was written by God through men as the plan he wants for all of our lives. Yes, God loves everyone, including homosexuals, but he does expect us to obey him. According to the Bible, homosexuality is a sin. I am not judging homosexuals, God does not want us to judge one another — that is His job. He does want us to help one another. To me, that means to show others God's way and to explain why their way may be wrong. After both ways are shown, then that person can make his own choice. God loves man so much that He does not force him into anything. He gave man the choice to decide what he wants to do with his life.

You may ask, "Then what's the difference? If God loves me no matter what I do; then why are you preaching to me?" Because I care about others. It is your choice what you do while you're on this earth and it is also your choice where you spend eternity. I was not put here to judge you, and I won't. But God will. What you do with your life now will determine whether you spend forever in Heaven or in Hell. This may sound very dramatic to you and you may laugh at me, but think about it. Are you really willing to take the chance? Yes, we all have to decide, but let us not forget that there still is a right and wrong, time will not change that.

Now you may say, "I didn't choose to be homosexual, it's just the way I am." Well, if you believe there is a god, then you must believe there is a devil. What good would good be if there was nothing to oppose it? Could the devil be influencing you into doing or feeling something that God says is wrong? Please ask yourself that and ask God.

Movie's plot denied by governments

REVIEW

The film "The Hunt for Red October" proved to be everything the national critics have already said, and more.

With an exceptional cast headed by always-remarkable Sean Connery, the picture, based on the book by Tom Clancy, exploded into reality within the first moments. A preface introducing the action explained that the events to follow had been denied by both the United States and the Soviet Union as having never happened.

According to the preface, in 1984, a Soviet submarine containing enough nuclear firepower to annihilate the New England coastline, attempted to defect, threatening an attack on the United States if provoked.

Connery plays the Soviet captain who initiates the defection.

Relative newcomer Alec Baldwin, who has previously appeared in "Beetlejuice," was cast as the CIA analyst who brought an end to the dilemma by first identifying the sub and the intentions of its crew, and then contacting the captain and negotiating their freedom.

The identification of the submarine took up a substantial portion of the film. This emphasized the difficulty in locating vessels whose cruising technology exceeds that of any sonar equipment in use.

Specifically, the Red October contains a special underwater motor, nicknamed a caterpillar, which enables it to cruise at top speed almost entirely undetectable by other nearby vessels.

The film presents the usual hard-line, Soviet stereotypes. Several times, insights are given into the motivations of the defecting men.

One defector's dreams of life in Montana come to an abrupt end when he is shot during a skirmish as the sub surrenders to U.S. forces in exchange for asylum.

His final comments regarding the loss of this dream brought humanistic passion to an otherwise steel-cold stereotype of the Soviet.

The winning combination of Connery and the insightful characterizations clearly appealed to both the largely male audience present at the showing, as well as their dates.

"The Hunt for Red October" should prove to be a box office smash.

Endowment guidelines imposed

Writers must sign promissory letter before obtaining financial backing

By The Associated Press

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. — Grants are godsend for writers like Martha Collins, but she still had to think long and hard before accepting a $20,000 fellowship this year from the National Endowment for the Arts.

The financial freedom was tempting, but it came with a few strings attached: Collins and 96 other writers nationwide had to sign letters promising to comply with federal guidelines, including Congressional anti-obscenity and anti-drug restrictions.

"I signed because I can live with it, but I'm concerned by the tone ... concerned that things could get worse instead of better," said Collins, who also directs the writing program at the University of Massachusetts at Boston.

Many other artists are similarly troubled by the NEA guidelines that were imposed by Congress after the uproar last summer over exhibits of Robert Mapplethorpe's homoerotic photography and Andres Serrano's crucifix submerged in a jar of urine — both of which were federally funded.

Under the restrictions adopted as part of the NEA appropriations bill signed into law last year by President Bush, the endowment agreed to weed out grant recipients whose art might be construed as obscene.

But NEA Chairman John Frohn-mayer said Thursday he did not endorse the legislation, though as a federal official he was prohibited from lobbying against it.

"I'm obligated to obey the law," he said in a telephone interview from Washington. "I do think that the statute is unnecessary and I hope that Congress in its wisdom will not see fit to continue it."

Among the 1990 applicants, five writers were singled out for closer examination and all of the more than 4,000 artists who eventually were granted funds received a package containing the promissory letter, the NEA said.

"Like a lot of writers, I was in a financially desperate situation ... so I signed, but not without a lot of outrage," said Alison Demming, a Provincetown poet. "The NEA is giving us freedom from economic stress, but they're saying ... we can't exercise it freely."

That's not the perception the NEA wants its writers to have, said spokeswoman Virginia Falck.

"Our stand is 'Don't let this intimidate you. ... Feel free to create as you wish,'" she said. "When you're funding creativity, you've got to allow room for people to do all kinds of things — warts and all."

Unless those warts include material deemed obscene or created under the influence of drugs.

Grant recipients were asked to swear off art that included, but was not limited to, "depictions of sadomasochism, homoeroticism, the sexual exploitation of children or individuals engaged in sex acts and which, when taken as a whole, do not have serious literary, artistic, political or scientific merit."

Some writers felt they were staring down a potential pact with the devil, opening the gates to increased censorship and state control of the arts.

"It's ironic that we've spent all these years reading about restrictions on artists in Eastern Europe and just when they're gaining freedom we're beginning to feel restricted," Collins said.

The Cambridge-based poet also objected to "sandwiching" homoerotic art between images of sadomasochism and sexually exploited children. "Everyone I've talked with feels it's alarming," she said.

Other writers didn't take things quite so hard.

Writer Ursula Hegi of Spokane, Wash., said she signed without hesitation because "it was not in any conflict with what I'm doing."

Mark Richard, a New York novelist, said the devil may have been dangling the money before him, but that didn't much diminish the temptation.

"I would never let anything dictate my work. Ever. But for 20 grand, I'd sign even if I were a heroin addict," said Richard, who earned $7,000 last year. "Let them come after me for it."

'Cats set to open Big 8 tourney

Oklahoma State foe in opening-round tilt

By David Svoboda
Sports Reporter

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The second season begins today. K-State's men's basketball team hopes it won't end just as quickly.

The Wildcats take the court against Oklahoma State at 12:10 this afternoon in Kemper Arena in the first round of the 1990 Big Eight Tournament.

Although K-State coach Lon Kruger has maintained all season that the fourth-place team in the conference's regular-season race should qualify for the NCAA tournament, he's calling the contest against O-State a "must win" — regardless of the fact his team did what he said would be necessary to get in the 64-team field.

"We're looking at it, from our perspective, as a must win," Kruger said of the Wildcats, 17-13 overall during the regular season and 7-7 in Big Eight play.

If the contest is a must win for K-State's hopes of gaining a school-record fourth-straight NCAA invitation, it's even bigger for Oklahoma State postseason fortunes.

The Cowboys of Coach Leonard Hamilton finished the regular year 15-12 and 6-8. The team was a participant in last year's NIT tournament, and split with K-State in two games this season — each team won on its home floor.

But the Cowboys, after seemingly putting themselves in a good situation early in the year, dropped five of their last seven games after opening 13-7.

If the last contest between these teams is to be any indication, today's matchup might be a literal war.

In K-State's 66-60 win Feb. 20 in Bramlage Coliseum, Byron Houston, O-State's top scorer and rebounder, was knocked to the floor in the first half by a Lance Simmons forearm across the throat.

The blow was an exclamation point on the end of a brutal first half of action. Though the shot to Houston was unintentional, Simmons said, the physical nature of K-State's play in the second contest — following a 89-67 O-State romp in the first — was by design.

"We knew in the second game we couldn't let them do the things they did in the first — pushing us underneath, letting Byron run over people," Simmons said. "We had to be very strong inside."

That February meeting in Bramlage saw Simmons inserted into the starting lineup for the first time since the season's fourth game. He and Tony Massop have combined to give K-State a stronger inside attack. Massop had 17 rebounds last Saturday against Nebraska, the most by a K-Stater in 10 years.

"Tony and I know if we front our man, the other is going to be there to help," Simmons said of the defensive relationship between himself and Massop. "It helps you build confidence."

Confidence is something Kruger said his team needs in attempting to handle Houston, a first-team all-Big Eight choice, and his frontcourt teammate Royce Jeffries.

"Realistically, they have (in Houston and Jeffries) two of the stronger, quicker, better athletes inside in the conference," Kruger said.

Kruger has said he has a great deal of respect for Houston, who was recruited heavily by the Wildcats before deciding upon O-State. The sophomore from Oklahoma City averaged 18.9 points and 10.3 rebounds a game this year.

"He's an outstanding player," Kruger said. "He's big, strong and quick inside. He blocks shots, scores points — he's very difficult to defend against."

Kruger said he expects the contest to be physical, but said it would stop

K-State's John Rettiger, Jean Derouillere and the rest of their Wildcat teammates will be looking to get past Oklahoma State today in first-round action at the Big Eight Tournament in Kansas City, Mo. The action in Kemper Arena tips off at 12:10 p.m.

Track athletes to national meet

Wildcat squad qualifies 6 women for NCAA indoor championships

By Dan Wicker
Sports Reporter

K-State's indoor track and field season is over for all but six Wildcat women who have qualified for the NCAA Indoor Championships.

The six will travel to Indianapolis to compete against the best competition in the nation today through Saturday.

Three of the athletes who qualified met the guaranteed qualifying mark. Angie Miller had a season-best throw of 52-8 in the shot put, Carla Shannon met the qualifying mark in the triple jump, and Connie Teaberry will be making the trip in the high jump.

Three other athletes were notified on Tuesday about their qualifying; after meeting provisional standards. Janet Haskin made it in 3,000 meters. Joy Jones and Latricia Joyner will be going in the 55-meter dash.

"We usually have five or six athletes go. It is a good number," K-State coach John Capriotti said. "I'm disappointed we didn't have any of our guys make it."

Although Capriotti is disappointed for the men who did not qualify, he does realize how difficult it is to get into the NCAA meet.

"That is the way it is. The NCAA meet is tough," Capriotti said. "If you don't meet the standards, you don't go."

All six of the athletes are coming off of strong performances at the Big Eight Indoor Championships, leading the K-State women to a second-place finish.

Miller and Shannon brought home gold medals in the shot and triple jump, respectively. Shannon also finished third in the long jump, while Teaberry followed with a third-place finish in the high jump.

Haskin placed second in the 5,000 meters in 16:28.65, while Jones and Joyner placed fourth and eighth in the 55 meters, respectively.

"They're all really good athletes," Capriotti said. "All of them have been to a national meet before. They

Road trips continue; netters head to Vegas

By Dan Wicker
Sports Reporter

Spring break has arrived at K-State. It is a time for fun in the sun, relaxation or hitting the slopes.

However, not everyone will be heading out of Manhattan for these reasons.

The K-State tennis team will be packing its bags just like everyone else, but the Wildcat women's spring break will not be all fun as they travel to Las Vegas, Nev., for a quadra ngular meet.

The Wildcats will begin competition against Cal-State Northridge on Saturday, then will face Utah State Sunday, North Texas Monday and will conclude their spring break competition with nationally-ranked Yale Tuesday.

"The major emphasis is on how we are playing as opposed to doing anything special against one particular opponent," Coach Steve Bietau said. "We need to continue to improve. We have definitely made progress in the last couple of weeks."

This road trip will make the fourth trip K-State has made in as many weeks. K-State has not played a home match since the beginning of the season on Feb. 3. Bietau has said he realizes the team is tired and is feeling the weariness that comes from continuous travel.

"We are tired. I think it is not an unusual thing of the season. We have traveled a lot of miles," Bietau said. "It is also a point in the semester where students feel pressure in academics. The players will definitely welcome some time off after we get back."

The Las Vegas matches are mostly

Williams, Payton top list

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Roy Williams of Kansas and Gary Payton of Oregon State led the list of finalists for The Associated Press' college basketball awards.

Williams, in his second season with the Jayhawks, received the most votes from the college basketball poll board and selected writers to top the list of 10 coaches now in the running for Coach of the Year, which will be voted on by the entire AP membership.

Kansas was 38th in the preseason poll but quickly caught the country's eye with a title run in the preseason NIT that included wins over No. 1 UNLV and No. 2 Louisiana State. The Jayhawks were fourth in the first regular-season poll, have not been lower than second since and held the top spot for three weeks. The only losses for the senior-laden team have been in conference play, two to Missouri and one at Oklahoma.

Two other coaches from the Big Eight who led their teams to No. 1 rankings this season were on the list of nominees, Billy Tubbs of Oklahoma and Norm Stewart of Missouri. The Big Ten was represented by Gene Keady of Purdue and Jud Heathcote of Michigan State, two coaches whose teams are fighting for the conference title despite being virtually ignored in preseason polls.

The other coaches nominated were Jim Calhoun, Connecticut; Cliff Ellis, Clemson; Hugh Durham, Georgia; Neil McCarthy, New Mexico State, and Jim Anderson, Oregon State.

Payton, who led the Beavers to the regular-season Pac-10 title averaging 26.1 points and 8.4 assists per game, was the top vote-getter among the 12 players on the ballot for nominees for Player of the Year. There was a three-way tie for 10th place.

Others on the list included: Derrick Coleman of Syracuse, Dennis Scott of Georgia Tech, Chris Jackson of Louisiana State, Larry Johnson of UNLV, Doug Smith of Missouri, Alec Kessler of Georgia, Steve Scheffler of Purdue, and Rumeal Robinson of Michigan.

Both awards will be presented in ceremonies held during the Final Four later this month in Denver.

Baseball squad to Florida

By Scott Paske
Sports Reporter

Spring break in Florida — what could be better?

Answer: A lot if you're a K-State baseball player making the trip with Coach Mike Clark.

"There's going to be a lot of business and little pleasure," Clark said. "We want to come out of this ready for the Big Eight."

The Wildcats leave today for the Sunshine State and 80-degree temperatures to play eight games in seven days. K-State opens at Haines City, Fla. — the site of Boardwalk and Baseball, spring training home of the Kansas City Royals — against the Indiana Hoosiers on Sunday.

"I talked to some people down there, and they wanted to make sure we're still coming," Clark said. "With the problems of the major leaguers right now, I guess we're the feature attraction."

The trip will give the 'Cats a chance to do something they haven't done all season — play several games in a short period of time. K-State's first five games will be played at two locations. After the Indiana game, the 'Cats will play Morehead State at Haines City on Monday. Tuesday, K-State will travel to Tampa, Fla., for a game with No. 24 South Florida.

The 'Cats' final day in Florida will be a rare one, as they play Ithaca (N.Y.) College, a NCAA Division II opponent, at Haines City 1 p.m. Wednesday, then commute back to Tampa for an evening game with South Florida.

After a day off Thursday, the 'Cats conclude the week with a three-game set at Hattiesburg, Miss., against No. 25 Southern Mississippi.

"Wednesday will be a big day for us, because we have a doubleheader at Oklahoma State later in the year with one game in the afternoon and one game in the evening," Clark said. "This will give us a chance to experience what that's like."

The long string of games will also give Clark a chance to get his four starting pitchers a couple of starts each.

"We'd like to do that if things work out," Clark said. "We might, if

New tests providing more data

By Stacie Sanders
Collegian Reporter

Changes in the American Collegiate Testing Program provide more information to academic advisers who can use the data to plan a curriculum suited to a student's needs and abilities.

Although the scoring is different, it will not affect students currently in college when vying for scholarships, said Richard Elkins, director of admissions and chairman of the Kansas ACT Council.

It will not affect them because there are concurrence tables listing equivalent scores for different test versions, Elkins said. The scores on the enhanced version, which was developed last year, are a point or two higher when compared to the old ACT.

All parts of the enhanced ACT are scored on a 1-36 scale, Elkins said. On the old ACT, all parts of the test weren't scored on the same scale. "Now it's just more consistent," he said.

The four areas tested are English, math, reading and scientific reasoning, Elkins said. On the old ACT, reading was incorporated into both the social sciences and natural sciences tests.

"The big change is the reading, which I think is an important indication of college success," said Sandra Flores, instructor of continuing education sponsored projects. "With the reading, we can better place (students) in classes based on reading ability."

In addition, the English and math tests have been subdivided, Elkins said. Scores are given for the subdivisions of mechanics and rhetoric in the English test; subscores for math will be divided into pre-algebra, algebra, geometry and plane geometry as well as trigonometry.

These subscores will also aid in the placement of students in classes for their first semester.

Elkins said the increased number of scores will enlighten students as to their own strengths and weaknesses. Terry Taylor, guidance counselor at Manhattan High School, said, "The idea (of the enhanced ACT) was to get more information to colleges."

The increased information about students will help colleges judge ability in academic areas, he said.

Taylor said some students at Manhattan High have taken both the old ACT and the enhanced version.

This year's senior class is the transition group and it will probably take several more years to adjust, Taylor said.

Performance faithful

Tenor carries production of Puccini opera, 'La Boheme'

REVIEW

Allow me to introduce myself. I am a poet for a living. ... I live.

This are the words of Rodolfo, the tenor poet, in "La Boheme" which played Thursday in McCain Auditorium.

Rodolfo falls deeply in love with Mimi, a seamstress who enters his attic dwelling seeking a flame with which to light her candle. But Mimi is ill and can never get her hands warm. He tells his love Mimi about himself in the aria "Che gelida manina" (Your little hand is frozen).

Rodolfo and his Bohemian friends — Colline, Schaunard and Marcello — live in a garret on the Left Bank of the Seine River. Act I, which takes place on Christmas Eve, illustrates the miserable working conditions of the 19th century artist. Despite these conditions, the artists — a painter, a poet, a philosopher and a writer — live life to its fullest.

Sentimentality dominated the action with the love interest of Marcello, the painter, and Musetta, the flirt. Marcello says of Musetta, "She is hungry for love. Her favorite food is the heart." Their fiery relationship serves as a foil to the tragic relationship of Rodolfo and Mimi.

Scene II of Act I shifted to Paris, with action both on the street and in the Parisian Cafe. This staging conveyed a convincing atmosphere of a bustling holiday crowd complete with marching band and flags. It symbolized the joy of the lovers.

The trumpets and the strident sounds of the orchestra set a cold sound of dawn for the beginning of Act II, which is set in near a tavern by a toll house. The orchestral opening set the mood perfectly for a cold wintry dawn.

Mimi appears and talks to Marcello, telling him she is leaving Rodolfo because of his jealousy. Rodolfo is in the tavern, and Marcello tells Mimi so. She leaves, but overhears Rodolfo telling Marcello that he is driving Mimi away. Living in his attic is making her illness worse, and he is only pretending to be jealous so she will find another place to live that is not so cold and draughty.

Mimi and Rodolfo sadly part as friends, although no longer lovers. Heightening the solemnity of the occasion is the vindictive parting of the flirtatious Musetta with the jealous Marcello as the act closes.

In Act III, the dying Mimi returns to the garret for Rodolfo, and the opera's tragic conclusion.

The New York Opera National Company gave a superb performance of the Giacomo Puccini work. The opera company's direction was faithful to the writing of the librettists, Giuseppe Giacosa and Luigi Illica, and the composer, Giacomo Puccini.

Aggieville to unveil new rock 'n' roll spot

By The Collegian Staff

Aggieville's second new bar to open this semester will be serving beer and rock 'n' roll beginning March 16, said The Spot's part-owner, Scott Sherman.

"This is strictly a rock bar," Sherman said. "There will be no Tone Loc."

Sherman compared the bar's music format to a Kansas City radio station, KY102. Artists on the bar's playlist will include the Beatles, Led Zeppelin, the Scorpions and Def Leppard.

"We're going to play a broad range of rock and roll from classic to current," he said.

Sherman may have live bands play next semester, but currently has announcers to play every night. The announcers will not be playing specific sets, Sherman said, until he sees what works best with the crowd.

One night specifically will feature heavy metal music, but Sherman said it will not be a feature every week. He is also considering having a night during which one band's songs would be played all evening.

Sherman, who has been an announcer in various bars for the last seven years, said he has been kicking around the idea of owning a bar for quite some time. This semester he was given the opportunity, and with the help of two silent partners, he purchased the World Radio building. Renovations started three weeks ago.

"The plumbing and carpentry has been completed 'in house.' We've done all the work ourselves. We haven't hired anyone out to do any of it," Sherman said.

The dance floor will hold 50 persons and the bar's total occupancy level is 150, Sherman said.

"A lot of bars like to pack in as many people as they can. But I feel that when you have to fight a crowd, it's no fun," he said. "I want the customer to feel comfortable — for everyone to have a seat and not feel like a sardine."

Dan Walter, president of the Aggieville Merchants Association, said new markets are not always easy to reach.

"In recent years, it has been a challenge to put a finger on what is enjoyable for a broader range of people," Walter said. "The new businesses are trying to tap into new markets."

Famous fakes on display

By The Associated Press

LONDON — Priests in ancient Babylon faked an inscription to make their temple seem older. A modern Scottish museum had to fake a fish with fur to satisfy public demand.

These are among 600 objects in a British Museum exhibition opening Friday that displays 3,000 years of the forger's art and suggests that fakes often reflect what people want to believe.

The objects range from a faked Roman chariot and photographs of fairies to a forged Rembrandt painting and a witch's wreath.

The exhibition "Fake? The Art of Deception," running through Sept. 2, contains fake jewels, coins, sculptures, fossils, furniture and porcelain.

There's even a letter purporting to have been written by Jesus Christ. "Most of the worst errors in this exhibition are our own," says director Sir David M. Wilson.

"It's not surprising as we have been collecting for a long time as museums go, nearly 250 years. The forgers had more than a head start as they were busy in ancient Babylon 3,000 years ago," he said.

Wilson admits: "There is a horrid fascination about fakes. Although we sweep them under the carpet, we talk about them all the time because we know we as experts are fallible."

The first thing visitors see is a supposed Etruscan tomb of the 6th century B.C., made about 120 years ago.

"The British Museum bought the tomb from an Italian dealer in 1871 because the Louvre had one and we were jealous," said Dr. Susan Walker, an antiquities expert.

"Within a year of the purchase, the inscription on the lid was found to have been copied from a gold brooch in the Louvre, but the tomb was kept on show until 1935 and has appeared in countless books on the Etruscans and their art," she said.

Mark Jones, an expert on coins and medals who assembled the fakes from 26 museums in Britain and abroad, said the exhibition was "about deception, about lying things whenever and wherever they are made."

"It's evidence of what people saw and valued in the art of the past because a faked antique shows much more clearly than the real thing what collectors valued. Fakes often reflect what people want to believe."

Resource being destroyed

Conference focuses on non-point source water pollution

By Lori Mikesell
Staff Reporter

Society may be destroying one of its most important resources according to speakers at the 7th Annual Water and the Future of Kansas Conference.

The conference, which met Wednesday and Thursday at the Manhattan Holiday Inn and Holidome, focused on water contamination which cannot be directly linked to its source. This non-point source pollution includes parking lot, feedlot or agricultural run-off water.

"Non-point source pollution, in many people's minds, is strictly an agricultural pesticide problem," said Ron Fox, director of the bureau of environmental quality for the Kansas Department of Health and Environment. "In fact, our lifestyles are responsible for most of our pollution problems."

Fox was one of three speakers who participated in an issues forum on chemicals in the environment Thursday.

Although pesticides are one source of pollution, Fox said the list of potential sources is endless.

"Everyone of us is a polluter. What we demand in today's lifestyles demands pollution," he said. "There are agriculture chemicals creating problems, but all the actions we take in today's modern society have an adverse effect on our environment."

A balance between creating the products society demands and the level of pollution society will tolerate must be reached, Fox said. "As an employee of state government, that's a balance we try to achieve every day," he said. "Sometimes we go too far and sometimes we don't go far enough. It's a constant battle we fight."

Ken Kern, executive director of the state conservation commission, discussed the role of the Kansas Conservation District in controlling water contamination.

Kansas is divided into 105 conservation districts, Kern said. These districts, run by local volunteers, develop local plans for non-point source pollution.

"We need the input at the local level, but after a local plan has been developed, submitted and approved, it will collect dust unless we are able to effectively implement the plan," he said.

Kern said that only through communication, coordination and cooperation can the problems associated with water quality be answered.

Representing the Kansas farmer, Bill Fuller, assistant director of public affairs for Kansas Farm Bureau, said the American public must continually be reminded that farmers are the original environmentalists.

"As a group we have been good stewards of the land," Fuller said. "One of the things people often overlook is that to the farmer, the environment is his work place, his home and it's where he raises his children."

Agriculture must be pro-active, Fuller said. Farmers are the key to implementing an effective non-point source pollution effort.

Lack of state water nearing crisis

By Angie Huff
Collegian Reporter

A lack of water is reaching the crisis stage in parts of Kansas, John Baldwin, chairman of the Kansas Water Authority said at the Seventh Annual Water and the Future of Kansas Conference Thursday.

"As you take your shower, think about how much water you're going to leave for your kids and your grandkids, so that'll get you out of your shower sooner," said Baldwin, who outlined Gov. Mike Hayden's recommendations to implement the 1991 state water plan expected to cost $16.5 million.

A $1 million increase in the budget includes funding for a computerized geographic information system provided by the state water plan fund.

The computer system also will be funded with money from the state's informational technology fund, the state general fund, the conservation fee fund and the wildlife fee fund, Baldwin said.

The 1991 state water plan includes money budgeted for various river and lake studies not previously budgeted for in 1990.

"We're not funding new positions. We're really trying to get this money out to where it actually does something out there in the fields," Baldwin said.

Many of the issues discussed during the conference, including water quality, water contamination by pesticides, water resources, water conservation and water plan spending, were brought to many people's attention in a newspaper article printed as early as 1979, Baldwin said.

Then, a state water plan did not exist in Kansas, he said. Today, however, a plan not only exists, but has a budget.

"I think we have made a lot of headway in identifying the issues across the state," he said.

The state water plan was devised by the State Water Office and advisory committees across the state, Baldwin said. The office's specific goals are water conservation, water quality protection, resource development, stream protection and land treatment.

Kansas has 12 water basins and each basin is assigned 11 advisory

Loss of Florida's crop raises tomato prices, decreases availability

By Chris McEntee
Collegian Reporter

Cold weather in December virtually wiped out Florida's crop of tomatoes, leaving consumers with decreased supply and soaring prices.

Local grocers said they have had to import tomatoes from Mexico to meet the demand.

Signs in the K-State Union Stateroom state that "due to the price increase of tomatoes, there will be some temporary cut backs in their use. We have taken them out of sandwich products and reduced the amount used in other areas. We will resume normal procedures when the price of tomatoes lower."

The signs were put up February 12 and were only supposed to last for a week to 10 days, said Barb Depew, production dietician for the Union.

"Normal prices are about 40 cents a pound, and right now, we're paying close to $1.20 a pound," Depew said. "When we have normal prices, we go through 10 or 12 lugs of tomatoes a week. With the increase of prices, we're only able to afford four to five."

A lug is a unit of measure for produce, she said.

"Right now we are getting tomatoes in 30-pound lugs," Depew said.

The Stateroom has reduced the use of tomatoes in food production to less than half of the amount of tomatoes usually used, Depew said.

"We have eliminated (tomatoes) where we could without changing the overall product," she said. "We had to change over to smaller tomatoes for the moment, but there are still to-matos out there, just a few less."

If a customer does want some tomato slices on their sandwich, they are available at the grills. The slices will cost a little more than average, Depew said.

"We are still expecting the prices to drop but do not know how soon it will happen," she said. "We will go back to normal prices as soon as it happens."

Derby, Kramer, Boyd and Smurthwaite food centers are using about half or one-fourth as many tomatoes as usual, said Betty Anderson, food service supervisor at Derby.

Anderson said they were also using smaller tomatoes because they were cheaper. The food centers paid a high of $39 per lug when the prices reached their peak and on March 5 the price had dropped a bit to $26, she said.

"We thought we could use cherry tomatoes as a substitute, but they increased in price also," Anderson said. "We're using canned tomatoes on our taco line. They don't look as pretty, but we have to save money until the price decreases."

Dillon's grocery store in Westloop has been trying to keep the cheaper tomatoes in stock for the past few weeks, said Bill Klecan, produce clerk. He said they are not even stocking the large and extra-large tomatoes because the price is so outrageous.

"The last few cases of tomatoes we have received came from Mexico, because all of the tomatoes from Florida have already run out," Klecan said.

New federal policy to affect highways

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The national transportation policy announced Thursday by the Bush administration could affect Kansas' comprehensive eight-year highway improvement program in a "negative fashion," state Transportation Secretary Horace Edwards said.

That is because the federal government may reduce the amount of money it sends to the states within a few years, and the Kansas program is dependent upon those funds, he said.

"The integrity of the overall program is dependent on federal aid," Edwards said in an interview. "Jeopardy is too strong a word, but the program could be affected in a negative fashion. It isn't likely to be helped a heck of a lot."

Besides the potential for reduced federal funding for state highway programs, Edwards said the federal policy announced by President Bush and U.S. Transportation Secretary Samuel Skinner contains a "fundamental flaw."

That flaw, Edwards said, is the lack of a national management system that identifies the greatest needs in the nation's overall transportation system and allocates resources where they are needed.

Robert Brubaker, who performed the part of Rodolfo, is a fine tenor. It is difficult to believe he was ever a baritone. The entire company was in good voice, but Brubaker carried the show.

The orchestra under the direction of Mark Gibson was superlative. His orchestral interpretation of Puccini was always active, without disputing the supremacy of the vocal lines. Yet the orchestra still maintained a life of its own through independent lines, themes and rhythms.

Kudos go to Gibson and his full 30-piece orchestra, which at times was as thick as a good chocolate shake and as sentimental as Puccini would have loved it.

ensure that his employees advise travelers of the possible hardships they may encounter while traveling with Greyhound. Officials with Greyhound bus lines instructed regional offices to advise travelers of the difficulties associated with the strike.

"If the place passengers are traveling is along I-70, then there's no problem," Miller said. "But travelers wanting, for instance, to go to Wichita or places southeast or southwest are having a lot of problems. Services are down to almost nothing or cut out completely to that area."

With spring break approaching

Miller found the strikes a virtual monkey wrench in the works.

"It's obvious that business is not what was expected," he said. "Ticket sales, although they're not where we expected them to be, have not been as affected as freight sales. I wish there was something that we could do to make things better."

Miller said that some of his freight sales customers have been forced to find another way to get their packages to their destinations.

Because Greyhound is a service-oriented business, he said he finds it frustrating to him that his customers have to go elsewhere.

"They gotta do what they gotta do," Miller said.

Many travelers also have been stranded across the country because of the strike and the difficulty of route cancellations, although Manhattan has not had that problem, he said.

Miller said Greyhound is making every effort to get people to their destinations and despite all the setbacks his attitude is wait and see.

"We've been cautioning people," he said. "There may be some long delays and we want people to understand what they may be up against. Unless it gets better soon there isn't going to be much of a change."

At 10:20 p.m. Thursday, an hour and a half behind schedule, the east-bound Greyhound arrived at the station to cheers of the seven eager passengers. The awaiting passengers purchased tickets from the driver of the bus.

ties in dealing with military officials, Harden said.

Harden may have offered hope to some worried residents who own property on or near the potential landfill sites. The county intends to offer some type of compensation to individuals who become displaced property owners as a result of the new landfill, he said.

Although a formal compensation plan has not yet been developed, Riley County will probably buy some residents' property and reimburse others for damages, Harden said.

"We want everybody to benefit from having a place to put their trash," he said. "Some people are going to be negatively impacted."

motive.

K-State officials have not received any threats nor have there ever been attacks on its veterinary school by animal rights activists, Lorenz said.

"Of course, every veterinarian runs into comments made by people accusing them of taking part in barbaric animal treatment," he said.

Lorenz said he does not believe the animal rights groups have any tie to the murder of Kitchen.

"It would only be a remote possibility that there would be a connection," he said. "Of course, someone may be acting for animal rights independently of the major organizations."

PETA was founded for the purpose of education, outreach and cruelty investigations, according to an article in the February issue of the Washingtonian, a magazine based in Washington, D.C. In the 1980s, PETA became involved with the underground group, ALF.

According to the Washingtonian, PETA has been using funds to pay legal defense fees of ALF members charged for raiding universities and other experimentation labs. PETA and other animal rights groups have taken the blame for actions of and acted as media liaisons for underground militant groups.

The Washingtonian cited incidents when scientists at Columbia University have been harmed. One man's house was destroyed by fire, and others have had their lives and their children's lives threatened by animal rights activists.

"We are looking at a lot of avenues right now and are acting under the assumption that just because Dr. Kitchen was not liked by everyone, that doesn't make that a motive to kill him."

Clark said the rare trip has added importance for his program, noting that there would be some time for fun.

going to be in the form of first-time meetings. K-State has never seen Cal-State Northridge, and it has been a few years since they have played North Texas.

Utah State is in the region and should provide good competition. Yale, the returning Ivy League champion, will also provide a challenging match, Bietau said.

"It is a continuation of what we have been doing. I don't rate them any more important than any of the others," Bietau said of the weekend matches. "We need to continue to play better and continue to play with more confidence, and try to get as many people on the team playing as well as possible."

"You'll see that the attitude will change when we progress into the conference. We want to play our best heading into April."

Bietau was pleased with the overall performance of the team last weekend, especially in the win over Baylor. He said everyone on the team is showing marked improvement.

"Just about everyone has improved. There isn't one position where I haven't seen improvement," Bietau said. "It isn't a question of one individual or doubles team, but lifting the level of all nine positions."

Bietau also said the team is becoming more relaxed with playing a tough schedule and are all coming into their own.

"The players are all doing well right now. They feel good about what we have accomplished," Bietau said. "We had our heads spinning a couple of weeks ago, but they have steadied and are playing well."

all need to go there and compete."

The pressure of a national meet is always looming over all the competition. Capriotti said this is a major concern the women need to forget about and just do what they have been doing all season.

"You got yourself there and you can't press. You just do the things you have been doing all year," Capriotti said. "The national meet is not the time to change everything you have been doing. You just have to settle in and run the race and have fun with it."

The thought of becoming an all-American must be on the minds of the women as they head to Indiana. Capriotti said he believes most of them have a shot at the dream. The top six finishers in each event attain all-American status.

"I would like to see some of the girls make all-American," Capriotti said. "Connie and Angie have a real good shot, but I wouldn't rule out Janet, Carla, Joy or Latricia."

Lockout ends Sunday night

Opening Day set for April 9; salary arbitration issue solved

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Baseball players and owners agreed to a four-year contract late Sunday night, ending the 32-day lockout and paving the way for the start of the season on April 9.

The settlement brought an end to a bitter dispute that kept players locked out of spring training since Feb. 15, the second-longest work stoppage in baseball history.

Commissioner Fay Vincent made the official announcement that an agreement had been reached at 12:18 a.m. CST Monday.

Vincent was flanked on a stage at the Helmsley Palace by members of the Players Relations Committee.

"It's been a difficult process, but on the other hand we reached an agreement," Vincent said.

Each team will have 158 games scheduled, Deputy Commissioner Stephen Greenberg said. The season had been scheduled to start on April 2.

Greenberg said negotiations were continuing with the union to work out a full 162-game schedule.

"We are hopeful these games can be made up," Vincent said. "And we expect there will be considerable effort made to avoid having the asterisk next to the season."

Camps will open on Tuesday, and exhibition games will begin on March 26.

The agreement was not signed when the news conference started, but Greenberg said he hoped it would be signed later Monday.

One of the alternatives being considered is playing the originally scheduled first week of the season in the week starting Oct. 1.

"We hope this is the last of this type of situation we have in baseball," said Milwaukee owner Bud Selig, chairman of the PRC.

According to a source familiar with the agreement, 17 percent of players between two and three years of major-league service will become eligible to file for arbitration.

The arbitration issue was keeping both sides from making an agreement until there was some movement over the weekend.

Using this year's service class, 14 of 83 two-to-three-year players would have been eligible.

American League president Bobby Brown said there might be some problems with a short spring.

"There is obviously concern because of the shortened spring training," Brown said. "Obviously, we would like it longer. We realize all of the pitchers and players might not be in as good a shape as they might be, but we're confident that by April 9 we'll have a pretty good product."

Word spread fast that there was a settlement, and the players headed for Florida and Arizona.

"It's great news. We're all in the same boat, and now we'll get the troops ready," Boston manager Joe Morgan said from Winter Haven, Fla. "I don't think it will take long to get everybody into shape. The big thing will be to make sure nobody gets hurt. But I don't recall anyone getting hurt after the long layoff in 1981."

Baseball fans from kids to President Bush had urged the two sides to get together and make a settlement, and after many hours on Sunday, they did.

"I'm happy its over. I'm happy the players are going to be here," Texas Rangers vice president Tom Grieve said from Port Charlotte, Fla.

"The last week or 10 days, this thing has gotten very boring," Grieve said. "I don't think it's been positive for players, for management or for baseball."

The key issue emerged as salary arbitration eligibility and it dominated the negotiations the last few weeks.

Word of a settlement came about 10:30 p.m. CST after the players and owners had spent the entire day working on a formula to solve arbitration eligibility.

Negotiators met for 90 minutes early Sunday and after a lunch break, resumed in the afternoon at Vincent's Park Avenue office. When they finally stopped, a deal was done.

The immediate terms of the deal were not announced, but the two sides came to a meeting of the minds on additional players eligible for salary arbitration.

Union mobile removed for repairs

By Tomari Guinn
Staff Reporter

Repairs to the ceiling of the K-State Union Courtyard that prompted the removal of the Wildcat mobile are taking longer than expected, making the Courtyard inaccessible for up to week.

Jack Connaughton, associate director of the Union, said the mobile hanging in the Courtyard has been removed until repairs on the ceiling are completed.

The mobile was made by J. Cranston Heintzelman. It was a gift to the Union from the Class of 1970, said Jack Sills, director of the Union.

"We have to put a new white ceiling on because leaks in the roof in the last three years have discolored it," Connaughton said. "We'll wait to ensure the ceiling is in good shape before we attempt to rehang the mobile."

The ceiling repairs began March 9, he said.

"Repairs should have been done by the end of spring break, but now we're shooting for March 26," Connaughton said.

Sills said the ceiling was badly deteriorated, due in part to the leaky roof. Repairs to the roof were scheduled to be completed in the summer of 1987, but were only recently finished.

Placing new material over the ceiling to cover the discolorations will cost about $8,800, he said.

"The product being applied to the stains wasn't covering it; it was bleeding through," Connaughton said. "We'll wait a few rainstorms to see if the paint will hold."

Connaughton said part of the reason for taking the mobile down was the opportunity to clean it.

"We probably wouldn't have gone to the expense of taking it down just to clean it, but that played a part in the decision to have it done," he said.

The mobile was taken down piece by piece and will probably be cleaned in-house, Connaughton said.

"We'll see what the students think about having it down," he said. "Maybe they'll like it better up, or maybe they'll like it down."

"It's either a love or hate situation with the mobile," Sills said. "There aren't many people in between."

Russ Conroy, Topeka, removes a piece of the Wildcat mobile in the Union courtyard before spring break. The mobile was removed so Conroy could paint over stains on the ceiling.

Proposed jail addition raises questions

Parents and Catholic school administrators debate about zoning, appearance, safety concerning proximity to schools

By Clinton Wolf
Collegian Reporter

The location of a proposed jail addition at the current jail site is raising concern among community members.

The zoning and appearance of the jail and its close proximity to Manhattan Catholic Schools have been questioned by parents and administrators at the schools.

Riley County Police Director Alvan Johnson said the proposed facility would be an addition to the present county jail east of Juliette Avenue between Colorado and Pierre streets. It would have a capacity of 38 prisoners in high security and 16 work release prisoners in a lower security area, for a total capacity of 54, he said.

Johnson said the design of the current jail, built about 1935, is archaic. State and federal jail standards recommend the jail hold no more than 21 prisoners, but it currently holds between 35 and 40.

Dan Myers, attorney for the County Commission, said the questions concerning any changes required in zoning have not been addressed. He said the county will determine whether a zoning change is required and decide if the changes should be made through regular zoning channels.

Mayor Kent Glasscock said the city wants to be sure the plans have adequate public consideration before construction begins.

"The city assumes that the project will go through proper planning and zoning steps that the city asks of its own projects and of those in the private sector," Glasscock said.

Janice Farinelli, chairwoman of the Manhattan Catholic School Parent-Teacher Organization's core committee on the jail expansion, said the PTO is primarily concerned about the safety of neighborhood children.

"Our position is that we believe a jail does not belong in the same neighborhood with a school," Farinelli said, "and there are several (schools) in the area."

The increase in traffic might endanger children crossing streets on their way to school, church or the public library on Poyntz Avenue, she said.

"It's a neighborhood with a lot of kids, and building the addition there doesn't make sense," she said.

Riley County Commissioner Wilton Thomas said the proposed jail would be built on the east portion of the block and would not extend to Juliette Avenue.

Original jail plans called for a driveway to be located on Juliette Avenue, Myers said. The plans were later altered because of community concerns about increased traffic flow near the Catholic schools. Johnson said the driveways are on Colorado Street in the current plans.

Mary O'Leary, assistant director of the Seven Dolors Child Care Center, said the center is concerned about the atmosphere the jail would create. She said more than 100 children be-

Police say alcohol factor in deaths

By Tomari Guinn
Staff Reporter

Blood analysis tests show alcohol was a factor in a one-car accident that killed two K-State freshmen on Feb. 18.

Tami Borck, freshman in pre-law from Larned, and Jennifer Bedell, freshman in dance from Shawnee, died when Borck's car left U.S. Highway 183 12 miles west of Larned and struck a guardrail. The car then slid into a bridge railing where it became airborne and landed in a creek bed.

Borck and Bedell were pronounced dead at the scene.

Trooper Byron Wade of the Kansas Highway Patrol said the blood tests showed that alcohol was involved in the accident, but he said he was not permitted to release the blood alcohol levels of the two women.

Dr. Edward Jones, who performed the autopsies at the Central Kansas Medical Center in Great Bend, confirmed that Borck and Bedell had consumed alcohol. Jones, who was contacted at his home, said he did not have the exact blood alcohol level figures available to him outside of his office.

Wade said an officer in the area of the accident clocked a vehicle going 93 mph about 8 1/4 miles north of where the accident occurred. The officer saw the vehicle head south on U.S. Highway

Senate denies allocations for OWLS

By Chris Koger
Government Editor

In the wake of a rushed emergency allocation at an earlier meeting, Student Senate twice voted against adding a bill for special allocations to Older, Wiser Learning Students to its agenda March 8.

Sean Cash, arts and sciences senator and co-author of the bill, attempted to convince Senate the allocation of $258.50 needed first readings, but several senators voiced strong opposition to the move. The possibility of the bill moving special orders and being passed without the senators' prior viewing was cited as a reason for the bill's failure twice in one night.

"We have a process to follow. ... Some feel that last week's allocation was greased and railroaded through," said Barry Beck, Senate coordinator of finances.

"I think this kind of leaves a bad taste in my mouth to have this brought up a second time," said Travis Stumpff, arts and sciences senator. "Last week, the same thing happened, and I don't want Senate to set a standard."

In the March 1 Senate meeting, an emergency allocation of more than $1,800 for the student branch of the Associated General Contractors of America was approved after being added to the agenda and moved special orders. The allocation funded trips for the organization during spring break.

Student Body President Todd Johnson said Senate's failure to approve the bill's addition to the agenda sent a negative message to members of OWLS.

"I know for sure some are upset because it was only $250, and last week we not only brought up something after Senate Executive Committee met, but it was also moved special orders," Johnson said.

Cash stressed the urgency of the bill, which would have partially funded an OWLS trip to a convention in Ames, Iowa, March 23 and 24. The organization was selected to present a workshop presentation, along with members from Student Governing Association and the FENIX Adult Student Program.

Crystal Sapp, president of OWLS, said the group was forced to request the funding on short notice because other funding requests and fund raisers didn't raise the amount of money expected. She said the organization was told by the Senate Finance Committee March 6 that some of the money requested wouldn't be funded, which was too late to add the allocation to the agenda.

Senate voted to return money obtained from a 15-cent student activity fee for Associated Students of Kansas to the SGA reserves for contingencies account. The money, earmarked for the state ASK office, could not be used because Wichita State University failed to pass the student fee. With the new bill, the money will go into the reserves account until WSU passes the fee.

Todd Heitschmidt, campus ASK director, told Senate the money should remain in the ASK account and asked for a role call vote on the bill.

"I don't know how you guys are going to explain to your constituents why you voted for it," he said. "We set up a 15-cent fee for a contingency account. The least we could have done was earmarked it for an ASK account."

Heitschmidt, who later visited with ASK officials at a convention in Washington, said it is probable WSU will pass the fee soon. He said the approval will, in effect, override Senate's legislation.

After almost two hours of debate, numerous proposed amendments and the possibility of being sent back to a

Supermarket fire kills 15

TOKYO (AP) — A fire in a supermarket Sunday killed 15 people and injured six, including two who jumped from a fifth-floor window to escape the smoke and flames, officials said. It took 57 fire engines three hours to put out the blaze at the Nagasakiya store in Amagasaki, 300 miles west of Tokyo, said fire official Hiroshi Kawamoto. The cause of the fire was being investigated.

Kawamoto said the fire broke out on the fourth floor of the five-story supermarket shortly after noon. He said all 15 fatalities were probably due to smoke and gas inhalation.

The victims were found on the fifth floor, where the employees' cafeteria, offices, a storage area and a game center are located.

Nobel Prize money increases

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — The money awarded to Nobel Prize winners is being raised this year to $653,000 each from $489,000, the head of the Nobel Foundation was quoted as saying Sunday.

The foundation is hoping to eventually make the prize — after inflation — worth what it was in 1901, said Stig Ramel. His comments appeared in the Svenska Dagbladet.

Svenska Dagbladet said this year's increase in prize money was secured by a planned sale of the foundation's 22 percent stake in the real estate company Bevaringen.

Program steals documents

NEW YORK (AP) — A rogue computer program that steals electronic documents and user passwords and erases files has been winding its way through a nationwide computer network previously plagued in 1988, according to a published report.

The New York Times reported in its Monday editions that a computer hacker has devised a program that infiltrated corporations, non-classified military installations, government laboratories and several universities.

Government computer security teams have been unable to trace the source of the illegal program.

The computer network is Internet, a worldwide collection of computer systems that links corporations, government projects and universities together.

Internet was thrown into chaos in November 1988 when a program written by Robert Tappan Morris, a graduate student at Cornell University, jammed the system.

American children fare poorly

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States trails its foreign competitors in the health and care of children and fares poorly in a comparison of child poverty rates, a House committee reported Sunday.

The report by the House Select Committee on Children, Youth and Families said the United States has the highest percentage of children affected by divorce, and its male youths are far more likely to be murdered than those in other developed nations.

"What this shows is there are some very serious questions about the status of America's children when compared to others," said the panel's chairman, Rep. George Miller, D-Calif.

The committee based the report on a new study by the U.S. Census Bureau's center for international research, which compared statistics on U.S. children with those of 11 other nations.

Thieves steal 11 paintings

BOSTON (AP) — Thieves dressed in police uniforms stole 11 paintings including works by Rembrandt, Degas, Manet and Vermeer as well as other priceless objects from a leading museum, FBI and museum officials said Sunday.

The value of the objects wasn't known, said Corey Cronin, spokesman for the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum. He said the thieves apparently entered the museum late Saturday or early Sunday.

The thieves convinced the museum's two security guards they were police and entered the building unhindered, he said.

Cronin said the works were part of the museum's permanent collection dating from the last century. Cronin would not provide details on how the thieves had managed to get into the museum or why certain works had been taken.

No apparent damage was done to the museum, a former mansion built at the turn of the century in the style of a 15th century Venetian palace, Cronin said.

Topekan rescued from river

TOPEKA (AP) — A Topeka boy was rescued Sunday afternoon from the Kansas River, where he had been stranded, police said.

Chester Smith, 15, was stranded on a log in the river for about an hour before he was rescued by the Topeka Fire Department about 1:30 p.m., said Sgt. Phil Martin of the Topeka Police Department.

Smith had been fishing with a friend on the banks of the river when the two boys decided to wade in, Martin said. He said the current of the river apparently took Smith by surprise and swept him into the river before he caught the log, Martin said. The other boy made it safely back to shore, he said.

"With the rain we've had, the river is up pretty good and flowing pretty well," Martin said. "He was lucky to catch that log."

Smith was treated at a local hospital for hypothermia and released, Martin said.

Bird looks to life outside

LANSING (AP) — For the first time, Thomas Bird — one of Kansas' most notorious convicts — says he thinks he has a good chance at life beyond the Kansas State Penitentiary.

The former Emporia minister, who is serving a life sentence for the July 1983 murder of his wife, Sandra, looks forward to a life with his second wife, Terry, raising his three children and preaching the Gospel.

Tuesday, a Junction City jury found Bird not guilty of the November 1983 murder of Martin Anderson, the husband of Bird's former secretary. Now Bird thinks he can win an appeal in the case of his first wife's death. He also wants to reverse his 2-to-7-year sentence for solicitation to commit murder in connection with an earlier, unsuccessful scheme to kill Anderson.

"I'll be out with Terry and with the kids, and we'll be enjoying family life together again, and we'll be enjoying the ministry together ... just catching up on a lot of things that we haven't gotten to see the kids do, and the joys of raising the children," Bird told the Wichita Eagle for Sunday's editions.

Terry Bird admits some people cautioned her before she married an inmate. But now, she said, "I don't feel like I have pressure, that I'm married to Tom Bird who's convicted of murdering his wife because I know how I feel about Tom."

Although eager to live with her husband, Terry Bird admits she is a little apprehensive. "At times it scares me to death," she said. "Golly, what if I put the toothpaste down wrong?"

Animal industry warns against accusations of extremists

By Elvyn Jones
Collegian Reporter

Livestock producers should make sure their operations are in order so animal-rights extremists won't threaten the industry, Rustin Hamilton said.

Hamilton, communications associate for the Livestock Marketing Association, lectured to an audience of about 35 people at the Sheep Day conference March 10 in Weber Hall.

Hamilton said he feared livestock producers are losing the battle of context and are being pictured as cruel and inhuman by animal-rights activists.

This false picture represents a real threat to the future of the industry by influencing the attitudes of young and future consumers, Hamilton said. He cited a recent survey by his organization that showed the activities of animal rights and welfare activists to be one of the top five concerns of the livestock industry.

To battle this threat, the livestock industry should make sure they are not doing anything to suggest the image of cruelty in appearance and reality, such as using electrically charged prods on lambs, Hamilton said. This is especially important at fairs, sale barns and other places of high public visibility, he said.

Producers have logic on their side, while the activists exploit the appearance of cruelty, Hamilton said.

"Don't do it if it looks bad to someone who doesn't know anything about the industry," he said.

To illustrate the more immediate threat activists represent to producers, Hamilton cited recent examples of situations where activists and producers came into conflict. In one case, an animal-rights organization took credit for burning a sale barn in California because it was selling livestock to be raised on public grounds, Hamilton said.

Closer to home, he said there have been incidents of animal-rights activists harassing children showing animals at county fairs.

Hamilton said committees should be established to deal with this potential problem before the fairs.

These committees should ensure that animals at the fair are being treated humanely and that young people are educated in this necessity, he said. The committees should be in contact with local law enforcement officials before the event and be familiar with local trespassing and assault ordinances.

Hamilton said he believes a line exists between organizations with concerns about the future of endangered species — a concern he said many livestock producers share — and those extremists who have charged the livestock industry with cruelty.

Harvey County was one of eight counties to be declared disaster areas by Gov. Mike Hayden.

Great American Meatout unrealistic idea

Many of you may not realize this, but tomorrow is the Great American Meatout. The event is co-chaired by such important personalities as Doris Day, Casey Kasem, Ally Sheedy and River Phoenix. The purpose is to "kick the meat habit" for the day to "explore a less violent, more wholesome diet."

The Great American Meatout? It sounds like bull to me.

A letter to the editor gave information about the day. It would have us believe that our dietary habits are "manipulated from our earliest childhood by the meat, dairy, and other food industries..." through "slick advertising campaigns" promoting the four basic food groups.

The letter went on to proclaim the Great American Meatout as an impetus for a major dietary evolution that will "end the extermination of wildlife, clearcutting of forests, and depletion of topsoil and fresh water supplies by intensive animal agricultural practices."

It would seem that eating and using animal products is the scourge of the world — an addiction curable by attending an "animal products anonymous" meeting or something.

"Hello, my name is John, and I eat meat. It started when I was a child — first bottled milk, then hotdogs and bologna. Eventually I started going to McDonald's and cooking food on the grill at home. But I knew I was hooked when I took my parents to the Sizzler for their anniversary."

"Hello, my name is Steve, and I wear leather shoes. ..."

In reality, humans were intended to be omnivores. The basis for the four food groups can be easily understood from an examination of the human digestive system. While humans can survive on a completely vegetarian diet, meat and dairy products provide various vitamins and minerals that are difficult to obtain from vegetables. I seriously doubt that "slick advertising campaigns" by animal product producers had anything to do with the fact that meat and dairy products are important for human well-being.

The type of teeth an animal has is the first indication of what type of food that animal eats. Dogs and other carnivores have pronounced canines and sharp, bicuspid-like teeth — no "true" molars. Cattle, on the other hand, are herbivores and have nothing but incisors and large, flat molars.

The human chewing system includes incisors for cutting food into bite-sized pieces and flat molars for grinding vegetable material. But humans also have canines for cutting and tearing meat and sharp bicuspids to assist in grinding meat.

Interestingly, it is easier to eat foods like fried chicken and barbecued ribs by using the canines, rather than the incisors, to rip chunks of meat away from the bone. Of course, this practice makes for a messy face, but it does allow more effective ingestion of food.

In addition to the teeth, the entire human digestive system is equipped to process all kinds of food — meat, dairy and vegetable. Humans are monogastric, or simple stomachs — our ability to eat a variety of foods

John Mussman

COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

also means we are not adequately equipped to make the best use of any one food. Plant material is a prime example — most plant structures have virtually no nutrient value for humans, except for some vitamins and minerals.

We can eat foods such as wheat and rice because they are cooked and because machines have removed the indigestible parts of the plant — often this means most of the plant — for us.

Horses are monogastric as well, and they are entirely vegetarian. However, horses have a large cecum designed to ferment vegetable products and efficiently utilize their nutrients. A horse's cecum has some of the same functions as the rumen in cattle and sheep. Humans have neither of these structures, and thus must supplement their diets with more easily digestible foods.

One of the arguments against animal product use is the "horrible living conditions" and "exploitation" agricultural animals must endure. Granted, there are animal producers without morals or interest in their animals' well-being. But an uncomfortable or stressed-out animal will not produce well. Better animal environments mean better production and more money for the grower. So prudent animal growers — those who wish to remain in the business and make any money at it — do as much as they can to make their livestock comfortable.

Production animals are not merely exploited for one use and wasted. While much inedible plant material has no value, almost all byproducts of production animals can be salvaged for other uses. In addition to milk, meat and eggs, animals provide fertilizer, leather, hair fiber, bloodmeal and organs for protein and research. After the carcass has been stripped to the bone, the skeleton can be used to make glue. Even seemingly useless animals like male dairy cattle can find use in hamburger and leather products.

The removal of animal products will not, as the letter claimed, end the extermination of wildlife. A vegetable-producing farm supports no more wildlife than a beef ranch. It may support rabbits, but not the wildlife that originally occupied the land.

Eating vegetables will not stop depletion of topsoil or the clearcutting of forests, either. Forests must be cleared to make way for plants, just as for animals. And while topsoil may erode from feedlots faster than from farms, soil loss from pasture land is virtually zero compared to that from plowed fields.

The strangest notion the letter gives is that eliminating animal product use will end the depletion of fresh water supplies. Plants need vast quantities of water as well as animals. If humans were to become entirely vegetarian, the resulting increase in plant agriculture would demand artificial irrigation. Rainfall wouldn't even come close to supplying the need.

Assume for a moment that everyone ate vegetables, wore canvas shoes with real latex soles, endured horseback riding on canvas saddles, used no glue, and even forced vegetarianism on their carnivorous dogs and cats.

The current agricultural land could not begin to support the increased demand. More forests must be cut — if for no other reason than the fact that much of the current pasture land, such as the Flint Hills, is not arable and would have to be abandoned. More fresh water would be pumped from the ground, and more topsoil would be exposed to wind and water damage.

Land usage would be further increased by the need for plants that produce fibers and substances necessary to replace the products that animals once provided.

No one would maintain cattle and other production animals simply as pets; the very animals we are trying to save would either become extinct or turn wild, destroying more forest, using more water, and living an even more uncomfortable and delicate existence than on the farm.

Basically the whole idea of the human species turning herbivore is bull. We are designed to eat both meat and vegetables, and we cannot end water, forest and topsoil loss without eliminating all forms of agriculture. Elimination of animal agriculture is not a valid option.

New, aesthetic artwork should replace mobile

Repair work to the ceiling of the K-State Union Courtyard has forced the temporary removal of the stained-glass mobile which normally hangs there.

The removal should be permanent.

The mobile, which depicts a purple wildcat and is adorned with Greek letters, is widely regarded as an eyesore by those who can and cannot figure out what it represents.

Erected in the early 1970s, the mobile is symbolic of a time when the student body was made up of large numbers of "traditional" students between the ages of 18 and 22.

It was also a time when Greeks were more prevalent than they are in the early 1990s.

The student population currently at the University is much more diverse. Older students with families, minorities and international students make up a larger part of the student body than ever before.

And while fraternities and sororities continue to play a significant role in the life of the University, that role has declined since the mobile was erected.

Certainly, there are those who would argue that because the mobile is a gift it should be returned to the Courtyard. Yet other gifts, including buildings, have been removed to make way for changes.

Many changes have occurred at the University since the mobile was donated. A new, more appealing work of art should be placed in the Courtyard to reflect those changes.

Twisters merit respect

Those of us who spent the larger portion of spring break here in the Land of Oz traded the same old dull and gloomy beaches of Florida and Texas for some exciting weather. We got to experience the first tornado season of the '90s. And from the weather premiere last week and the twister that destroyed Hesston, it looks like an exciting decade.

Ever since Dorothy and Toto were swept away to Oz, tornadoes became our state's trademark. Tornadoes are taken for granted in Kansas — we're just too used to them.

Whenever I'm out of the state, people always ask me when our tornado season is. Or they ask, "Have YOU ever been in a tornado?"

"No. But I have been in 300 tornado watches and 67 warnings," I answer, to their disappointment.

We could use our tornadoes as a tourist attraction. They could be marketed in states with nice, boring weather, like Arizona and Florida. Then maybe we could have a tourist season.

Last Tuesday, the skies over Kansas turned black. Tornado watches flashed on and off TV screens and radios all day long. Big deal. People still packed into Aggieville and the mall, carrying on business as usual.

I was sitting in Last Chance when the big storm hit. Then the real warning came. A funnel had been sighted over Fort Riley, and it was moving east. Well, to me, that meant Manhattan. People who were not taking the warning seriously got up and looked out the windows.

"If that thing really hits, we'll just run over to Auntie Mac's," they said, laughing. I heard so many warnings and watches all day I wasn't really scared either. Now, I wish I had been scared. Officials estimate 25 tornadoes were sighted in Kansas that night.

I went home, and my roommates were just sitting there, like nothing was going on.

"It will pass," they said as they went about their business — like everyone else in Manhattan.

Well, that twister did hit. It destroyed the town of Hesston and killed two people. Doesn't anyone really believe a tornado can hit their own town?

On that tragic night I heard people in Manhattan saying things like:

"It won't really hit," or "That warning has been on TV all day — so what."

Tell that to the residents of Hesston. Being older doesn't mean we're wiser. I can remember tornado warnings scaring me into tears when I was a kid. I'd run to the basement at the first strike of lightning. But when the warning would come on television, my dad always wanted to go "twister-chasing." He'd jump in the truck and try to find it, or he'd stand on the back porch and try to sight the funnel first.

Unfortunately, tornadoes are real. They do touch ground, they do kill, and sometimes there is no escape.

Lucas Lee Fisher, a 6-year-old boy, was killed in the Hesston twister. He was in the basement. A tree was sucked into the chimney of the house, and he was crushed by the collapsing bricks.

Kansans need to take these weather warnings seriously. I've grown up hearing countless warnings and watches, but I've never actually sighted a tornado. Soon I started taking them for granted, like everyone else. Is Manhattan going to get leveled before we realize tornadoes are killers?

This storm came too close to home. Hesston isn't that far from anywhere in this state.

Everyone in Kansas should take a field trip to Hesston and get a dose of reality, witness the devastation. That twister was reported to have been on the ground for more than two hours. It could have hit Manhattan or any hometown.

Hesston residents will spend painstaking years rebuilding what was destroyed. Someday, all the businesses, homes, churches and schools will be rebuilt. But the lives of those killed by deadly twisters can never be replaced — not even in Oz.

Building on schedule

Sears' manager says new mall facility to open on time

By Erica Yenni
Collegian Reporter

Construction of the Sears, Roebuck and Co. addition on the south side of the Manhattan Town Center is ahead of schedule, mall officials said, with the planned opening scheduled for Sept. 5.

The Sears addition will feature a furniture department, expanded home appliance and home improvement departments, and an automotive center with six bays instead of three, said Ernest Dickey, store manager.

"Construction is slightly ahead of schedule, and we should hit the target date for the opening easily," Dickey said.

He said the weather has been perfect for the construction.

The Sears store, along with four other additional tenant spaces, will increase the mall to 452,000 square feet from a current 380,000 square feet.

The mall already houses a Dillard's store, a J.C. Penney store and more than 60 other retail shops.

There will be 13,500 square feet of space joining the mall to the new Sears store after completion of the addition. The Sears store will occupy 72,492 square feet.

Chris Heavey, general manager and leasing agent of the mall, said four other shops will be added to the adjoining space, but he said he was unsure what those stores would be.

"We're determining now what will be in that 13,500 foot," Heavey said. "We have ideas of what we want, and we have ideas, but we're still negotiating for that space."

He said the design of the Sears store will follow the themes already present in the rest of the mall and should blend in well. A fountain similar to the one already in front of the Dillard's store will be built in front of the entrance of Sears.

Dickey said one change to the new store will be the elimination of apparel. Only hardware, home improvement items and appliances, electronics, home decoration fashions and furniture will be available.

He said the added departments were a trade-off for fashion apparel.

Dickey said he does not fully support the elimination of apparel in the new store. However, current plans dictate that this department be dropped. Fashion apparel will still be available through the catalog.

"There will be more of an assortment and selection throughout the whole store," Dickey said.

Heavey said typically malls are structured around fashion, and attracting stores offering strictly hardware goods is difficult. He said he hopes with the addition of the new Sears, more hardware-oriented stores, such as Radio Shack, will move into the mall.

"We're looking to expand the customer base as well as the goods and services that Sears and other entities will be offering," he said.

With the expansion of the Sears store and increase in evening hours, Dickey said the store will employ about 115 people, an increase of 15.

Sears' current store, at 205 S. 4th St., which it has occupied since 1952, has become outdated, Dickey said. To become more competitive and to take advantage of the mall's access to more prospective customers, Sears needed to expand.

"We're looking forward to serving the Manhattan market and Sears' customers in a modern and updated facility," Dickey said.

Women, children obtain aid through WIC program

By Laura Scroggins
Collegian Reporter

Pregnant women and nursing mothers can learn about good nutrition and receive assistance in paying for food they need with aid from Women, Infants and Children, a county-administered program.

The WIC program, which is federally funded, provides vouchers to pay for food for about 1,500 people in Riley and Pottawatomie counties, said Karna Peterson, registered dietitian for the Riley County-Manhattan Health Department.

WIC was established in 1972 to meet the needs of low-income women and their children who, studies show, are not experiencing proper nutrition in their diets.

"I really like it. It's really helpful, especially because my husband is a full-time student," said Tonya Spencer, a Manhattan resident in the program. "It really does help."

Recipients of WIC funding from the local health department include K-State students and faculty, military dependents, and Riley and Pottawatomie county residents.

Obtaining aid from WIC is easier than getting food stamps, Peterson said. Financial requirements to receive WIC are 85 percent above federal poverty level standards.

First the incomes of applicants are assessed. Then they must undergo a blood test to check for nutritional deficiencies and answer questions about medical history and eating habits, said Beth Lambert, registered dietitian for the health department.

Financial need is not the only criterion on which the aid is based, she said. A nutritionally deficient woman or child will receive additional consideration.

According to a WIC pamphlet, the foods that qualify for the program are selected to supply the nutrients most crucial for the health of children and pregnant women.

These items consist of eight types of infant formula, unsweetened juices, cereal, milk, natural cheeses, eggs, dried beans, peas and peanut butter.

Recipients select items at one of several area grocery stores, then present vouchers as payment.

Two-year recipient Therese Stump said the program strictly outlines what groceries can be bought with the vouchers.

"Everything is really concise," Stump said.

The specific items listed on the vouchers are determined during interviews and analyses of the recipients' diets. No unhealthy foods, cigarettes or alcohol can be purchased with the vouchers.

"You can't abuse the system," Stump said. "That's probably the biggest thing the program has going for it — that and the education."

Vouchers can be obtained in the health department two days each month.

Recipients usually receive vouchers for six months unless they move, request to be taken off the program or fail to pick up their vouchers two months in a row. After six months, recipients are asked to return for re-evaluation of their incomes and diets, according to the pamphlet.

Recipients are encouraged to attend nutrition information classes while they are on the program. These are designed to educate the women about cost-efficient ways to achieve high nutritional content in their diets.

Five classes are offered this month. The first, "What's In My Food?" will discuss the six types of nutrients and their functions in the body.

The classes and the WIC newsletter have been the most valuable, said Stump, who enjoys the recipes suggested.

WIC is different from other federal aid programs, Peterson said.

"It's not an easy thing to ask for help, but they're nothing but nice at the Health Department," said Manhattan resident and WIC participant Patricia Price.

Jail

tween two and 12 years old are enrolled in the center, and children walking along Juliette Avenue to the school playground would see the facility.

"Does anyone want a jail across from a school?" she said.

Thomas said construction of the addition would improve the appearance of the jail area because mobile homes used for evidence storage would be removed. He also said the proposed building will not look like a jail and will not have large glass windows with steel bars.

"It will be an attractive building with narrow glass block windows," Thomas said.

He said the windows would be perpendicular and about five or six inches wide so prisoners could not break out the glass and escape.

Neighborhood resident Richard Bachamp said any escaped inmates from the jail could pose a threat to neighborhood children.

"Where I've lived I've seen three escapes," Bachamp said. "My son had a gun drawn down on him by an officer when he was riding his tricycle one time, because the prisoners were running through the alleys."

Thomas said other locations for the jail have been considered, including a site in a downtown block northwest of the county offices. This option would cost 50 percent more than building at the current site and would also involve condemning residential and church property, he said.

Another possible site is near the federal Job Corps training facility near the Manhattan Municipal Airport, Thomas said. If the jail is built there, it would be six miles farther from the courthouse, he said, and would cost about $100,000 a year for additional mileage and officer travel time.

"There isn't a whole lot of choice in it, really," Thomas said.

Bachamp said prisoners would be escorted by two officers with a patrol car regardless of where the jail was located.

"It's a bunch of hogwash when they talk about proximity to the courthouse," he said.

Bachamp said he is concerned about having a jail so close to Monsignor Luckey Junior High School, where his son is in sixth grade.

"We're not against building a jail — it's just the location of it," Bachamp said. "It shouldn't be near any school."

Thomas said the jail currently occupies one of three city blocks designated by the state Legislature as public squares in 1857. The land was designated for county use in 1867, and the first jail was built there in 1868. He said records show the Catholic school purchased the land near the jail in 1908.

Manhattan Catholic Schools athletic director and physical education teacher Kevin Lunsford said the school's ball teams use the open lot adjacent to the current jail for practices. College students and neighborhood children also use it, he said.

Although the school uses the lot for a practice field, there has not been previous objection to the jail's presence.

"Their (current) objection is a little bit shallow," Thomas said.

Bachamp said the proposed jail site is landlocked, which would require the condemnation of residential property for future expansion. Also, he said soil tests at the site indicate additional stories could not be added to the planned jail.

Johnson said the plans allow for a future building addition, housing 50 prisoners, to be made on an open lawn area north of the facility. He said he expects it would be 25 to 30 years before the addition would be needed.

The new jail is not needed to house more prisoners, Johnson said, but to adequately house the number regularly imprisoned. He said the majority of imprisonments are not DUI related, and no contracts have been made to bring in prisoners from outside Riley County. Any increases in prisoner population would occur whether the jail was built or not, he said.

During consolidation of city and county police facilities in 1974, a building designed as a garage was built to temporarily house jail administration, Johnson said.

"It wasn't even designed to be an administration building or a jail building," he said. "You've got the police department operating out of a garage."

The County Commission is required by law to provide adequate facilities for the police department, Johnson said.

Thomas said approval of an estimated $6.8 million for the building would be needed by voters during primary elections in August. The project could be financed through an increased mill levy on property tax, he said, or through a specific county-wide sales tax, both of which would need voter consent.

Thomas said the Commission believes it is important to bring the funding issue before voters, although there are other ways to finance the addition.

If voters approved funding, construction could start in 1991 for occupancy in 1992, he said.

The proposal includes constructing the two present buildings and constructing a new facility onto the current jail building, Thomas said. The garage that serves as the administration building would be used for evidence processing and storage, he said, while the present jail would be gutted and restructured to house investigation and training facilities.

He said a county-wide advisory council and a criminal justice advisory council have met separately and both contributed to the planning of the jail.

"We've relied rather heavily on what they have had to say," Thomas said. "The input in the planning has been broadly based in the community."

He said the citizens' committee has traveled to view modern jail facilities in St. Joseph and Liberty, Mo. Also, every professional member of the police department was interviewed by consultants during the studies.

Because it was specified that the new jail facility meet both Kansas Department of Corrections and federal standards, Thomas said the Commission has been limited in the designs it could consider. Also, the Commission has relied on city and county judges to predict future trends in prisoner housing needs.

"We have no control over who is sentenced to be put in that facility."

Senators first passed an amendment deleting an item in the bill allowing the Athletic Ticket Sales Committee to ask for removal of unsightly objects during the annual campout for basketball tickets. Another amendment, proposed by Todd Giefer, engineering senator, changed minor wordings and switched the order of some of the bill's sections.

In other business, Senate approved members to the ticket sales committee, positions for the FONE Crisis Center coordinator and assistant coordinator, and positions of public relations director and executive assistant to Johnson's cabinet. The positions were recently made available when Charlene Nichols resigned as public relations director.

Senate also heard first readings of a Student Publications fee proposed to offset changes in the tax codes that charge taxes on all items purchased by it.

Wade said the reconstruction of the accident showed that excessive speed was involved in the wreck.

'Cats bow out to Xavier in first round

Wildcat forward Billy Ray Smith snags a rebound during first-half action of the K-State-Xavier matchup in the NCAA Midwest Regional in Indianapolis' Hoosier Dome. Smith's inside play and Steve Henson's 35-point performance was not enough to topple the Musketeers.

Musketeers stifle late K-State rally to advance in Midwest Regional

By David Svoboda
Sports Reporter

INDIANAPOLIS — And then the well went dry.

For K-State, the "well" for four years was a scrappy guard from McPherson who never said die. The word simply wasn't in his vocabulary.

But on Friday, though he scored 35 points and hit an array of dazzling shots, Steve Henson's magic just wasn't enough.

The result: an 87-79 win by Xavier at the Hoosier Dome in the first round of the NCAA Tournament that spelled the end of the Wildcats' season and the end of Henson's career.

The 35-point effort tied a K-State tourney record for the most points in an NCAA game. Chuckie Williams had the same number against Syracuse in 1975.

And the Friday performance by Henson came before the largest crowd ever to witness an NCAA first- or second-round game: 39,417. The crowd was also the biggest to ever watch a K-State contest.

But Henson's heroics weren't enough. An 8-0 Xavier run at the end of the first half saw to that.

"I thought it was a ballgame that Xavier pretty much dictated, especially with their run at the end of the first half," K-State coach Lon Kruger said. "We made a little run at them at the end, but they responded like you'd expect a good basketball team to do."

It was most assuredly a game of spurts, and Henson was involved in most of them.

The most important may have come over the final 3:04 of the first half.

After Jean Derouillere hit a short jumper to bring K-State to within two, 34-32, the Musketeers ran off eight straight points as the final minutes of the opening stanza ticked off the clock.

"We had a couple of shots there that we missed and a couple of others that we hurried, and that was obviously a big difference in the ballgame," Kruger said of the final moments of the first half.

K-State's inability to score late in the opening 20 minutes was in large part the result of a "triangle-and-two" zone defense employed by Xavier.

The defense, also used with success by Oklahoma State in the Cowboys' first-round, 82-78 Big Eight tourney win over K-State, had a triangle of defenders taking on three Wildcats with Henson and Derouillere being trailed by single defenders man-to-man.

"We couldn't stop Steve Henson, and we thought if we were going to get beat, we'd let someone else beat us," Xavier coach Pete Gillen said.

"We spurted there (at the end of the first half) and played good defense," he continued. "I think the triangle-and-two had an effect."

"We played a little conservatively for a while, and if it was a half-court game, K-State definitely would have won. We practice on the triangle-and-two maybe once a week at most."

"We just felt Oklahoma State had some success with it and that we might be able to as well. Henson is such a great player, and Derouillere is a great offensive player. We had to counter."

Kruger said Xavier did just that. "That type of defense is geared to take a player out of the offense," he said. "They put some pressure on other people to step up and take some shots, and we had some people take a couple of shots when Steve wasn't taking them, and we missed them."

Though K-State failed to respond late in the first half, the game was far

Netters 33-3 during break in Vegas; doubles play strong

From Staff and Wire Reports

The K-State tennis team came just three matches shy of going perfect during its four-day swing through Las Vegas, Nev., during spring break.

The Wildcat women went 33-3 in four matches on the UNLV campus against Cal State-Northridge, Utah State, North Texas and Yale.

"I think the trip went very well," K-State coach Steve Bietau said. "The competition wasn't quite as good as what we had expected, but I think the results were a combination of the teams not being quite as strong and also our performing well."

"We played some teams that we should beat, and we beat them decisively."

Bietau was most impressed with the play of his doubles teams. The K-State women didn't lose a doubles match in the four days and only lost one set, cruising through the field easily.

"We are really starting to excel at doubles," Bietau said. "Our doubles have been very sharp. We played practically error-free tennis in the first part of the first two matches."

The trip started with a 9-0 sweep of Northridge and Utah State. Then North Texas' No. 1 singles player, Susan Minz, edged K-State's Marjike Nel to give K-State its first loss in 19 matches.

Nel had handed Minz a 6-2 defeat in the first set of the match between the two, but then Minz rallied to capture the final two sets 6-4 and 6-3 to take the match.

K-State's only other two losses came against defending Ivy League champion Yale.

Bietau said the team not only played well, but did so under some adverse conditions. Against Utah State, he said the temperature was about 40 degrees, and matches had to be interrupted due to blowing sand.

"The sand got in your eyes and mouth," Bietau said. "It was not very pleasant the whole time we were there. I think the average temperature for the four days was probably around 50."

Henson ends career in purple

Point guard tallies 35 in 'Cat tourney loss

By David Svoboda
Sports Reporter

INDIANAPOLIS — Pete Gillen isn't a football player, and the Hoosier Dome was configured for basketball, not an NFL game.

That didn't keep the Xavier coach from suggesting he was very close Friday to demonstrating his talent in another area.

Steve Henson was the reason Gillen sounded ready to don shoulder pads and a helmet.

"I was thinking, 'Oh, my God, he's possessed.' He was getting every loose ball and diving all over the place," Gillen said. "I was going to go out and tackle him myself just to stop him."

Gillen never did bolt onto the floor during his team's eight-point win over the Wildcats to stop Henson, but very few would have blamed him if he had.

Henson scored 35 points, had six three-point shots, was a perfect 7-of-7 at the line, had four steals and played all 40 minutes.

Whew.

"Steve Henson is an unbelievable basketball player," said Gillen, sounding more like a political campaign manager than an opposing coach. "He's just a winner. His mental toughness and his great desire just permeate that team. They feed off him."

Henson provided his mates with a rather tasty meal against the Musketeers, but he wasn't satisfied. Losing never satisfies Henson.

"I scored some points today, but I didn't get back on defense," Henson said. "They scored a bunch of quick baskets, and that's my responsibility — to be back there."

Though he may not have made it back defensively once or twice during the contest, his effort on both ends of the floor didn't go unnoticed by his coach.

It's the type of effort Lon Kruger doesn't know if he'll be able to see equalled.

"It's going to be different," Kruger said of life after Henson. "We haven't gone to a practice or played a game without Steve Henson."

"He's done so many things for us. He's set the tone for us for four years and set the tone in fall and spring conditioning programs."

"He has so much respect from the other players that it makes our jobs as coaches so much easier. I guess I'll have to work harder without him."

The process of working without Henson has now begun for Kruger. But it didn't come until a loss that Henson had a tough time swallowing — for himself and his fellow seniors.

Henson couldn't quite decide if last year's NCAA loss to Minnesota or this one against Xavier was tougher to take.

"I don't know if one was worse than the other," he said. "Both were losses, and both were final games for quite a few people."

Henson and his four senior teammates left the floor for a final time in purple and white Friday. In doing so, an era was over, a chapter completed.

But don't look for Henson's competitiveness to die just yet. That desire is as strong as ever, he said.

"Now is way too early," Henson said of talk that his competitive edge might be lessening. "If it would ever have decreased up to this point, it would have been time to check in the sneakers."

Steve Henson ended his college career by scoring 62 total points in his last two outings at the Big Eight and NCAA tournaments.

NCAA field down to 16

By The Associated Press

Goodbye Michigan, Purdue, Arizona and Georgetown. So long Terry Holland. See ya Big Eight. Welcome back UCLA. Hello again, Duke. Join the party, Loyola Marymount.

It was another wild and wacky day at the NCAA tournament Sunday as eight more teams advanced to the final 16.

Defending champion Michigan was blown out 149-115 by Loyola Marymount, a team determined to win it all for its late star, Hank Gathers. The game featured seven tournament records, including most total points and most points by one team.

UCLA, which used to win the tournament all the time under John Wooden, made the "Sweet Sixteen" for the first time in a decade by beating Kansas 71-70. The loss knocked the powerful Big Eight, which had three No. 1 teams this season, out of the tournament.

Purdue, Arizona and Georgetown, big names from big conferences, were eliminated by teams from lightly regarded leagues. Xavier, from the Midwestern Collegiate Conference, beat Big East beast Georgetown 74-71. Texas, from the Southwest Conference, edged Purdue 73-72, leaving only two of the Big Ten's seven entries left in the tournament. Alabama, from the Southeastern Conference, dealt Arizona a 77-55 setback.

Syracuse ended Holland's coaching career by beating Virginia 63-61, and Duke reached the final 16 for the fifth straight year with a 76-72 victory over St. John's.

East

Duke 76, St. John's 72

At Atlanta, Robert Brickey made a tiebreaking basket with 32 seconds left and added two free throws with nine seconds remaining to lift Duke.

The senior forward, who finished with 22 points, also hit four straight free throws on one play midway through the second half to help cut St. John's lead to four.

Duke improved to 26-8, while St. John's finished 24-10.

UCLA 71, Kansas 70

Freshman Tracy Murray hit two free throws with nine seconds left, sending UCLA to the final 16 for the first time since losing the title game in 1980.

Trevor Wilson gave UCLA a 69-68 lead on a layup, but Kevin Pritchard put Kansas back in front on a pair of free throws with 29 seconds left.

After Murray was fouled, Kansas called two consecutive time outs in an attempt to rattle him.

Southeast

Syracuse 63, Virginia 61

At Richmond, Va., Derrick Coleman stopped a furious Virginia rally with a game-saving block on the final play.

After rallying from 15 points down in the second half, Virginia had a chance to win. But as 6-foot-5

Bryant Stith tried to score underneath with four seconds left, 6-10 Coleman swatted the ball toward midcourt and time expired as players dived after it. Stith led Virginia (20-12) with 30 points.

Minnesota 81, N. Iowa 78

Willie Burton scored a career-high 36 points as Minnesota held off upstart Northern Iowa.

Burton, a senior forward, scored 17 points as the Gophers built a 46-40 halftime lead. He then scored Minnesota's first 11 points of the second half, and his jumper in the lane put the Gophers ahead to stay at 61-60 with 10:57 left.

Minnesota (22-8) advanced to the regional semis for the second straight year. Northern Iowa, which shocked No. 11 Missouri in the opening round, wound up 23-9, the most victories since the school joined Division I in 1980.

At Long Beach, Calif., Loyola Marymount routed Michigan with a record-setting scoring performance.

The Lions (25-5), playing two weeks after Gathers' sudden death, used their stifling press and a barrage of 3-pointers to beat the taller Wolverines.

The loss snapped Coach Steve Fisher's string of seven straight NCAA tourney victories, including six en route to last year's title. Michigan finished the season 23-8.

Jeff Fryer scored 41 points and Bo Kimble 37 for Loyola, which had never advanced to the regionals in five prior NCAA appearances. Fryer's 11 shots from 3-point range broke the tournament record of 10 by UNLV's Freddie Banks in 1987.

Alabama 77, Arizona 55

At Long Beach, Calif., Arizona, a team from the desert, couldn't survive a drought against Alabama.

The Crimson Tide held Arizona scoreless for more than seven minutes in the second half and routed the No. 14 Wildcats 77-55 Sunday to reach the NCAA regional semifinals for the fourth time in six years.

Arizona guard Matt Muchlebach said the Wildcats were frustrated by Alabama's defensive quickness.

"They were really active with their hands and their feet moving everywhere," he said.

It was the lowest point total in three seasons for Arizona, which was averaging 80 per game. Brian Williams, who had a career-high 28 points in the Wildcats' opening-round victory over South Florida, was bothered by sore knees against Alabama and did not score.

"It was obvious to us early that he was not going to be much help," Arizona coach Lute Olson said.

David Benoit had 20 points for No. 23 Alabama, which will play Loyola Marymount Friday at the West Regional in Oakland, Calif. Loyola routed defending national champion Michigan 149-115 earlier in the day.

"I don't think I ever had a team play closer to the way we asked them to play," Alabama coach Wimp Sanderson said. "We controlled the tempo of the game and played good, smart basketball."

Arizona (25-7), which trailed by five at halftime, cut the margin to two on a pair of free throws by Ed Stokes early in the second half.

But Alabama (26-8) scored the next 14 points for a 58-42 lead with 10:13 remaining. Robert Horry, held scoreless in the first half, hit two 3-pointers and Benoit had two baskets during the run.

"We were trying to find something to stop them," Olson said. "They were scoring against the zone. They were scoring against the zone."

Although Arizona had a big size advantage, Alabama won the battle of the boards. 41-29.

Xavier's Tyrone Hill drives past K-State center John Rettiger in the Musketeers' victory over the 'Cats Friday. Hill had 29 points in the game.

Game

Henson showed the greatness Gillen spoke of during the longest Wildcat spurt of the contest midway through the second half.

After Tyrone Hill, who led Xavier with 29 points, hit a turnaround in the lane with 12:51 left to lift the Musketeers to their biggest lead, 60-45, Henson stole the show.

Over the next 8:39, Henson scored 15 points as K-State went on a 21-9 spurt to cut the Xavier lead to three, 69-66. There was 4:12 left.

Included in the run were two three-point shots, one "conventional" three-point play, two field goals and two additional free throws.

"Great players make great shots in big basketball games," Gillen said of Henson. "We were frustrated. We tried to stop him, and a couple of times, with a player right in his face, he still made his shots."

The effort even left Kruger, who had seen several such performances over the four years the duo had been together, somewhat at a loss for words.

"Certainly, it was fitting what he did today," Kruger said. "He's done everything for us. They just wouldn't back off, and he hit every big shot. I'm awfully proud and happy for him."

Henson, however, would have been happier had he been able to bring his team all the way back. After the margin was cut to three, the Wildcats got no closer.

"We knew it was going to come," Henson said of the eventuality of playing his final game. "We just were hoping it wouldn't come so soon."

"It's disappointing. I feel like we could have done some things at the end of the first half to keep things close and not have had such a hill to climb in the second half."

"We didn't do what we needed for 40 minutes, and against good teams, you can't have any lapses. They'll kill you."

K-State's final "death" with Henson in purple and white left the Wildcats at 17-15 on the year. Xavier, with the win, moved to 27-4.

"I thought our guys worked awfully hard, but sometimes effort alone isn't quite good enough when you're working against outstanding people," Kruger said.

Capriati advances at Players

By The Associated Press

KEY BISCAIYNE, Fla. — Thirteen-year-old Jennifer Capriati won her third-round match Sunday at the International Players Championships when Patty Fendick had to default after she sustained a knee injury while leading 4-2 in the first set.

Fendick, seeded No. 31, said her right knee locked as she hit a backhand approach shot. She stumbled while retreating for a Capriati lob and then collapsed along the baseline.

After a trainer examined the injury, Fendick decided she couldn't continue and left the court with a bandage wrapped around her knee. A tournament doctor said the extent of the injury wouldn't be determined for about 24 hours.

Capriati, 8-1 since turning pro earlier this month, lost her serve at love in the second game and fell behind 3-0. She was ahead 30-0 in the seventh game with Fendick serving when the match ended.

"I never want to win like that," Capriati said. "I feel sorry for her. She was playing great, too."

In the only match completed prior to a four-hour rain delay, third-seeded Monica Seles needed just 42 minutes to beat Laura Lapi 6-1, 6-1. Seles, ranked fifth, reached the finals three times last year as a 15-year-old rookie but failed to make the finals in any of her first three tournaments in 1990.

"My game is still not as good as last year," she said. "I'm not hitting the ball as well. Hopefully it'll come back."

Late Saturday night, No. 2 men's seed Boris Becker outlasted 17-year-old qualifier Fabrice Santoro 6-3, 5-7, 6-2.

OFF THE BENCH

Wildcats belonged

INDIANAPOLIS — Yes, Virginia, K-State did belong in the NCAA Tournament.

As I sat in the "Chicago" Room of Kansas City's Hyatt Regency Crown Center March 11, I wondered if the NCAA's selection committee would give me a chance to travel at the end of spring break.

It did, and it was off to watch the Wildcats in Indiana.

K-State entered the tourney with the worst winning percentage of any of the 64 teams in the field, and its 14 losses were only matched by one other school.

So what. As committee members so eloquently pointed out, strength of schedule does count for something today. It means more than 20 wins against less-than-tough competition.

And it should.

Heading into Friday's opening-round game against Xavier, the Wildcats had something to prove, however. They had to prove they belonged.

They did.

If you don't believe me, listen to the new K-State sports information director and chief publicist, Pete Gillen.

Gillen might not be the SID (Kennedy Mossman is still the boss at sports info), but he ought to be.

"Lon Kruger has done a tremendous job with his basketball team," Gillen said after his Xavier team handed Kruger and Co. an 87-79 defeat. "We beat a terrific basketball team. We played just about as well as we can play."

"We needed every ounce of our good play to beat a very fine team."

And though K-State was 17-14 going into the game, Gillen put forth an emphatic "so what."

"They're a heck of a lot better basketball team than 17-14. They play a brutal schedule," he said. "They have a lot to be proud of."

Indeed they do, Pete.

Though the Wildcats won but five of their final 10 games and finished 17-15, the losses were against good teams.

Kansas, Missouri and Oklahoma were all ranked No. 1. Oklahoma State was on the NCAA selection committee's final list before being cut. Xavier was in the top 25 all year.

Take that, you shallow sports writers who said the 'Cats wouldn't make it and blasted their stretch run. Were you watching the same games I was? And weren't those five losses all on the road or on neutral courts?

Yep, Mizzou pulled an elf-fold, but those five teams were — and are — tough.

Kruger said basically the same thing, without the defiant thumbing of the nose I've just delivered.

"Especially in the second half (of the Xavier game), they (the Wildcats) played pretty much like they have in the last month, and that month earned them the right to be there."

It also earned a very deserving player a chance for a final bow.

I know his "obituary" appeared here two Mondays ago, but here's an addendum: Steve Henson's No. 12 should be retired.

A rather bold statement, maybe, but here's why I believe K-State needs to break with tradition and bestow the honor.

First of all, the leading scorer in K-State history, Mike Evans, wore No. 12 before Henson. And the first coach to ever take a K-State team to four straight NCAA berths, Kruger, wore it, too.

But Henson's feats complete the argument.

He is the fourth-leading scorer in school history. He has the most assists and steals ever by a Wildcat. He holds the Big Eight record for consecutive free throws made. And he holds all seven Big Eight three-point field goal records.

Get Evans to come to Manhattan next Oct. 15 for Midnight Madness, have Henson come home as well, and have Kruger unveil the jersey to be hung from the Bramlage rafters along with the championship banners.

It belongs there, just like Kruger and Henson belonged in the Big Dance this year.

Women earn elite status

From Staff and Wire Reports

Four members of the K-State women's track team garnered all-American status at the NCAA championships March 9-10 at the Hoosier Dome in Indianapolis.

Angie Miller led the K-State quartet with a fourth-place finish in the shot put. Her toss of 49-7 wasn't her best mark of the season, but it was enough to reach her all-American goal.

"I think the distance of the throw wasn't great, but I'm happy with her placing," K-State coach John Capriati said. "She's been consistent around 50 feet, and that's what we wanted going into this year."

Joining Miller in the nation's group of elite performers were triple jumper Carla Shannon, high jumper Connie Teaberry and distance runner Janet Haskin.

Shannon finished sixth in her specialty with a leap of 41-2½; Teaberry was also sixth, going 5-10½; and Haskin was ninth in the 3,000 meters with a time of 9:30.93, just 1.1 second off her career-best time, which she had set a day earlier in the preliminaries.

Sprinter Joy Jones failed to make the finals in the 55 meters.

The K-State women placed 32nd in the team standings with 5½ points. Texas won the NCAA women's title.

Gallery presents works of women artists

Exhibition lives up to name with vibrant colors, images

Rod Gillespie

REVIEW

"Impact," an exhibition featuring the works of Nebraska women, lives up to its name — upon entering the K-State Union Art Gallery, the viewer is immediately struck by an explosion of vibrant colors and images.

The exhibition includes several pieces that one might expect to see in a showing by Nebraskans — rural landscapes of the Cornhusker state. Imbued with rich earth tones, Mary Murphy's acrylic "Christina's Garden" is almost a photograph of Nebraska countryside. Depicting tree-lined and plowed fields, the work utilizes soft brush strokes to evoke a pastoral calm.

A similar realism is evidenced in the sharper, more precise brushstrokes that characterize Anne Burkholder's "Horizon Otoe County Road." The work traces the path of a country road through bucolic farm surroundings.

"Prairie Steppes, III," a watercolor by Susan Puelz, is a more abstract representation of the agrarian landscape. With its vivid neon pink and turquoise stripes, the work is reminiscent of a prairie sunset. The flow of the layers of color is almost rhythmic, pulsing with life.

"Standing Farmers #24," a ceramic/wood sculpture by Ladelles Stonecipher, eloquently captures a moment in rural life. Two farmers, clad in coveralls and seed company hats, stand in a field — perhaps discussing this year's prospects.

"Lilac Time," an acrylic by Carol Pettit, juxtaposes the angular permanence of a farm house with the transitory blur of spring. In a burst of violet on green, the lilac bloom asserts its seasonal dominance of the front yard.

There is more to "Impact" than simply rural Nebraskan themes, however. Barbara Kastner's acrylic "Other Side of the Lake" uses subdued blue tones to portray a lakeside settlement at night. Kastner's effective use of color to describe light and shadow effectively captures the eerie way light dances on water.

Two other pieces in the exhibition stand out because of their exquisite rendering of the unique properties of light.

In her watercolor "Simplism of Light," Dora Hagge uses rounded and angular surfaces to examine the interplay between the light and shadow. In the piece, a sliver of light illuminates eggs in a metal colander — casting a lacework shadow in an otherwise dark room. The painting is a study in realism — the work could be mistaken for a photograph.

In "Still Life with Jar and Dried Bouganvillea," Sue Olsen-Mandler uses transparent watercolors to describe the gentle but persistent travel of light through translucent objects. At the center of the piece, a jar spills its floral contents across a table. Light enters from a nearby window and filters playfully through delicate curtains, glass candleholders and the jar itself.

One particularly striking piece is Bobbie Baltzer-Jacobo's acrylic "Demolition Day." The piece freezes time to capture a moment in the demolition of an aging house. The house stands ripped open, its innards and history spilling out. Each room tells a story — one has a crucifix on the wall, another a black velvet nude. Ghosts of the house's former inhabitants wander through the grounds, serving as a reminder of the past. A modern apartment building lurks in the background — perhaps to symbolize the unavoidable march of progress.

In Karen Deinstbier's "Turkish Tapestry #3," floral patterns explode from a multi-colored Native American blanket, literally jumping off the rough paper she used as a canvas.

"Kitchen Shelf," a batik soft sculpture by Sammy Lynn, represents a refreshing departure from canvas as a medium. The shelf, with its Ball Mason Jars filled with assorted preserves, looks as if it were taken from Grandma's kitchen.

Another notable departure from canvas is Nancy Childs Chaplin's "Cielo Azuro" (Blue Sky), a collage made from found objects, cardboard and corrugated paper. The piece, utilizing bright turquoise and softer earth hues, resembles an elaborate fan.

Overall, the exhibit is quite good. There are some weaker pieces, notably Amy A. Saddle's garish "Nebraska Courtship," a two-piece print that superimposes two swimwear-clad Nebraskans dancing a courtship dance with two geese doing the same. The thought here is admirable, but the execution poor. This piece should have been placed further away from the Gallery entrance — to avoid scaring away potential viewers.

Lynn Soloway's "Vision of Sheila" is another painting worth missing. This Nagel-esque monstrosity depicts a woman of the '90s, clad in a slinky gown, nipples erect and scarab purse in hand, ready for a night of nightclubbing. One has to wonder what the point here is, beyond decoration.

Despite its weaknesses, the exhibit is recommended.

Duet singing service begins

Students offer Latin American serenades to community

By Cosima Hadidi
Staff Reporter

Not everyone has the talent or the courage to sing and play the guitar for their beloved. People on campus and in the Manhattan community can now hire serenaders to do the job for them.

Alex Britos-Bray, junior in animal sciences and industry, and Uzziel Pecina, senior in Spanish and education, practice the art of singing Hispanic love songs accompanied by the guitar.

"I am from Paraguay, and at home, as in most Latin American countries, serenading is something very ordinary," Britos-Bray said. "It was nothing special for my friends and me to go serenading on the weekend. But people here are not used to it at all, and being serenaded is something very special."

Britos-Bray said he learned how to sing in his childhood from traditional songs and songs played at parties his parents gave.

"I used to sing with a group of serenaders, but I did not learn how to play the guitar until I came to the United States three years ago, bought a guitar and started practicing on my own," he said.

Pecina, on the other hand, has been playing guitar for more than 12 years.

"My love of music comes from my parents, who are from Mexico," Pecina said. "I used to play the guitar with another trio in Kansas City, but my main focus was rock 'n' roll. When I came to Manhattan I started playing by myself for other people."

Pecina started serenading again for a fund raiser.

"I lived at Putnam Hall and had a Puerto Rican roommate," Pecina said. "Putnam Hall had a fund raiser in which residents of the hall would go and read stories to people at night and tuck them in. My roommate and I would go and play them serenades instead of reading a story, and people loved it. They would ask for us specifically to come and sing to them."

Britos-Bray and Pecina were originally with a group of five or six singers from the Hispanic American Leadership Organization on campus. The group thought of something unique for Valentine's Day this year.

"We put up fliers around campus offering to serenade people on Valentine's Day," Britos-Bray said. "The response was great. We gave about 25 serenades, and people greatly enjoyed them. At first I didn't know what to expect, how people would react. But when I saw how much they liked it, I relaxed."

"The original group of serenaders gets together for conventions and such, but right now it is just Alex and I who serenade," Pecina said.

The duo serenades at any location.

"One day a woman asked us to serenade a bartender at the Rock-a-Belly Bar and Deli," Britos-Bray said. "We checked with the manager first to make sure it was okay. When we went there, the place was packed. After we finished serenading, everyone was clapping and cheering. It was great. We really had a lot of fun. Plus, we got free beer."

They also performed at an elementary school, to the great enjoyment of the teachers and students, Britos-Bray said.

The cost of a serenade is $10, and it usually consists of four to five love songs.

"We usually go by how much people are enjoying it," Britos-Bray said. "If they are really having a good time, we enjoy playing more and sometimes play up to six or seven songs, but if people have a negative attitude towards us, we play just three songs because we want people to have a good time."

Celebrities plan to visit Abilene for anniversary

By The Collegian Staff

Theodore "Beaver" Cleaver and former President Richard Nixon are coming to Kansas.

Jerry Mathers, the actor who played Cleaver in the 1950s television program "Leave it to Beaver," is scheduled to visit Abilene in June to take part in a year-long celebration of the 100th anniversary of the birth of that city's most famous son.

During the week of June 2, the Eisenhower Center in Abilene will sponsor "The Fabulous Fifties," a reminiscing look at the Eisenhower presidential years, said Colleen Cearley, public affairs specialist at the Center.

Cearley said since Eisenhower was president in the 1950s, it was decided to highlight the decade. The center has planned activities reviewing not only the world events of that decade but also the changing culture that occurred during those years, Cearley said.

Throughout 1990 at the Center, "Centennial Forum" will feature prominent Americans who will speak on current issues. Nixon is one of the key speakers who has agreed to appear. He is scheduled to speak at the Center Sept. 8.

Although Jan. 29 was the official starting date of a year commemorating Dwight D. Eisenhower's birth, there are activities planned to last throughout the year.

Every Sunday in February the Center showed movies that were viewed by Eisenhower when he lived in the White House.

Cearley said the response to the movies was encouraging and she hopes the enthusiasm continues through the year.

Another event scheduled at the Center to last from May 19 until Nov. 11 is a special exhibit titled "White House Treasures," which will feature artifacts from U.S. presidents, including Thomas Jefferson's spectacles and a 1,500 pound electric horse owned by Calvin Coolidge, which he rode in his White House bedroom. For the opening of the "White House Treasures" display, Cearley said the Center has invited Vice President Dan Quayle and Don Wilson, head archivist of the United States. Although Quayle has not yet said whether he will attend, Cearley said the staff was very excited that Wilson has scheduled a visit for May.

The daughters of Presidents Gerald Ford, Jimmy Carter and Nixon have been invited to take part in "The Living White House," July 14. This will feature children of past presidents who lived in the White House, discussing what life was like on Pennsylvania Avenue.

In October, an Eisenhower family reunion, a visit from a delegation of Soviet students and a display of World War II military aircraft are scheduled.

Eisenhower's birthday is Oct. 14, and the year's activities will climax that week.

Cearley said Center staff members want people to be aware of Eisenhower's life and his contributions. "We hope the public will utilize the Center more, since their tax dollars do support it and since Eisenhower was such a prominent person from Kansas," Cearley said.

Cearley said the Center averages about 130,000 visitors a year. She said most of these visitors are from outside Kansas, since Abilene is located on Interstate 70.

Pat McKee, director of the convention and visitor's bureau in Abilene, said she expects the normal visitor figures for Abilene to triple this year.

McKee said she expects the centennial to generate revenue and to be a boost for the community and the state.

"From the tourism standpoint, we want to get people in here and show what we have to offer, and since most of the visitors will have to travel through Kansas to get to Abilene, we feel there are many opportunities for the state in addition to Abilene," McKee said.

Musical comedy uplifts Monroe's success

By Richard Jones
Collegian Reviewer

Editor's Note: This is the third in a series of articles about Marilyn Monroe. Details about her life come from "God-dess: the Secret Lives of Marilyn Monroe," by Anthony Summers.

"Hollywood's a place where they'll pay you a thousand dollars for a kiss and fifty cents for your soul."

— Marilyn Monroe

In 1953, under the direction of Howard Hawks, Marilyn Monroe was paired with Jane Russell in a musical comedy called "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes."

20th Century Fox had purchased film rights to "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes" with the intention of making it a project for Betty Grable. Monroe was originally hired to play the joking character of Dorothy Shaw, and Fox planned to dye Monroe's hair back to its original brown color for the film.

It was eventually decided that Grable, who was quickly losing ground to Monroe in her popularity as a sex symbol, would be removed from the project all together. Much like in "Niagara," when she surpassed Jean Peters, Monroe was promoted to the more visible character of Lorelei Lee, and Jane Russell was hired for the role of Dorothy. Monroe's hair color was unaltered.

As Lorelei, Monroe plays a money-hungry dancer/singer who has just become engaged to a wealthy man by the name of Gus Esmond, played by Tommy Noonan. Russell plays Dorothy Shaw, Lorelei's stage partner and best friend.

The film opens with the two performing in front of an audience that includes Lorelei's fiancé. Following the performance, the ladies return to their backstage dressing room, where they are soon joined by Gus, bearing a diamond ring for his soon-to-be bride.

When he asks Lorelei if the ring is the right size, she misunderstands, looks at the diamond and says, "Well, it can never be too big. Do you think that's too small, Dorothy?"

The couple announces their plans to be married in Europe but, Gus' father doesn't approve of Lorelei, so the groom must stay behind and send her ahead. Lorelei is accompanied by Dorothy, who is serving as chaperone.

The ship's guest list also includes a child millionaire, that year's Olympic team and Ernie Malone, played by Elliott Reed, a private detective hired by Gus' father to watch Lorelei.

Dorothy meets Sir Francis Beekman, played by Charles Coburn. Lorelei enters shortly after their introduction and, learning that Beekman owns the second largest diamond dig in South Africa, begins concentrating on trapping him for herself, despite the fact that he is married.

"It's a terrible thing to be lonesome," Lorelei says in a line that could have been written for Monroe. "Especially in the middle of a crowd."

Behind the scenes, Monroe and Russell became close friends. Confused about the advances of baseball great Joe DiMaggio, Monroe consulted Russell, who was married to retired football player Bob Waterfield, about the pros and cons of being married to a recognized sports figure.

Russell, herself active in organizations for the benefit of children, also piqued Monroe's interest and gave her a cause she supported until her death.

Russell had met Monroe years earlier when she was still married to her first husband, Jim Dougherty.

Produced by Sol C. Siegel and directed by Howard Hawks, "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes" is full of memorable scenes, such as Russell, in wig and dress, imitating Monroe's character.

Just as "Niagara" made Monroe a star, "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes" can boast of giving her the sex-symbol status she carried throughout her movies and, in fact, throughout her life.

One scene that is largely responsible for igniting the image of a goddess is the one in which Monroe performs her ever-popular "Diamonds Are a Girl's Best Friend" scene.

In this scene, she is featured in a pink dress that is much more conservative than the costume as it was originally designed. The decision to change her costume stemmed from complaints from women's groups concerned that Monroe would be flagrantly sexual in her new movie.

House to debate new tax classification

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — House members are hoping that on Wednesday they won't be re-enacting a famous scene or two from "The Bride of Frankenstein."

For many of them, Frankenstein is the tax classification system brought to life by the 1985 Legislature and put into the constitution as an amendment by voters in 1986. The House is scheduled Wednesday to debate a proposal to ask voters to adopt a new classification scheme.

The new proposal is "Vancrum II," named after one of its creators,

Analysis

Rep. Robert Vancrum, R-Overland Park. Its critics claim it could terrorize some Kansans as much as the present classification ogre.

House leaders expect plenty of amendments to be offered, and they aren't really sure what will arise or whether anything grafted together will have enough life to stagger out of the mad scientists' laboratory.

"The variety of amendments that could be drafted is open-ended," said

Rep. Keith Roe, R-Mankato, chairman of the House Taxation Committee.

The proposed resolution, a modified version of a plan introduced by Vancrum and 24 other House members, is designed to make the tax burden approximately what it was before the classification amendment.

The 1986 amendment's critics said it shifted too much of the tax burden from large businesses to homeowners and small businesses, in part because it removed from the property tax rolls merchants' and manufacturers' inventories.

Computer runs show that under Vancrum's plan, the overall tax burden of residential taxpayers would decrease about 16.7 percent. The plan would do that by decreasing the rate at which residential property is assessed for tax purposes from 12 percent to 10 percent.

Those same computer runs also show that the total tax burden on urban and rural commercial real estate would decrease about 31.5 percent. The plan would decrease the assessment rate for it from 30 percent to 20 percent.

Those portions of the burden would be picked up when inventories are put back on the tax rolls, at a rate lower than that before the classification amendment passed. The assessment rate for state-assessed utility property also would increase from 30 percent to 35 percent.

Vancrum is confident about his plan's chances, saying it may have more than 70 votes heading into debate. Proposed constitutional amendments must be adopted by two-thirds majorities in both houses — 84 of 125 votes in the House and 27 of 40 votes in the Senate — to go on the ballot.

"I think we're within striking distance of doing it," Vancrum said. "I would anticipate that some amendments might be successful, but that the basic framework would remain the same."

Vancrum and his plan's supporters are also keeping an eye on the Senate. On Friday, 15 senators introduced a classification amendment that contains some of the same provisions and most of the general concepts contained in Vancrum II.

The Senate Assessment and Taxation Committee will hear testimony on the Senate resolution Thursday and Friday. Senate President Bud Burke, R-Leawood, its main sponsor, said he thinks it's far from passing, but he said he's willing to negotiate over its provisions.

"My guess is that probably two-thirds of the legislators in both houses want to be able to vote for something before they go home," he said. "Eventually, they say, 'We've got to vote for something.'"

Roe and others see Vancrum II as seriously flawed. It will draw heavy opposition since it puts inventories back on the tax rolls, a provision opposed by manufacturing firms and the powerful business lobby, the Kansas Chamber of Commerce and Industry.

"It needs what I consider major surgery," said Rep. Wanda Fuller, R-Wichita, a member of the tax committee.

Roe is critical of Vancrum II because it does not decrease the total property tax burden, as some other plans do.

House Speaker Jim Braden, R-Clay Center, has proposed increasing the state sales tax to provide money to allow school districts to cut property tax levies. Gov. Mike Hayden has proposed a constitutional amendment to roll back property taxes to 80 percent of their 1989 levels.

"All it really does," Roe said of Vancrum II, is shift the burden to someone else and hurt that taxpayer.

Vancrum replied: "It doesn't give further tax breaks to big manufacturers? You're right."

Miller said he thinks Vancrum's plan may be losing support as members study it further. He also said he thinks it will lose support if amendments are added during the House debate.

"My guess is that they're going to vote their districts," said Rep. Joan Wagon, D-Topeka, the ranking minority member on the tax committee. "You can be in political hot water no matter how you vote on this issue."

There is some sense of apprehension about the House's upcoming debate, perhaps more among senators, who have been known to grumble about the unpredictable nature of House debates on major issues.

"Trying to write law on the floor of either house is not a good way to do business," Burke said.

Set in the satellite city of Cergy-Pontoise, an ultra-modern development outside of Paris (part maze, part mausoleum), BOYFRIENDS AND GIRLFRIENDS traces the romantic entanglements of four young professionals during the months of summer. Blanche (Emmanuel Chaulet), a newcomer to the suburbs, works at the Ministry of Culture; Lea (Sophie Renoir) is a computer programmer who befriends Blanche over lunch at a corporate cafeteria; Lea's boyfriend, Fabien (Eric Viellard), designs sportswear and likes to windsurf; Alexandre (François-Eric Gendron) is a civil engineer and reputed "skirt-chaser" whom the two women meet at the local swimming pool. Director Eric Rohmer implicates this group in a complicated game of moral and emotional musical chairs in which each of the four "moralistes" ends up with a different partner when the music stops. (In French with English subtitles.) $1.75 and KSU ID required.

Pollution threatens vulnerable sea waters

By The Associated Press

LONDON — Sewage dumped at sea poses a significant health risk to seafood lovers and swimmers who can pick up bacteria and viruses, said an international report on the world's oceans released Monday.

The contaminated sewage can cause hepatitis, cholera, polio, gastrointestinal illnesses and possibly AIDS, it said.

Contrary to public fears, however, radioactive contamination of the oceans remains "extremely low" and the oceans are not threatened by oil pollution except at the sites of major spills, the report said.

The United Nations-sponsored report said coastal waters are the most vulnerable and abused. They are threatened by contaminated sewage, runaway coastal development and excess nutrients such as phosphates and nitrates which are killing fish and altering plant life.

Professor Alasdair McIntyre of the University of Aberdeen in Scotland, chairman of the 20-member panel that prepared the report, rejected the theory that sunlight and waves quickly destroy dangerous organisms in sewage.

"It used to be thought that a very short time in the sea killed off these organisms, but we are having to recognize this is not the case," he told a news conference.

The report said eating contaminated seafood is firmly linked with serious illness, including viral hepatitis and cholera and that bathing in contaminated water could also cause illness.

"There are records of people contracting polio from swimming in contaminated water," McIntyre said. He said a U.S. study showed the polio virus could survive for 17 months in sewage-polluted marine waters.

Epidemiological studies in the United States and the Mediterranean have also provided "unequivocal evidence" that swimmers in sea water polluted with micro-organisms from feces have a higher incidence of gastric disorders, the report said.

"The fact that viruses are known to survive for surprisingly long periods is a significant development," he said.

Asked about the AIDS virus, McIntyre said, "Although the chance of an AIDS virus surviving would be very slight, nevertheless it could survive."

Last week, Patrick Gowen, a British marine biologist formerly at the University of East Anglia, told a parliamentary committee that new research showed the AIDS virus could live for more than 24 hours in sea water. He warned that swimmers could catch it through cuts, sunburn sores and shingle scuffs.

The World Health Organization dismissed the claim as "total nonsense."

The report by the Group of Experts on the Scientific Aspects of Marine Pollution said human pollution was evident in the oceans "from the poles to the tropics and from beaches to abyssal depths."

The scientists said "the open sea is still relatively clean" but marine habitats and resources along the oceans' coasts were being damaged irretrievably by harbor developments, industrial installations, tourist facilities and saltwater fish farming.

Ortega sends mixed signals to opposition

By The Associated Press

MANAGUA, Nicaragua — Even in defeat, the Sandinistas dominate the stage in Nicaragua.

Three weeks after the United Nations ousted the Sandinistas with a resounding 55 percent of the vote, UNO supporters still have not held a public celebration.

UNO officials have steered cleared of the government agencies they must start running on April 25. They have yet to get a look at the books of the state-run enterprises they hope to privatize.

"A couple of guys wanted to go down to the ministries, but I told them, 'No, you could get killed,'" said labor leader Alvin Guthrie, a UNO deputy-elect to the National Assembly. "I told them just be prudent. Take it easy."

President Daniel Ortega has been sending mixed signals in speech after speech, saying the Sandinistas will defend the gains of the revolution while giving up power.

President-elect Violeta Barrios de Chamorro has been virtually invisible. The shape of her Cabinet and her policies are still unclear, as is the balance of power in her 14-party coalition. Chamorro, 60, has had only one short news conference since the Feb. 25 general election.

Ortega has been at the forefront, issuing warnings of insurrection and civil war one day, then calmly assuring Vice President Dan Quayle that the Sandinistas will give up power.

A climate of uncertainty and impatience prevails, despite the lifting last week of the U.S. economic embargo that had severed Nicaragua from its traditional markets and strangled its sources of credit.

By the end of the week, a U.S. dollar fetched 120,000 cordobas, the Nicaraguan currency, on the black market. That's nearly double the black market rate in the weeks just before the election and more than double the 54,000 official rate.

The business community, although buoyed by the end of the five-year embargo and a $300 million aid package President Bush is requesting from Congress, is cautious.

"After the 25th" has become a kind of refrain in business circles.

In their waning days of exclusive power, the Sandinistas have been at turns threatening, defensive, contrite and conciliatory.

All eyes are upon them as they prepare to "govern from below," simultaneously maneuvering for position in transition talks with UNO, shoring up their power base and taking steps to block any conservative counterreforms.

They have handed out thousands of guns, rallied their rank and file, passed an amnesty covering a decade of revolutionary rule and drafted a law legalizing the confiscations of thousands of homes, farms and vehicles.

Nothing of substance has emerged publicly from the transition talks, where dismantling U.S.-supported Contra rebels and control of the army, police and state security apparatus are critical issues.

But the Sandinistas have made it clear that while they may give up the government, they won't give up their guns.

In his most troubling speech to date, Ortega said that if the Contras haven't demobilized by April 25, the day UNO is scheduled to take over, the country would rise up in arms.

"It is like the calm before the storm," he said. "We have to avoid being crushed by the tempest of civil war, popular insurrection, violence."

The Contras, for their part, continue to insist they won't put down their weapons until Chamorro is in office and they feel it's safe to return from their base camps in Honduras.

"We're going to remain at arms to guarantee that the people get everything people vote for — a change in the government and a change in their lives," said Contra field commander Denis Galeano Conejo.

Despite defeat, the Sandinistas are well-positioned to block the complete dismantling of their leftist revolution.

Although UNO won a 52-seat majority in the 92-seat National Assembly, it is three seats short of the number it needs to amend the Constitution.

The Sandinistas also will maintain control of the Supreme Court, which would hear any challenges to the Constitution, until 1993, halfway through Chamorro's term.

Renovations almost completed

By Lori Stauffer
Collegian Reporter

Final renovations that nearly double the amount of space of the chemistry branch library in the Chemistry/Biochemistry Building will be completed this week, Librarian Ruth Nellis said.

The renovations, which included tearing out a wall in the new building, will increase the library space from 2,000 to 3,800 square feet. Most of the renovations were completed during the semester break.

The expansion allows for three years of growth and expanded user space. The limited amount of growth time will hamper the library's growth space again in the future. Nellis said the Chemistry/Biochemistry Building would not have space available for the library for another 10 years. Expansion in the near future will have to be anticipated, she said.

With the opening of the user space, more students are using the library for study rather than just obtaining material, she said.

"The stacks had almost eliminated the study space available," Nellis said. "We had the books here, it was just too close for students to use the library effectively. Now we have more flexibility."

Book preservation had become a concern with many of the stacks in the old space, she said. The wooden book shelves provided a top rack that put the books too close to lights which, over a period of time, would cause heat damage to the materials. Also, the periodicals were packed so close together the wear and tear on the books caused damage to the covers. These problems were solved with the added space, Nellis said.

The renovations cost a little less than $15,000. The majority of the funding came from operating reserves from the dean's office in the College of Arts and Sciences, said Marvin Kaiser, associate dean of the college.

"Given that Farrell Library is so crowded, the branch libraries have become important holders of information. The crowding problem with the Chemistry/Biochemistry branch library made it nearly impossible for students to use it," he said. "We felt that expanding the library in any fashion would be worth the investment."

Nellis said she had been working on the expansion for three years.

Kassebaum files re-nomination bid

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Sen. Nancy Kassebaum made her candidacy for a third six-year term official today, declaring that the United States must adjust to a changing world by solving its fiscal problems and better preparing for intense economic competition.

Kassebaum paid a $984 fee and filed a form to put her name on the August primary ballot for Republican re-nomination. She was joined by a small crowd of aides and supporters, including Gov. Mike Hayden, Kansas' first lady Patti Hayden and state GOP Chairwoman Rochelle Chronister, in the secretary of state's office.

She joked with reporters about a previous pledge that she would serve only two six-year terms. One reporter asked if a third term would be her last, but Kassebaum avoided the issue.

"I got myself in difficulty with that before," she said. "As my children said, 'Don't put your foot in your mouth again.' Who knows? At this juncture, I just want to be re-elected to another six-year term."

Kassebaum, 57, is expected to win the Republican nomination easily. Her only opponent is Lawrence resident R. Gregory Walstrom, who filed to run for the office in December 1986. GOP officials have said they know very little about Walstrom and that he has not contacted them.

The only Democrat to file for the right to challenge Kassebaum in the general election is Dick Williams of Wichita. Williams is a lecturer at Wichita State University, teaching English to foreign students.

When she ran for re-election in 1984, Kassebaum captured 76 percent of the vote, a record for a statewide election. She is expected to win another term by a comfortable margin this year.

The senator renewed her promise to attempt to spend only as much as she did in 1984 — about $360,000. She jokingly conceded that she may have to make some adjustments for inflation.

"I take all polls with a grain of salt," she said, referring to her popularity. "I've been a believer in door-to-door campaigning."

In the Kansas Poll, published Sunday by the Topeka Capital-Journal, 70 percent of the respondents gave Kassebaum a grade of A or B for her performance, while 60 percent gave Sen. Bob Dole marks that high.

Kassebaum downplayed speculation that her popularity will help other Republicans this fall. "You work together and you work separately," she said.

Kassebaum told reporters that she believes the United States should officially recognize Lithuania as an independent nation. Lithuania, considered a "captive nation" by the U.S. because of its inclusion in the Soviet Union, is seeking to secede.

Court enters plea; jury trial requested

By The Collegian Staff

Riley County District Court Judge Paul Miller Tuesday entered a plea of innocent for John L. Moss, who is charged in the Feb. 20 slaying of a student.

Moss was asked at the arraignment to enter a plea on a charge of second degree murder in connection with the beating death of Shane D. Harrison, freshman in engineering.

Moss said he did not wish to enter a plea, and Miller entered a plea of innocent. Moss' lawyer, Ken Smith, asked for a trial by jury.

At a preliminary hearing earlier this month, the judge entered an innocent plea for Moss on a misdemeanor robbery charge related to the incident.

Miller set 10:30 a.m. Monday as the time that the details for jury selections and the trial would be discussed.

Harrison's body was discovered Feb. 20 in an alley in the 600 block of Bluemont Street. Moss' ■ See ARRAIGN, Page 8

Factional fighting kills 15

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — At least 26 people died in black factional fighting and clashes with police, including 15 men killed when a mob destroyed a Zulu tribal chief's compound, police said Monday.

A mob on Sunday attacked the chief's kraal — or homestead — at Njobokazi near Hammersdale in Natal and slaughtered most of the inhabitants and injured nine others, police said. Two black police officers assigned to guard the chief were among the dead, they said.

The attackers hurled hand grenades and opened fire with an AK-47 assault rifle and other weapons, police said. Inhabitants of the kraal were gunned down as they fled, they said.

Police reported 11 other people were killed Monday and Sunday, most in factional fighting in Natal. Police firing shotguns killed two men in separate incidents Monday while breaking up protests in black townships, they said.

African National Congress leader Walter Sisulu agreed Monday to meet with Zulu leader Mangosuthu Buthelezi to try to halt growing violence in Natal, the traditional home of the Zulus. The Zulu's Inkatha movement has been fighting groups allied to the ANC for dominance in Natal.

Bill restricts abortions

AGANA, Guam (AP) — A bill creating the most restrictive U.S. abortion statute was signed into law Monday by the territorial governor. The measure was hailed by anti-abortion forces, but civil libertarians promised to fight it.

"In my heart, I believe that a fetus is a human being," Republican Gov. Joseph Ada said in signing the bill, which prohibits abortion except when the mother's health or life are endangered.

The law, which passed despite a ruling by Guam's attorney general that it is unconstitutional, makes it a third-degree felony for a person to perform or help in an abortion. Seeking or having an abortion or soliciting someone to have an abortion are misdemeanors.

The law also sets a referendum during the Nov. 6 general election for residents of this Pacific Ocean island about 1,500 miles east of the Philippines to decide whether to keep the law.

In another development in the abortion war, an agreement to end a five-day anti-abortion filibuster in the Maryland Senate apparently unraveled. Both sides held firm in the debate over a bill to guarantee the right to an abortion in that state.

Cult killings suspect released

PAINESVILLE, Ohio (AP) — One of 13 cult members charged in the killings of a northeast Ohio family of five was released from the Lake County Jail on bond Monday.

Gregory S. Winship, 29, is charged with five counts of conspiracy to commit aggravated murder, five counts of complicity to commit aggravated murder, and five counts of kidnapping.

Winship had been held on $150,000 bond. He said he would return to his home in Missouri, but agreed to show up in Lake County Common Pleas Court for proceedings in the case.

Dennis Avery, 49, his wife, Cheryl, and their three daughters were shot and killed last April and were buried underneath a barn in nearby Kirtland. Authorities said the deaths were "cleansing executions" before the cult members moved to wilderness homes in West Virginia and then Missouri.

The barn was part of a farm rented by the Jeffrey Lundgren family and shared with cult members.

Woman plagues Letterman

NEW CANAAN, Conn. (AP) — A woman who once claimed she was David Letterman's wife was charged Monday with breaking into the talk-show host's home for a sixth time — two days after her release from prison for an earlier break-in.

Margaret Ray, 37, of Crawford, Colo., was arrested at 12:46 a.m. Monday and charged with first-degree trespassing when she was found near the tennis court on Letterman's property, said police Sgt. Nick Warren.

Letterman called to report seeing her in the hallway of his home, Warren said.

Warren said Ray had also been there the day before. Letterman had called Sunday to report a broken window, and when police went to investigate, they found her in the house, escorted her off the property and warned her not to come back.

Ray was held overnight on $1,000 bond and taken to Norwalk Superior Court on Monday afternoon, where a psychiatric evaluation was ordered, said a spokeswoman in the public defender's office. Ray was taken to the Niantic State Prison for women and is due back in court April 4.

It was Ray's sixth arrest in two years for bothering the host of NBC's "Late Night with David Letterman."

She was released last Friday from the Niantic prison, where she had served seven months of a nine-month sentence for trespassing at his home last August, said William Flower, a Department of Correction spokesman.

Oberlin receives $1 million

OBERLIN (AP) — The city of Oberlin recently received a $1 million gift from an 88-year-old resident who died on March 4.

But there's a catch to Madonna Mae Morgan's bequest. Morgan, who died at a Hoxie nursing home, left Oberlin an estimated $1 million to build a new municipal auditorium and city hall. The town doesn't have one now.

But to receive the inheritance, the town has to raise an equal amount of money within two years of her death — by March 4, 1992.

If Oberlin can't come up with the money on its own, the inheritance goes to the Shriners' burn-treatment center for children in Houston.

"She said, 'Well, if I contribute most of my estate to it, they ought to be willing to match it,'" said Hill City attorney Kenneth Clark of his client's wishes.

Laura Deckert, Morgan's sister-in-law, cared for the woman for seven years before she moved to the nursing home about two years ago. Morgan kept to herself after her husband, Robert, died in 1983.

Man charged with phone deals

MISSION (AP) — A 25-year-old Mission man was charged Monday under a new Kansas law that makes it illegal to arrange drug deals over the telephone.

Jonathan D. Sollars was charged in Johnson County District Court with using a communication device to facilitate a drug transaction and with attempted sale of marijuana.

Assistant district attorney Debra Vermillion said the case is one of the first times Johnson County prosecutors have used the law that took effect on July 1, 1989.

Sollars was arrested Friday night at his Mission apartment in conjunction with a raid on a Kansas City house that netted 35 pounds of marijuana and several weapons, said Prairie Village Police Cpl. Greg Burnetta.

Sollars posted $30,000 bond Monday and was released.

Blaze results in $35,000 damage

By Gregory A. Branson
Collegian Reporter

A afternoon fire caused an estimated $35,000 damage to a house north of Manhattan Monday.

The home owned by Dave and Susan O'Neill at 813 Goodrich Drive received severe heat and smoke damage, but no one was injured.

"We're not sure what caused the fire," Deputy Fire Chief Larry Reese said at the scene. "There is a lot of heat and smoke damage on the main floor, and a lot of fire damage in the basement. There's going to be a considerable loss."

Battalion Fire Chief Jack Roets estimated damage to the structure to be about $20,000. Content damage is estimated at about $15,000; however, these reflect preliminary estimates and may increase or decrease following a careful inventory.

Norman Prockish, a neighbor who lives at 912 Mission Ave., was working at his home when he first smelled smoke at about 3 p.m.

"At first I just thought some people had their fireplace going," Prockish said. "I forgot about it for a little while. Then I smelled the smoke again. That's when I looked out my window and saw smoke rolling out of the front of the house."

He said his first reaction was to contact the fire department.

"I called 911," Prockish said. "As soon as I got off the phone, flames started shooting out of the back basement window."

Manhattan Fire Department received the call at 3:35 p.m. Three fire units responded to the call and brought the fire under control in about 30 minutes. Firefighters remained on the scene until about 7:30 p.m. to ensure the fire was completely out.

Roets said an investigation into the cause of the fire is being conducted. Gasoline, paint and paint thinner were stored in a room in the basement, but Roets said he could not confirm this as the source of the fire until the investigation is completed.

Firefighters rip into the roof of Dave and Susan O'Neill's home at 813 Goodrich Drive Monday during a fire that caused an estimated $35,000 damage. The fire was brought under control within an hour.

All the windows in the front of the house were blown out because of a condition called a back draft, Roets said. Back draft is caused when intense heat inside a house causes a window to break. The cool air rushing into the house through the broken window causes a back draft which broke the other windows.

Firefighters had to cut a hole in the roof of the structure to provide ventilation for the smoke. Fans were brought in to clear the smoke.

Owner Dave O'Neill returned home after work only to find fire trucks in front of his house and smoke billowing from his front windows.

"It's such a mess I don't know what we're going to have left," he said. "We just remodeled the place, too."

Roets said the fire was mostly confined to the basement, but smoke and intense heat from the fire caused extensive damage.

Developing democracies must obtain support from the United States in order to be successful, Edward Seaton, president of the Inter American Press Association said Monday.

"Those of us who are interested in free institutions have got to persuade the public in this country and the Congress and the president that this country has got to aid these new emerging democracies," Seaton said during a lecture titled "Freedom of Information in the Western Hemisphere."

"We've got to take a cutback in order to see these free institutions around the world merge and be successful," he said.

The money needed to aid these countries is about 3 percent of the $300 billion military budget, but Congress is acting as if they can't come up with any money, said Seaton, who is also the publisher of the Manhattan Mercury.

Countries needing this aid include Panama. Seaton went on a mission there one month after the U.S. invasion with other members of the IAPA. The editors of Costa Rican and Columbian newspapers accompanied him.

"We went there because there were reports in the invasion of journalists being killed — which was correct — many journalists being detained — which was also correct — and publications being closed," he said.

The goal of the mission was to investigate all these cases and sort through what was happening, Seaton said.

"We did come to the conclusion that due process of law is being applied in all of the cases," he said. "We had considerable confidence in what's been done (in Panama)."

The IAPA meets officially twice a year in addition to the missions it's involved in, Seaton said. A general assembly meets in October to discuss the problems each country in the hemisphere is experiencing in freedom of the press, he said. These meetings are open to the public.

After each report is heard, it is edited and printed in "IAPA Country-by-Country Report," a document issued every six months.

"Resolutions are then produced (from this report) that are usually calling on governments to stop something or to do something or to not pass a law," he said.

The IAPA also operates a scholarship fund and a technical center, Seaton said.

"The IAPA sees itself as the guardian of freedom of the press in the Western Hemisphere," he said. "We believe that democracy can flourish only where there is a strong and vibrant and free press."

Seaton credited the IAPA for freeing journalists in certain cases, stopping censorship and reopening publications that have been closed.

"A free press is the central nervous system of democracy," Seaton said. "Our goal is to develop public opinion that contributes to changes toward democracy."

Seaton spoke at a dinner sponsored by the Society of Professional Journalists, the Society for Collegiate Journalists and the professional and students chapters of Women in Communications, Inc.

Prosecution unveils DNA test for trial

By The Associated Press

OLATHE — A trial date of Aug. 27 was set Monday for murder suspect Richard Grissom Jr., and Johnson County prosecutors acknowledged for the first time that a new genetic fingerprinting method will be used in the case.

Johnson County District Attorney Paul Morrison said during a public hearing he will use the complex scientific procedure to link Grissom, 29, with June 1989 disappearances of Joan M. Butler, 24, of Overland Park, and Theresa Brown and Christine Rusch, both 22 and roommates at a Lenexa apartment. Their bodies have never been found.

Judge William Gray set the date for the trial, which is expected to last four weeks. Gray also set a two-day hearing for June 11 and 12 to hear a motion and testimony from two witnesses regarding motions by Grissom's attorneys, Andrew L. Warren and Michael Bartee, to move the trial out of Johnson County.

Bush subsidizes dictator's spring break

"F stands for fun—and no where more fun than in Florida." Patricia Brooks, Modern Bride magazine, August-September 1989. "It was great! Babes, beer, the beach! I feel like a total wastoid!" Super-party animal, Simon Snow.

I hear a lot of people went to Florida for spring break this year. Daytona, Fort Lauderdale, Miami, Orlando. All these places have beautiful scenery (bikinis), plenty of refreshing liquids (beer) and opportunities for healthful athletic endeavors (I'll leave this to your own imaginations).

Florida was so popular this year that people would kill to get there. There were reports that Gen. Prosper Avril, the recently-deposed leader of Haiti, was seen on Miami Beach trying to scam some New York women into coming back to his hotel for a swim.

"Hey, baby, I used to be president of my own country! Let's go back to my place for a little champagne and amour," he said, dressed smartly in his four-star khaki Speedo and general's hat.

Avril is here on the American plan — George Bush flew him in on a C-141 and gave him freedom to pick up as many beach bunnies as he wants, as long as the liquor and prophylactic supplies hold out.

No one knows exactly what happened to the general after he arrived at Homestead Air Force base last Monday. They say he left at 3:30 p.m. the same day, destination unknown. A covert spring break for a man who definitely needs a vacation.

But Avril is not your ordinary spring breaker. He is just one of many dictators who have fled their countries to find safety in the land of the free. Just another thug sponging free air travel off the American taxpayers.

Most other spring breakers don't have Avril's penchant for torture and oppression. After holding a press conference to protest the deteriorating human rights conditions in Haiti, Evans Paul, Jean-Auguste Mesyeux and Etienne Marineau were arrested by Avril's military.

Kirk Caraway

COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

The next night they were displayed on state-run television, all three bloody and bruised around the face and head. They were being charged with plotting to assassinate Avril and were thrown in prison without trial.

This showed that Avril not only doesn't care about human rights, but that he doesn't care about who knows it. He paraded the handiwork of his thugs on prime-time television to give warning to the people of Haiti —

I'm in charge here. Flashback — 1981, Alexander Haig, Reagan's been shot — oops, sorry.

This is really swell. Bush will send the 82nd Airborne Division into Panama to fetch pineapple-head Manuel Noriega, another thug who didn't care diddly about the people he ruled. Apparently Avril gets along better with Bush than Noriega. The general from Panama went straight from Homestead to a holding cell at the federal courthouse in Miami, while the general from Haiti took a right at the end of the runway and is probably drinking rum on a beach somewhere.

Why do we let this crap happen? Why do we keep picking up these little dictators and giving them refuge. Ferdinand Marcos spent his last days in that hellhole called Hawaii while Imelda attempted to spend his last dime on a new pair of shoes. The Shah of Iran put us in a sticky mess when he came here, and Anastasio Somoza lived it up in Miami before biting the big one in Paraguay in 1981.

I'm surprised there's not a sign at the Miami airport for a "Dictators-R-Us" franchise. "Yes, people, come on in! We offer a tremendous selection of political asylums to fit your particular situation. And if asylum is not your bag, we offer free transport to the country of your choice. First class air travel aboard one of our spacious cargo planes. And of course, there is the free cellular phone service and complementary cocktail."

Is this Bush's answer to the trade deficit? Give us your tired, your hated, your thugs of all colors. Steal your national treasury and spend it in the United States, where we have much more favorable tax rates compared to those snobby little countries in Europe.

And now we have this pesky little general running around Florida and harassing the female population, all at government expense. But remember, this is America.

So, how was your spring break?

Lithuanian secession surprisingly peaceful

The recent decision by the Lithuanian parliament to secede from the Soviet Union is certainly an unusual event for the Communist superpower.

And the reaction by the Soviet government is a welcome change from the past. As late as the early '80s, attempts by Soviet republics, and nations in the East Bloc, to follow a different path than that dictated by Moscow was met with military action.

The most recent example, the imposition of martial law in Poland, eventually led to a bankrupt nation and a renewed desire on the part of the Polish people for greater freedom.

Yet in the Lithuanian situation, President Mikhail Gorbachev has said the Soviet Union has ruled out the use of force in stopping Lithuania's move toward independence. That Lithuania would seek independence is not surprising; that country, as well as the other Baltic republics of Latvia and Estonia, were independent prior to a Soviet takeover in 1940.

Gorbachev has even gone so far as to say that all 15 republics in the Soviet Union must meet to consider the future nature of the federation, perhaps indicating that the constituent republics will seek a looser union.

As the Soviet Union undergoes what may prove to be its dissolution, the United States should be willing to provide assistance and assure stability in U.S.-Soviet relations to further the process of change.

German reunification needs careful planning

For the first time in the history of their country, East Germans participated in free elections.

At stake was the future of the country. Sunday, the German people elected a three-party alliance, the Alliance for Germany, that promised rapid reunification with West Germany.

The first step toward reunification is social and economic union. Both East and West German officials predict that the West German Deutsche Mark and a free market economy could be integrated into East Germany by July.

While the desire for quick reunification is justifiable, the new East German government should proceed carefully. East Germany is a fragile country, despite its new Western veneer.

First, it should send a message to the West German government to back off. West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl campaigned heavily on behalf of the Alliance for Germany. He has also been one of the most vocal supporters of reunification to the point of overwhelming the views of East Germans. Kohl needs to give the East German government time to adapt the country to the free market system to ensure that it doesn't collapse.

The new government also needs to stabilize the emigration from East Germany. People are still leaving East Germany at a rate of 2,000 per day. The number of refugees is an indicator of the lack of confidence some Germans have in the new and improved East Germany.

The transformation in East Germany since November has been nothing short of amazing. In four months, the people have managed to scrap their old system of government and start over without violence.

But before they leap into reunification, the East Germans need to rebuild their national identity and strengthen the legitimacy of their new system of government.

LOOK... I KNOW THESE BUDGET CUTS HAVE YOU GENTLEMEN CONCERNED... BUT HEY! LET'S TRY NOT TO THINK OF THEM AS CUTS... LET'S THINK OF THEM AS CONGRESS' WAY OF MAKING THE STEALTH BOMBER REALLY INVISIBLE!

Behavior callous

Editor,

What has happened to our society? It used to be that people actually cared about each other.

The incident I am referring to is the brutal murder of Shane Harrison and the uncaring attitude of the suspect's roommate, Curtis Jackson. According to the Collegian, Jackson testified to viewing Harrison's body and noting that Harrison was alive and was making choking sounds. So what does he do? He runs inside and goes to sleep. How could anyone go to sleep and do nothing when a fellow human being is lying outside dying?

Where is the public outcry? Am I the only person who is outraged by Jackson's irresponsible behavior? What if that was your son or daughter who was lying injured in an alley battling for their life?

No matter how scared Jackson was, or how drunk and "hyped up" John Moss was, there is no excuse for not calling an ambulance and getting Shane Harrison some medical attention at that moment, which may have saved his life. Curtis Jackson should also be arrested and charged with being an accessory to murder. He is no less guilty than if he had done the beating himself.

Now, I know it is not the purpose of the legal system to get people to do the right thing, but it has got to start somewhere. When people can't or won't act responsibly, by their own volition, then society must step in and encourage and enforce responsibility by its members.

It is a sorry indictment of the callousness of our society that this type of irresponsible behavior is tolerated, much less accepted and unpunished.

Letter informative

Editor,

I must compliment Brent Pomeroy on his critique of my letter to the editor. I learned a lot of new information. For instance, I always believed that people establish unity through cooperation, compromise and acceptance. From Pomeroy's letter I learned that this was not true, but in fact people actually establish unity by calling each other names like "deviant" and being "intolerant" towards one another.

I also used to believe that our country was founded by people fleeing religious intolerance and persecution. I believed that there was a doctrine of separation of church and state which was created so no one would have a religion forced on them. Thanks to Pomeroy's letter, now I realize that our country was "founded on deeply-rooted religion" and that laws ought to be enforced to impose his religious values on others.

I also use to believe that there were religious people who were accepting towards homosexuality. I knew several people, some of whom are Christians, who do not believe that homosexuality is wrong or that it violates their religious beliefs. Since Pomeroy has pointed out that "no religion he knows condones homosexuality," I have come to realize that none of these people actually exist. I just hope someone told them.

I also had one final misconception. I used to believe that I had a responsibility to undo the injustices in the society around me. I felt everyone ought to have a right to live with whom they choose, work at any job they are qualified for, and to do all these things without fear of verbal or physical abuse. When I saw people denied these rights because they were black, female, handicapped or homosexual, I felt that this was a great injustice which ought to be eliminated along with the prejudices which support these injustices. Thanks to Pomeroy, I now understand none of these people should expect us to "accept their actions," "accommodate their specific interests," or "respect their alternative lifestyle."

Buy American

Editor,

Many Americans are wondering why the United States, over a few years time, has gone from the greatest industrial giant in history to the greatest debtor in nation history, with many of our industries on the verge of collapse.

A major reason may be that we buy too many foreign-made products. We buy automobiles from Japan, Germany, France, Sweden, Great Britain, and even from Communist Yugoslavia. We buy clothing, toys and fireworks from Communist China, clothing from Taiwan, the Philippines, Hong Kong, Communist Poland, and other countries, and hundreds of products from nations around the entire globe. Every time a foreign automobile passes us on the street, we can be almost certain that another $10,000 to $50,000 has left the United States.

Our economy could make a complete turn around and the balance of payments to other countries would be reversed instantly if Americans would buy nothing but American products, "Made In U.S.A."

The entire economy would improve. The steel industry, auto industry, textile industry, plus hundreds of other industries would then be able to survive and thrive, rather than having to close their doors, and lay off their workers because of foreign competition. American workers in many industries would have jobs again. But we must check every time we buy to make sure it is "Made In U.S.A."

Obviously our government is not going to make the effort to reverse this trend. They have not done it so far. The government keeps giving "most favored nation" trade status to many countries, including the Communist nations who have "sworn to bury us."

Therefore, as is so often the case, the effort to reverse the trend and improve our economy is going to have to be done at the grassroots level, by Mr. and Mrs. Common Man! Why wait? Let's buy American!

How refreshing and encouraging it was to read David Svoboda's "We'll miss ya' Steve," column. Wouldn't it be wonderful if all our athletes could be written about in this manner? # Students receive aid

University awards $3 million in scholarships

By Lori Stauffer
Collegian Reporter

About 14,000 students received some type of financial assistance for the 1989-90 academic year, and about $3 million of that was scholarships awarded by the University, said Les Longberg, controller of the KSU Foundation.

Larry Moeder, assistant director of student financial assistance, said his office awards more scholarships than it actually has the money for because not all students accept the awards. The overall student acceptance rate averages 70 percent, but for returning students, the average increases to about 95 percent, he said.

The acceptance rate has not been a problem in the disbursement of funds, Moeder said.

The financial aid office is in the process of reviewing the bulk of the scholarship applications.

University scholarships are awarded based on academic merit. For returning students, the scholarship committee considers the student's grade point average compiled at K-State and the types of classes completed, he said.

If the award is a departmental scholarship, the GPA in the student's content area is often considered in addition to the student's total GPA. The individual departments choose the recipients of these awards.

Most of the money for the scholarships comes from earnings from endowed funds. The money is invested, and only the earnings are used for the scholarships, so that the account is never depleted, Moeder said.

Longberg said scholarships are drawn from two basic types of funds:

permanent and expendable funds. Permanent funds use a percentage of the annual investment for the scholarships. Expendable, or annual, funds are maintained by individuals or corporations who contribute yearly.

The Foundation also raises money for scholarships through the annual Telefund and mailers, which are 66 A person who maintains a 3.7 GPA is really an outstanding student. This really brings down the number of students who qualify.

— Les Longberg controller,
KSU Foundation

heavily supported by K-State alumni, Longberg said.

The percentage of scholarship funds donated by K-State alumni is the highest percentage of any public institution in the United States, he said. For last fiscal year, alumni donated 27 percent of the money the Foundation received, compared to the 16 to 18 percent average other public universities receive.

Because of the support of alumni and other donors, the number of scholarships administered through the Foundation has increased each year, Longberg said. However, the increased enrollment has been a problem in getting more aid to students.

"Unfortunately, we don't have enough money for scholarships for many of the students here, and that is a problem," he said.

As a result, the scholarship committee has placed a 3.7 GPA requirement on the academic scholarships.

"A person who maintains a 3.7 GPA is really an outstanding student," Longberg said. "This really brings down the number of students who qualify."

For entering freshmen, the committee reviews the student's test scores, including the ACT composite score, class rank and types of activities in which the student is involved. Leadership abilities are also considered, Moeder said.

The most prestigious scholarships K-State awards are the KSU Presidential Scholarships for National Merit Finalists and Semifinalists and the Putnam Scholarship. The Presidential Scholarship award pays $2,500 to the semi-finalists and $5,500 to the finalists the first academic year. The Putnam Scholarship award equals the cost of tuition.

These two scholarships are renewable for four years of undergraduate study if the student maintains a 3.3 GPA for the Presidential Scholarship and a 3.0 GPA for the Putnam Scholarship. They are awarded to entering freshmen who have an outstanding academic background based on ACT scores, high school GPA and recommendations.

IT'S JUST MADNESS

Lady Cats, Big 8 snubbed

For the second-straight year, the members of the K-State women's basketball team were sent scrambling to make last-minute spring break plans.

At about 2:45 p.m. March 11, the Lady Cats once again learned, much to their surprise, that they would not be part of the NCAA Women's Postseason Tournament field.

"I felt like, in all honesty, that we or someone else from the conference would get in," Lady Cats interim coach Gaye Griffin said. "We were pretty upset, and not necessarily because we didn't get in, but because we felt like at least another team from the Big Eight should have made it."

As it were, however, Oklahoma State, the conference's postseason tourney winner and automatic representative, was the lone Big Eight school to join the 48-team field, while three other conference schools with 20 wins, were left to sit at home — and wonder.

K-State finished 20-10 on the year, while Missouri, the regular-season champ, went 20-8 and Kansas was 20-9. With Oklahoma State going 20-10, that gave the Big Eight four teams with more than 20 victories.

But, for some reason, which Griffin intends to find out, the conference was spurned by the NCAA selection committee.

Those records and the strength of the conference schedule alone are things that should have given the Big Eight's elite some much-deserved "consideration" when the bids were being handed out.

Besides the fact that each Big Eight team had to play three teams which won 20 games, the conference also had some of the nation's best in the teams' pre-league schedules.

Tourney entries Montana, Bowling Green, Louisiana Tech, Louisiana State and Maryland adorned the Lady Cats' slate, and they even picked up a victory against 22-8 Bowling Green, the Mid American Conference's automatic bid.

"We had a really tough schedule, and four out of five were on the road (Bowling Green was at neutral Montana)," Griffin said. "So it makes me wonder what they do look at."

KU had a very impressive victory at 22-4 Arkansas, while it also played tourney selections Stephen F. Austin, Vanderbilt, Hawaii, Toledo and Bowling Green. Missouri also played LSU.

The three Big Eight teams might not have made it because they beat up on each other all season. While some teams (like Texas, which has lost just one Southwest Conference game in its existence) consistently pound on the lowly teams of their conferences, the Big Eight tears itself apart with a competitive league that has no standout — except the tourney winner.

The Pac-10 has traditionally been a strong conference for women's basketball, but how can the committee justify selecting two 17-11 teams (UCLA and California) over three teams that won 20 games and probably had comparable schedules.

One week from today begins the coaches' meetings that precede the women's Final Four in Knoxville, Tenn., and Griffin and the rest of the Big Eight coaches intend to have some questions answered at those meetings.

"We are real concerned, and we wonder why," Griffin said of the conference's lack of respect. "I think it's just something that we'll have to address at the Final Four."

"We don't really know anything, because we haven't visited with the committee members. But we should have some answers when we get back."

Another thing Griffin wants to propose to the other Big Eight coaches are some strategies which she hopes can help to promote the league itself.

even the Bob Devaney Sports Center in Lincoln, Neb., where the Big Eight Championships were contested.

"It was a great atmosphere, but it was so big," said Miller, who placed fourth in the shot put with a toss of 49-7.

Miller had started the season with a toss that might have even surprised her at the time, throwing a career-high 52-8½. But as the season progressed, her first-place performances started to become expected, as Miller sat atop the Big Eight honor roll all season long.

"Before the season my goal was to just become an all-American," Miller said, "but as the season went along and I had a lot of success, I had reconsidered my goals."

"I wanted top-three at the national meet."

Miller's toss of 49-7 wasn't exactly what she was hoping for, since she knew she was capable of throwing at least 52 and 51-11 won the event, but the junior from Frankfort was happy, nonetheless.

"I didn't think I threw well, but I was happy with the finish," she said. "The event was really wide open. Anybody of about eight girls could have won it."

K-State track athletes Janet Haskin (3,000 meters), Carla Shannon (triple jump), Connie Teaberry (high jump) and Angie Miller (shot put) gained all-America honors at the recent NCAA Indoor Track and Field Championships at the Indiana Hoosier Dome in Indianapolis.

For Teaberry, a high jumper, it was the second all-American performance at nationals, having done it at last year's NCAA Outdoor as well. But the second time around didn't mean that the routine has become commonplace for the St. Louis native.

"Not at all. That's the ultimate goal. It will never get old," she said. "Just making it there is an achievement itself."

Teaberry finished sixth at this year's indoor, three-places up from her outdoor finish last year, but she had still hoped to jump better than she did.

Her best leap going into the competition was 5-11½, but she was able to clear just 5-10½ at Indianapolis.

"I wanted to jump a lot better, but I'm glad I was able to get a jump that placed me sixth," Teaberry said. "I felt a little more confident since it was my second national meet. I knew what it was like, but I was still a little nervous going into the meet."

As far as being nervous, triple jumper Shannon could just say, "Wow," when asked about her feelings in her first experience at the NCAA's.

"I wasn't nervous, because I felt great that day," Shannon said. "I knew I just had to do what I had to do. But there were a lot of jumpers ... 25 jumpers."

For the senior from Atlanta to reach all-American status in the triple jump may seem a bit unrealistic to her. She says she prefers the long jump, but her long jump best is 19-7 and she knows 21 feet is what it will take to get her to nationals.

"It didn't surprise me that much, because I knew I could jump with them ... even though I was rated low in the triple jump," Shannon said of her sixth-place finish at 41-2½. "I guess I think of myself as a long jumper because the triple jump is so new to me, and I've been doing the long jump for quite some time."

Haskin also was running in an event that was fairly new to her. The sophomore from Onaga, who just finished her freshman year of eligibility indoors, had been used to running longer races during her career — the 5,000 and 10,000 meters.

At Indianapolis, however, Haskin qualified only for the 3,000 meters, and to make things worse, she didn't feel very well going into Friday's preliminaries for the event.

"Friday, I was nervous and I didn't feel that great," she said. So what did she do? She went out and ran her best time ever for the 3,000 with a mark of 9:29.83 minutes.

"I don't know what it was. I had never seen anything that big before," Haskin said of the Hoosier Dome. "I went to the track and saw this huge building with this little track right in the middle."

"And then I'm used to the longer races and I was really worried going in. I thought that everybody would have more speed, but in the prelims Friday, our heat was faster than the second heat and I started thinking that I had a chance at all-American."

That chance looked to have gone down the drain when Haskin was tripped and fell just before the mile mark at the beginning of the finals on Saturday, but she was able to fight her way back into the pack and she eventually placed ninth with a time of 9:30.93 — 1.1 second off her career-best.

"After I tripped, I thought I had just better get up as fast as I can and try to catch as many people as I could," Haskin said.

Out of the five K-State women who competed at nationals, only Joy Jones failed to qualify for the finals in her event — the 55 meters, and Coach John Capriotti was pretty excited about the performances.

"A fourth, two sixths and a ninth ... I'm very happy," Capriotti said. "I'm extremely proud of those girls."

Trip gets squad ready for league play

By David Svoboda
Sports Reporter

Don't let the record fool you, K-State baseball coach Mike Clark said of his team following its spring break trip through Florida and Mississippi. The team went 2-6 in the games played down south.

Although the Wildcats stand 8-9 overall going into a doubleheader against Southwest Missouri State Wednesday in Springfield, Mo., Clark said the journey had its benefits.

Among them are the emergence of a set, four-man pitching rotation and a feeling that the bullpen is in order.

The team's offense — which had lacked punch early — also showed signs of coming around late in the trip, Clark said.

But before Clark could step back and make an objective analysis of what happened in the week on the road, there was the early frustration of having been there.

"In the first five games, we played eight great innings a game in games that unfortunately went nine innings," Clark said. "There seemed to be always something happening. We line into a double play with the tying runs on, have a ball deflected by a first baseman to the second baseman and have an out recorded. It was frustrating."

"It was truly tough from a coaching standpoint to look those kids in the eyes after some of those games and know what to say. It's a credit to the kids that they bounced back the way they did."

Early in the trip, the team struggled offensively, Clark said.

"Throughout the trip, but particularly early, we didn't perform too well offensively," he said. "Without us doing well offensively, we don't have to play perfect baseball, but we have to be pretty darn close."

Over the final weekend of the series, the 'Cats rebounded from earlier frustrations to beat Southern Mississippi in two of three contests — thus the bounce back Clark had spoken to.

"As frustrating as the first five games were, we were real encouraged after the weekend series," he said.

During that series, K-State was the recipient of yet another outstanding pitching performance from David Hierholzer.

Hierholzer, 3-1, sports an 0.51 ERA. ■ See BASEBALL, Page 8

Conference postseason play dismal

From Staff and Wire Reports
What potentially was the Big Eight's biggest moment turned out to be its biggest flop.

Riding a wave of regular-season top rankings, Big Eight people envisioned three top seeds in the NCAA tournament and who knows what in the Final Four.

Oh, how the mighty fell — and quickly.

Missouri was bounced by Northern Iowa, which up until Friday was best known in league circles for beating K-State at football.

In rapid succession, the Wildcats fell to Xavier and Oklahoma and Kansas were ousted in the second round by North Carolina and UCLA.

The Big Eight was left with a 2-4 tournament record. Status quo was maintained in college basketball as the Atlantic Coast Conference has four teams left in the tournament.

"I don't think I'll even watch the rest of the games," said Missouri sophomore Anthony Peeler.

From mid-January, Missouri and Kansas exchanged the top ranking. Then Oklahoma took the prize.

"All this won't mean a thing," one worried conference official said, "if we don't get at least one team to the Final Four."

Peeler's Missouri Tigers completed one of the most spectacular nosedives in memory. By dropping their first-round match to Northern Iowa, the Big Eight's regular season champions completed a swoon that sent them from 25-2 to 26-6.

"Maybe," said Coach Norm Stewart in reference to the 25-2 part, "we over-achieved."

Steve Henson played brilliantly, but ended his K-State career with the loss to Xavier.

Oklahoma went into the tournament at the top of its game, but took a 79-77 haymaker from North Carolina.

olina. Kansas coach Roy Williams had a hard time accepting the Jayhawks loss.

"I told these guys after the game ... the way they've represented this university has really made me feel at times very inadequate," said Williams, fighting back tears.

The conference lost at least $1 million. A Final Four team would have been worth more than that.

And the potential at Missouri is for even bigger problems than late season losses to the likes of Northern Iowa and Colorado.

An NCAA investigation has dragged on for more than a year. Tough penalties might convince Doug Smith, the Big Eight player of the year, to forego his last year of eligibility and turn pro, while rumors have also circulated that Peeler may transfer to another school should the Tigers get handed a stiff probation.

In just four days, all that the Big Eight had worked for — all of that national exposure and respect — went right down the tubes. Oh well, just wait until football!

Fritz qualifies for NCAA

Staff and Wire Reports

K-State's all-American decathlete Steve Fritz scored 7,643 points to win the Arizona Invitational Decathlon Thursday, qualifying him for the NCAA Outdoor Championships.

With the victory, Fritz, the Big Eight champion from a year ago, defeated last year's NCAA decathlon winner Derek Huff and also the third-place finisher from a year ago, Andrew Fucci.

After the first day of competition, Fritz was in third place behind Huff and Fucci, but the K-State senior used the pole vault event to gain the advantage.

Fritz cleared 15-5 in the pole vault, while Huff and Fucci failed to clear a height. Of the eight competitors, four did not clear a height.

Fritz also used personal-best marks in the 100-meter hurdles and a near-personal best in the discus to take the title.

The second-place finisher at the Arizona invite was Thomas Stevens who scored 7,293 points, while Fucci had 6,761, Scott Steffan had 6,433 and Huff had 6,365.

'Stairs' on display in Chang Gallery

By The Collegian Staff

"The stair is one of the great liberating elements in the physical world. Whether a simple doorstep or a winding staircase, a landscape of notched earth or an urban flight of steps, the stairway shapes a magical passage from one plane of existence to another."

These words on a text panel invite people to view the architectural aspects of stairways at the photography exhibit, "Stairs," in the Chang Gallery of the College of Architecture and Design in Seaton Hall.

The touring exhibit opened March 6 and will remain on view through March 23, said Lynn Ewanow, assistant dean of the college of architecture and design.

The exhibit consists of 30 photographs taken by Henry Plummer, associate professor of architecture at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, during two years of photographing and teaching in Europe.

Plummer received a fellowship from the Graham Foundation for Advanced Studies in the Fine Arts for the project, Ewanow said.

The photos show ancient and modern staircases in Europe, the Middle East and the United States.

Ewanow said "Stairs" exposes students to a part of architecture that is constantly being designed.

The Chang Gallery is open to the public weekdays from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

Conductor orchestrates 6th year

By Heather Anderson
Collegian Reporter

The Kansas State Orchestra has a piece of the Big Apple in conductor Adrian Bryttan.

After receiving formal musical training at the Manhattan School of Music in New York City, debuting as a conductor at Carnegie Hall in 1985, Bryttan has been conducting at K-State for the past five years.

Although it's not Carnegie Hall, Bryttan will be conducting the K-State Orchestra in a concert this week in McCain Auditorium.

The concert will begin at 8 p.m. Thursday.

The concert will feature a repeat performance of the final duet from the opera Carmen, originally performed last spring. The duet will feature soloists Jennifer Edwards and Jerry Langenkamp, both of whom are music instructors.

The orchestra will also perform Beethoven's Fidelio Overture.

"It will be an interesting concert for those who haven't attended a symphony concert before," Bryttan said.

"It will feature a lot of solos, which is usually more interesting for an audience to hear, and it will last only an hour," he said.

The orchestra already performed part of the concert late last month at the Kansas Music Educators Association state high school band performance in Wichita, Bryttan said.

In fact, the orchestra is already beginning preparation for the next concert, which will feature the performance of Mahler's Fourth Symphony, a very difficult piece for any orchestra to play well, Bryttan said.

The orchestra practices five hours per week, and includes music majors and non-music majors.

Auditions for the orchestra are open, Bryttan said.

"Anyone that's ever played in an orchestra has a chance, if they're interested," he said.

The orchestra includes high school student and violinist Melissa Friesen, and some community musicians.

Friesen is not the first high school student to join the orchestra, Bryttan said. At the Manhattan School of Music, Bryttan was the first recipient of the Pablo Casals Award, presented for his musicianship.

He was the founder and musical director of the Notre Dame Opera, and has conducted for the Chicago Opera Theatre, the Tulsa Ballet and the New York Symphony Orchestra.

ERA and has allowed but two earned runs in 35 innings. He has now gone 31 straight innings without allowing an earned run.

The Wildcats also benefitted offensively from the bat of shortstop Craig Wilson, who collected his first home run as a K-Stater.

The success of Hierholzer is not surprising, according to Clark, although the skipper feels Hierholzer's willingness to adapt has made him even more successful than he might have been.

"I think there are some things that we have to do as a conference and as coaches that will hopefully help," she said. "We need to do something and do it in a positive way for the conference."

But, until the Big Eight starts to get the recognition it deserves, it will have to hope that the lone conference entry in the tourney can advance far enough along so that it may raise some eyebrows.

With Oklahoma State's poor showing at home in its first-round game against Michigan, a 77-68 loss last Wednesday, the NCAA tourney selection committee can just sit back and say, "We told you so."

"He didn't have a great summer — he had a good summer," Clark said of Hierholzer's outings in the Kansas City area. "The biggest thing with David has been his desire to make changes to make him better."

Among those changes, Clark said, were a correction in Hierholzer's pitching motion that has taken pressure off his back and has aided in his velocity. It gives him a freer, easier motion, he said.

"He's just done a great job of making hitters hit his pitch," Clark said. "He has that demeanor about him where he will not let a run score. He has lifted his pitching to another level."

Hierholzer now also has three set mates in the starting rotation. Chris Hmielewski, Sean Pedersen and Kent Hipp round out the four-man staff.

The bullpen, Clark said, is also in order, with Dave Christensen, Mike Hedrick, Greg Laddish and Steve Scoville leading the way. Scoville has three saves. The return to form of sophomore spot-starter Greg McNamara, who had been battling a shoulder injury has also been encouraging, Clark said.

Rental proposal changed

Inspection program would affect units built without permits

By Clinton Wolf
Collegian Reporter

A proposed rental inspection program developed by a citizens' advisory committee and the Manhattan city council has been extensively revised by the council.

The city commission and citizens' committee will meet from 6:30 to 9 p.m. today at the Headquarter Fire Station at Denison and Kimball avenues to discuss the changes. Time will be given for public comment beginning at 8 p.m.

The primary change involves the licensing of apartment units.

Under the revised proposal, any housing unit constructed, remodeled or converted with a permit will not need to be inspected before a license is issued. Only those units built without a permit or before the city began issuing permits in 1940 will need to be inspected for licensing under the proposal.

Wade Whitmer, student representative on the citizens' advisory committee and freshman in political science, expressed anger at the changes.

"I'm outraged," Whitmer said. "It's a completely different program. I mean, it's a complete departure from what we've been looking at."

Charles Williams, assistant director of engineering for Manhattan, said he and city attorney William Frost wrote the changes into the proposal based on response from all segments of the community.

"There was some concern as to whether we need to look at apartments," Williams said.

He said various factions within the community want to see different requirements in the proposal.

"We're trying to find a middle ground," Williams said.

Whitmer said he is concerned inspectors will be unable to locate units constructed without a permit, since such construction is illegal.

"How do they plan on verifying these places?" he said. "If we pass this piece of drivel, are they going to wake up tomorrow and say, 'Oh, that's where they are.'"

Whitmer said under the revised proposal, there will be no systematic inspection of rental units, which he believes is the only way to enforce rental codes.

—Wade Whitmer

"What I care about is safety," he said.

Also, Whitmer said he is concerned about apartment units constructed many years ago under a permit not being inspected.

"You're telling me that a house built 50 years ago doesn't need to be inspected?" Whitmer said.

Under the revised proposal, all units will be required to obtain a license for a fee before they can be rented, Williams said. Also, all leases will be required to state that the unit must meet certain standards, and that the renter may request inspection upon signing the lease.

Whitmer said he was concerned about renters being unable to have housing inspected before they moved in.

"What I'm hearing now is that I have to sign a lease for a hell-hole, move in, and then call for an inspection," Whitmer said.

Williams said only landlords or tenants can request inspection of a housing unit. The only other option is for licensors to obtain a court search warrant under definite cases of probable cause, he said.

Should a prospective renter believe the housing is inadequate, Williams said he suggests they agree to rent only if the landlord has it inspected first.

Iran: no deals for 18 hostages

By The Associated Press

NICOSIA, Cyprus — A majority of Iran's parliament members has demanded that the government not negotiate to gain freedom for Western hostages in Lebanon, Tehran radio reported Tuesday.

The radio, monitored in Cyprus, said parliament issued a statement Monday night saying the fate of the captives should depend only on the Lebanese.

The statement, signed by 170 members of the 270-member parliament, was the latest sign of a power struggle in Tehran over the captives.

Moderates led by President Hashemi Rafsanjani have said the issue is moving toward a solution. Hardliners, whose stance was reflected in the parliament statement, oppose freeing the hostages.

"The fate of the Western hostages in Lebanon depends on what the Moslem people of Lebanon want — an end to the U.S. plots in Lebanon and the clarification of the fate of the Lebanese and Palestinian hostages in prisons in the West," the statement said.

The pro-Iranian Lebanese Shiite Moslem groups that hold most of the 18 Westerners have in the past demanded freedom for hundreds of Palestinian and Lebanese prisoners held in Israeli jails.

Many Middle Eastern countries consider Israel part of the West.

"The arrogant mass media's propaganda on separating the fate of the Western hostages from the problems of Lebanon is strongly condemned," the radio quoted the statement as saying.

New county jail location debated at Tuesday forum

By Gregory A. Branson
Collegian Reporter

The location of a new Riley County Jail was debated in front of more than 75 people at a forum sponsored by the League of Women Voters Tuesday night.

Pat Keating, a member of the Manhattan Catholic Schools Commission on Education and a panel member said, "This is not the type of atmosphere that we want our school children to be around."

Other members of the panel included Riley County Commission Chairman Richard Jepsen; Richard Bachamp, a resident who lives near the jail; and Eric Shoults, assistant county engineer.

The proposed plan would create a combination police station and jail that would occupy a city block where the Riley County Police Station is now located. A grass lot adjacent to the police station would also be used.

Neighborhood residents use this lot for a practice field for city league T-ball and children's soccer during the summer, but the lot is owned by the county.

Bachamp said he was concerned about the loss of park area in the city and the increased traffic due to the larger facility.

The facility would be an improvement over what is currently in the neighborhood, Jepsen said.

Shoults agreed and said the building was designed with uneven roof lines, and will be built with native limestone to blend in better with houses, schools and churches in the immediate area. Also, landscaping would help conceal the vehicle confiscation parking lot, which was a major concern of audience members.

Residents of the neighborhood complained about cars that have been confiscated and are being held as evidence by police. Currently these cars are parked in a lot next to the police station.

Several tin buildings used to hold evidence for upcoming court cases also occupy the block.

Shoults said the larger building will hold the evidence, and a "U" shaped parking area will be surrounded by the building. Up to six cars can be parked in this area, which won't be visible to the street, and the tin evidence buildings would be removed.

Bachamp said the police station currently has 10 confiscated vehicles, but sometimes has more. He asked where these vehicles could be parked.

Shoults said the other vehicles would probably be parked in the parking lot, but more landscaping could be added to shield the parking lot from the streets around the station.

Keating, Bachamp and several members of the audience asked if other locations had been studied for the site of the new facility.

Shoults said the only other site that had been studied was downtown adjacent to the courthouse, but because of soil conditions, the site wasn't feasible.

Keating asked why the jail would have to be built close to the courthouse or in town at all.

"The county has two big issues right now — the jail and the landfill," he said. "If we have to put the jail where criminals are, does that also mean we are going to have to put the landfill where all the trash comes from?"

The county would save as much as $1 million if the facility is built on the site of the current jail, Shoults said. Money would be saved because the current jail and police station buildings are used in the plan and the site would not have to be improved before construction could begin.

He also said the jail would have to be in close proximity to the courthouse because of transportation costs. Shoults said transportation costs could be as much as $100,000 per year even if the jail was as close as 10 miles away.

"There are 80 to 100 trips between the police administration side of the jail and the courthouse every day," Shoults said. "And this isn't because of inefficiency, but because of the paper flow and when the papers have to be delivered."

A member of the audience asked if a juvenile detention center would be included as part of the plan.

Shoults said the plan originally included a portion of the facility to be used for juvenile detention, but he was informed earlier this week by the state Department of Social and Reha-

Lithuanian youths volunteer

By The Associated Press

VILNIUS, U.S.S.R. — Hundreds of Lithuanian youths volunteered Tuesday to serve as the breakaway republic's customs and frontier guards despite a Kremlin warning not to change border security operations.

Lithuanian President Vytautas Landsbergis said the warning from Moscow actually marked the beginning of negotiations on the Baltic republic's demand for independence. He said Lithuania agreed with much of the Kremlin statement, including the order to maintain trade ties.

Lithuania declared itself independent on March 11, 50 years after it was occupied by the Red Army and annexed to the Soviet Union. The Soviet Parliament declared the decree invalid but did not say what steps it would take to stop the republic from seceding.

In a stern warning to Lithuania on Monday, the Kremlin ordered its own ministries to ensure there were no interruptions in customs and frontier procedures and in trade, transport and communications.

Lithuania Tuesday moved ahead with plans to take charge of its borders, however, and youths volunteered to help.

"I served two years in the occupying army, and now I want to serve in my own country's," said a young man as he rushed to turn in his application in a cramped office in the Lithuanian capital's center.

Lithuanian officials said there were no plans to arm the border force.

The symbolic value of the force may help convince other governments that Lithuania is controlling its territory and should be formally recognized as a full-fledged country, said Edward Tuskenis of the republic parliament's information center.

The small Baltic republic was quiet Tuesday, with none of the disturbing signs of Soviet troop movements that intimidated the population over the weekend. Officials said there also were no signs of an economic blockade by Moscow.

"We are still receiving gas and oil," Lithuania's two most critical imports from the Soviet Union, said Prime Minister Kazimera Prunskiene.

African colony Namibia becomes nation

By The Associated Press

WINDHOEK, Namibia — Namibia became the world's newest nation Wednesday as Africa's last colony celebrated the end of 75 years of South African rule with traditional tribal dances and choirs singing liberation songs.

The South African flag was lowered for the last time just after midnight local time by South African soldiers and the new blue, red and green Namibian flag raised by Namibian troops to a bugle fanfare. Thousands of blacks and whites cheered and clapped the flag ceremony, but some yelled "Down, down!" as the South Africa flag was lowered.

U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar hailed the new nation's independence as a triumph for democracy. "The independence of Namibia also marks the triumph of the international rule of law. The achievement bears eloquent testimony to the norms of democracy and human rights," he said.

Perez de Cuellar swore in former guerrilla leader Sam Nujoma as the first president of the new nation's government. "Africa's last colony is from this hour liberated," Nujoma said in his inaugural address.

Choirs sang "God Bless Africa" as the crowds cheered in Windhoek Athletic Stadium. Tribal dancers sang and jumped with joy as hundreds of foreign leaders and officials watched the celebrations.

South African President F.W. de Klerk marked the end of his nation's rule of Namibia by calling for peace in the region. "I stand here tonight as an advocate for peace. The season for violence has passed for Namibia and the whole of southern Africa," he said.

"It is above all a moment for hope. Hope that the future of this vast and beautiful land will bring peace," de Klerk added.

Soldiers of the new Namibian army in blue uniforms and green berets marched briskly through the stadium to the beat of drums as officers bearing swords barked commands. About 25,000 spectators, some of whom waited 12 hours for the ceremony, roared approval at their first sight of the new army.

A runner bearing a torch that had been carried about 1,800 miles around the country ran into the stadium and lighted a "Flame of Freedom."

"This is a great time. It means we have freedom. We are going to celebrate all night," said Nicholas van Wyk, 21, a hotel worker. Hundreds of troops, police and security agents guarded the ceremonies and the dozens of foreign leaders and officials.

The huge, arid territory of 1.3 million people on Africa's south-west coast was a German colony until it was captured by South Africa during World War I.

Shops and main streets were festooned Tuesday with Namibian flags as workers put

Bill allows free Soviet travel

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet citizens would be allowed to travel abroad freely under a bill approved Tuesday by a parliamentary committee.

The official news agency Tass said the Supreme Soviet legislature now will debate the measure and committee members will insist it be adopted at the current session, which ends in late April.

Under provisions of the bill, permission would not be required for Soviets to leave and return, either for short trips or permanent residence abroad, Tass said.

"A passport for traveling abroad will be issued for a period of five years to whoever applies for it," the news agency said.

Germany scraps aid program

BONN, West Germany (AP) — West Germany decided Tuesday to scrap a 40-year-old aid program for East German resettlers by this summer, saying it expects major strides toward unification by then that would make the aid unnecessary.

The Bonn government also stepped up pressure on its new East German allies to come to a quick decision on the future governing coalition in East Berlin.

Volker Ruehe, head of Chancellor Helmut Kohl's Christian Democratic Union, held talks in East Berlin with leaders of the three-party conservative alliance that placed first in Sunday's East German elections. Among them was East German Christian Democratic Union chairman Lothar de Maiziere, the likely new premier.

Exxon case brought to jury

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — The case of Joseph Hazelwood went to the jury Tuesday after a defense attorney called the Exxon Valdez skipper a scapegoat of political powers and a prosecutor portrayed him as a reckless drunk.

A defense attorney argued that the 7-week-old trial was a political action in which the state seeks to shift blame for the disaster.

"Maybe the state hopes the people will look the other way when it comes to their responsibility," defense attorney Dick Madson declared in his final argument.

Madson said crew members were not the only ones who saw that Hazelwood wasn't impaired aboard the Exxon Valdez when it struck a charted reef a year ago Saturday. He pointed to 21 witnesses at Hazelwood's criminal trial who said the captain was sober and showed no signs of being impaired by alcohol.

Gloria Estefan injured

SCRANTON, Pa. — Singer Gloria Estefan of the hit group Miami Sound Machine suffered a broken vertebra Tuesday when a truck ran into the band's bus on a snow-covered highway in the Pocono Mountains, authorities said.

The 32-year-old singer was in stable condition at Community Medical Center in Scranton with a broken vertebra in the middle of her back, said hospital spokeswoman Nancy Parlo.

Gloria Estefan was not paralyzed, said Dr. William Pfeifer, who treated her. He refused to say if surgery was planned.

Five other people and the truck driver were treated at the hospital and four were later released. They included the singer's husband, Emilio Estefan Jr., 37, who suffered head and hand injuries, and their 9-year-old son, Nayib, who suffered a neck injury, the hospital said.

Train crash kills father, son

KANSAS CITY, Kan. (AP) — A father and son were killed Monday morning in Kansas City, Kan., when their car was struck by a freight train as they drove to work.

Authorities said George Rogers, 56, and Matthew Rogers, 31, both of Kansas City, Kan., died instantly when their car was hit about 6:30 a.m.

Police said Rogers apparently stopped at the tracks momentarily, as if to look both ways, then pulled onto the track.

The crossing has a sign but no gates or lights.

Liberal woman killed on I-70

SALINA (AP) — A Liberal woman was killed Monday when her car veered off Interstate 70 in Lincoln County and rolled over several times.

The Highway Patrol said the victim, Shirley Rodenberg, 50, was thrown from her car. The accident occurred about 20 miles west of Salina.

Future of 'ring girls' debated

KANSAS CITY, Kan. (AP) — The city's new Athletic Commission designed to promote professional boxing and wrestling quickly ran into its first controversy Monday — whether scantily clad women should walk around the ring between rounds.

"Are we going to be promoting a family-type activity or what?" asked commission member Richard Kaminski.

In some cities, women wearing minimal attire are hired to carry cards in the ring signaling the number of the next round.

Kaminski said that could send the wrong message to families wanting to attend fights at Memorial Hall. But commission member Norman Justice said he thought the group should be "more concerned about thumbless gloves than brassieres."

Thumbless boxing gloves are credited with reducing the number of eye injuries to boxers, but they are not mandatory in many professional matches.

Abortion rights to be debated

The issue of abortion rights will be discussed in a forum beginning at 8 p.m. today in the living room of Putnam Hall.

Pro-choice speakers at the forum will be Rep. Katha Hurt, D-Manhattan and Jan Galitzer, representative of the Religious Coalition for Abortion Rights in Manhattan.

Pro-life speakers include Renee Ambruster, representative of Kansans for Life, and Rep. Artie Lucas, R-Highland, who sponsored the pre-notification bill which would prohibit abortions of those under 18 without parental consent.

The speakers will have three minutes to tell about themselves and what they are doing and then will have 10 minutes to state their views and opinions. The speakers will alternate from pro-choice to pro-life.

Following the four presentations will be a 30-40 minute period for questions.

"We want to stress that this is for all University students," said Chris Ralph, director of Putnam Hall.

Ralph, junior in political science, asked that there be no signs or protesting.

"We hope to keep things peaceful and open up the marketplace of ideas," he said. "I wanted to do this because I'm interested in the turn of events that have taken place on the floor of the House at the Capitol."

Purdue lures coaches

By Catherine Doud
Assistant Managing Editor

Ed Schiappa, director of debate and assistant professor of speech, and Mary Keehner, assistant debate coach and speech instructor, will be leaving for jobs at Purdue University after this semester.

Schiappa, who coaches the No. 2 ranked K-State debate team, will be an assistant professor at Purdue.

Purdue does not have a debate team.

"It will be basically the same as here, but no debate," Schiappa said. "It's mostly research, a scholarly position."

Schiappa said Purdue has one of the top doctoral communication programs in the country.

"It's a move up on strictly an academic program," Schiappa said.

"It's a real wise choice for both professional and personal reasons," Keehner said.

Schiappa said he would miss working with the debate team.

"I'm really going to miss working with the kids," Schiappa said. "It's very painful. They're kind of like my kids."

Keehner did not expect the team's quality to deteriorate, despite losing two coaches.

"Selfishly, I'd like to say Ed and I have been very important to the team's success," Keehner said. See DEBATE, Page 12

Debaters drop to No. 2

UCLA captures top spot in national ranking

By Catherine Doud
Assistant Managing Editor

The debate team, which was ranked No. 1 the entire year, has slipped to No. 2 in the official Cross Examination Debate Association rankings.

The University of California, Los Angeles, has captured the top spot in the latest rankings.

Director of debate, Ed Schiappa, said the rankings did not accurately represent the talent of the two teams.

"I think it's a slight injustice," Schiappa said. "They have scored most of their points by loading up in JV tournaments or by dominating large, weaker tournaments. Whereas we have gotten points the old-fashioned way. We earned them going to top-ranked tournaments and winning them."

The national rankings are determined by points that are acquired by winning and placing at tournaments. Junior varsity tournament wins count the same as varsity wins, regardless of the caliber of the competition.

"They (UCLA) haven't had much competition," said Steve Collins, senior in speech education and debater. "When they go to tournaments we do, they usually do terrible in open competition."

"I think we're a little spoiled," Mary Keehner, assistant debate coach, said. "I think we'll be disappointed if we end up second, but it's still a big improvement over last year."

"I also think it will be an incredible shame if we don't pull it out in the next few weeks."

"As a squad, we've won more major national tournaments than any other team," Schiappa said.

K-State debaters have consistently done well against UCLA teams this year.

"Our record against UCLA is 11-1," Schiappa said. "It's frustrating to the debaters to dominate them, and then have them win by ducking the competition."

"Whenever we compete head to head with them, we beat them," Keehner said. "We're a better team. I think the records prove it."

"We will end the year no lower than No. 2," Schiappa said. "The only question is if we can catch them at nationals."

The national tournament will be March 29 through April 2 at Southwest Missouri State University in Springfield, Mo.

Schiappa said he still has hopes for regaining the top spot before the final ranking.

"We have not given up," he said. "This is not the final ranking. A very strong showing at nationals can overtake and win. It will take a very strong showing."

—Ed Schiappa director of debate

The team of Jason Klein, freshman in business, and K.J. Wall, freshman in speech, took first place at the National Junior Varsity Championship Tournament March 17 through 19 at Johnson County Community College in Overland Park.

"We have won that tournament for the past 3 years in a row," Schiappa said. "No one else has done that."

Wall, who will also be competing in the national tournament, said he thought the team had a good chance to regain the top ranking.

"It all depends on nationals," Wall said. "Our top four teams all have a good chance to make up the points. We're not too far behind."

In other recent tournament action, the team captured first, second and third place honors out of 55 teams at the Delta Sigma Rho Tau Kappa Alpha National Tournament.

The DSRTKA is a select national honorary. K-State competed against other top teams such as Cornell and Macalester at the tournament.

"We sort of dominated the tournament," Schiappa said.

The team of Dave Filippi, junior in speech, and Rich McCollum, junior in speech, won first place. Wall and Klein won second place. Marty Horn, junior in speech, and Collins won third place.

Only one tournament lies between the team and the national tournament — the University of Nevada at Reno tourney, Thursday.

"One reason we're going is that UCLA will be there," Schiappa said. "We want to make sure they don't earn anymore points."

Two teams will be traveling to the tournament.

"I'd like to send more, but we simply can't afford it."

The team has been actively trying to regain the top spot.

Women with AIDS refused service at New York clinics

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Women who arrange for abortions at many New York City clinics often find their appointments canceled once they reveal that they are infected with the AIDS virus, an informal survey suggests.

Callers from the city's human rights commission made appointments with 30 abortion clinics and physicians that advertised in the Yellow Pages. Twenty canceled the appointment after the caller said she was infected with the human immunodeficiency virus, or HIV, but had no symptoms of AIDS.

Katherine Franke, a commission lawyer who led the informal study, said 12 clinics said they did not have adequate infection control while others said abortion on an HIV-infected woman was too complicated a procedure for them to handle and referred the caller to a hospital.

"Those were the nice responses," she said. "On the other end, we had some that just hung up or said 'We can't treat your kind.' Many

Panel studies drinking fine

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — People under the age of 21 who are convicted of purchasing, possessing or consuming alcohol would face a minimum fine of $100 if a bill discussed Tuesday at a House Federal and State Committee hearing is passed.

The bill calls for violators who are 18, 19 and 20 years old to be charged with a class C misdemeanor statewide and imposes a uniform $100 minimum fine. It also calls for violators under the age of 18 to pay a fine of $100 to $500.

Presently, fines for those under 21 caught buying, possessing or drinking liquor, or attempting to obtain it, are set by local ordinance and there is no uniformity.

Rusty Wilson, owner of the Last Chance Restaurant and Saloon, said he supports the bill because the current punishment for obtaining and consuming alcohol is not tough enough.

Wilson said that, as a bar owner in Manhattan, he could be fined $100 to $1,000 for people under 21 consuming alcohol in his establishment. Those under 21 caught in his bar are usually only fined $50, he said.

The bill would let people know that if they do get caught, the fine will be stiff, Wilson said. "It's easy for students now to call mom and daddy and say, 'I need $50.' It might be harder to ask for $250."

Rep. James Lowther, R-Emporia, said he supports the bill because there should be statewide uniformity for punishment, and the punishment should be substantial enough to make a difference. He also suggested larger fines for subsequent violations.

Touch can be purest of all languages

There I was flying over what appeared to be a compartmentalized Kansas. I was soaring toward the harsh reality that the remnants of spring break existed in my last few minutes strapped to the seat, cars popping, jaws yawning, with my fellow partners in flight ignoring each other, fearing the threat of an intrusion upon their privacy. I too felt threatened, yet was lucky enough to be seated by the window with a seat between me and that man in Seat C.

Looking down and out of the window, I felt all my aunts in Nebraska have somehow been around longer than they insist, for all of the earth looked as if they had patched, stitched and delicately quilted the landscape. But what sombre colors they chose.

We had already dropped below the clouds, falling from the blue-eyeshadow skies, into the melancholy day within which I eventually landed.

The Seat C man smiled at me. The young Seat A suntanned-stud behind me, jammed his knees into the back of my seat, rocking incessantly within his self-contained concert. And I stared blankly out the window occasionally spotting black spots.

Earlier I had ignored the stewardess as she pointed out the exits and the oxygen mask, and now I was wishing I hadn't pretended to be bravely uninterested; what if the plane went down? I would leave the world without a moment of honest, enjoyable, spontaneous human interaction within that hour in flight.

But I had received a body massage right before leaving! I had been decadent enough to indulge in the opportunity to have someone's hands on me, totally, selfishly, deliciously, for an hour or so. What was I to regret? I had been touched much. It cost me, though — thirty bucks. Touching is in such demand that I paid the cost of a week's worth of groceries in exchange for an hour of contact.

We need to touch each other more. Touching should not be a commodity. If I can sit and enjoyably pet my dog or cat for lengths of time, then I can surely soothe another human being free of charge. Not to say that the masseuse shouldn't have charged me.

I was stressed, though. We all are stressed. All these columns to write, I just couldn't take it anymore. But honestly, if I had been more attuned to my body's needs, and likewise, more attuned to the needs of my friends, perhaps everybody's tension could have been relieved. (Curb the imagination here - don't interpret my call for relieving each other's tension as something other than it is — an innocent and concerned call for bettering humanity).

Touch can be sexual, though, especially the "furtive grope" of yesteryear. But now the "furtive grope," that slight brush against another's heaving breast, is underrated, even nonexistent. The mysteries of the body, the textures and colors of skin and the shadows of the body are not unknown or hidden, but generally well-viewed, and somehow have diminished in that titillating appeal.

But touch should not only occur between lovers, but between friends, families and strangers. Touch meant for communication of care and empathy, not manipulation or power, we need desperately. As children, we developed because of being touched, held and comforted. And as adults, our development is incomplete and ongoing; we cannot forego the need for basking in someone else's arms. When my grandmother holds me, I long to be able to hold my grandchildren as firmly and securely as she holds me. She blankets my anxieties and doubts.

When the plane landed and interrupted my daydreaming, I felt quite content in being safe and with the opportunity to touch, ripe and potentially fruitful. Getting up from my seat, to push myself a place in line, I brushed against the Seat C man and wondered why I had been so hesitant to even mumble meaningless formalities with him. The suntanned-stud of Seat A glowed at me, and I wondered if he had ever been "furtively groped."

Once off the plane, my mother was waiting, her hands cupped in front of her, ready to engulf me as usual. I immediately stiffened my collapsed and sentimental spine. She enveloped me in all her wonderful touch and I had to work to release myself in her arms. I was still like a proud adolescent, who loved her mother so much that a little restraint protected her from shamelessly expressing such intensity.

Touch must be dealt with delicately in its intent and use. But if authentic, and expressed unashamedly, touch can be the most pure and resonant of all languages.

Vote of no confidence stalls Israeli-Arab talks

After a slightly more than a year in power, the Israeli coalition government of Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir was handed a vote of no confidence by the Knesset, the Israeli parliament.

The vote came after the tenuous partnership between the Labor and Likud parties collapsed. The dividing issue was peace talks with the Palestinians.

The collapse of the government is not altogether surprising. During the 1988 elections, Shamir's conservative Likud party advocated a no-compromise stance on negotiating with the Palestinians. The Labor party, led by Shimon Peres and Yitzhak Rabin, leaned toward negotiations with "representatives of the Palestinian people" — not necessarily the Palestine Liberation Organization — to reach a settlement and end Israeli occupation of the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

Neither party won a strong mandate in the elections; thus the coalition.

But the Palestinian situation is the most important issue facing the Israeli government. The two-year-old uprising, the Intifada, revived one of the last obstacles left to Israeli security in the Middle East. A government divided on this issue, especially when the PLO and the United States have been offering to work toward a settlement, was doomed from the start.

The division in the government, however, reflects a division among the Israeli people on the question of the Palestinians. To negotiate with the PLO is to deal with a group that was once better known for its terrorism than its diplomacy. To continue in limbo, occupying the territories but not formally incorporating them into Israel, threatens the legitimacy of Israel as a democracy. The hundreds of thousands of Palestinians living in the occupied territories have no political rights, but are ruled by a state that claims to believe in concepts like democratic voting and freedom.

During his term, Shamir found it best to drag his feet. He came up with excuses for not negotiating a settlement with the PLO and an intermediary, such as the United States or Egypt. Most recently, he even managed to come up with excuses for not negotiating about the possibility of negotiations.

The vote of no confidence could work two ways. It could eventually mean new elections and a government that might take steps toward a solution. The second, and more likely, result is that it buys Israel even more time. For now, attention has been diverted from the Palestinian issue to the more pressing issue of having a government at all. Any new coalition will, of course, be extended a grace period of several months before it is forced to act. Delays and votes of no confidence could continue endlessly.

In the meantime, the violence and repression in the occupied territories continues, and the Palestinians become less and less willing to patiently await the Israelis' arrival at the negotiating table.

LETTERS

Selection unfair

Editor,

This letter is an effort to make known the questionable selection process for the Delta Upsilon calendar-girl contest.

A friend of mine interviewed for a spot in the contest. She was told to fill out a questionnaire and submit a picture of herself.

At the top of the questionnaire, one of the questions was, "are you a member of a sorority?" My friend was not. After looking over the application, the interviewer (a fraternity member) seemed uninterested and my friend had to ask most of the questions. She left puzzled at the awkward way she was treated. She recently received a letter stating that she wasn't chosen for the contest.

At this point all would be fine if she weren't qualified. This person, however, is obviously qualified.

This past summer my friend won a trip to Cancun in a similar contest at the very establishment holding the Delta Upsilon contest. She has also done professional modeling for the Coors company, car shows and has a pending layout for Swimwear U.S.A. and Swimwear America. Her personality is equally as impressive as her stunning looks.

After contacting a friend in the Delta Upsilon fraternity, I was told that only three or four people decide who the calendar contestants will be. These three or four people are all members of Delta Upsilon. He further stated that it is likely that the selection process is politically motivated. It is considered a greek event for which sorority members who know the selection people have first shot.

I understood the contest to be open to any female K-State student. All applicants deserve a fair chance and the people going to the contest deserve to see the very best K-State has to offer — greek or non-greek.

Analysis shallow

Editor,

John Mussman's column March 19 was right on the dot in pointing out that humans are omnivores. In the living world many life forms survive by eating other life forms. This may seem to be gruesome to some sensibilities but is true nevertheless. Subjective preference for eating plant over animal life does not change the basic reality.

As omnivores, humans have a choice. Possibly this is the problem plaguing the vegetarian mindset. However, Mussman goes overboard in going to the other extreme and arguing that vegetarianism would result in even more deforestation and other disasters.

Animals raised for meat are fed grains and other plant materials in addition to grazing. The amount of grain consumed to raise a pound of meat actually suggests that vegetarianism reduces the pressure on land as well as the heads of cattle that need to be maintained at the expense of other species. Poorly thought out arguments such as those advanced by Mussman show insufficient effort.

Humans like the taste of meat. Meat has nutritional value in moderation like any other food. There is nothing unnatural about eating meat or using animal products. Vegetarian animals like cattle, deer and sheep have been observed to raid bird nests and kill small animals, presumably to supplement calcium by eating the bones. Natural means eating what is necessary and palatable.

The extent to which meat is a part of our diet is an economic decision based on demand and availability. The consequences of subsidizing meat production, not reflected in the price, are an increase in green-house gases like carbon-dioxide due to fermentation in cattle stomachs, destruction of virgin forest to raise cattle, extermination of other species to raise animals preferred for meat, not to mention undue cruelty. These are value-based judgments. What is cruel to a person is just fun to another. Responsible legislation and better regulation can help reflect the real cost of raising meat as well as set realistic production and consumption levels. Shallow analysis like Mussman's only polarizes the situation and possibly leads to inaction until it is too late.

Review blind

Editor,

As president of the K-State American Indian Science and Engineering Society, I am writing in response to Mark Schreiner's review of "House Made of Dawn," UPC's movie last week. Schreiner says that this movie "fails to provide social commentary, entertainment, or anything except for yawns." I suppose this could be said by someone who wishes to remain closed-minded and disrespectful of another culture and not be interested in learning something new.

I find it interesting that Schreiner is able to make the biblical connection of Cain and Abel yet doesn't know how Abel is spelled. Another thing that is interesting about his review is his saying Abel and his friends have a meeting with a "warlock" and eat "vegetables as a sort of Communion." The last I heard, the Native American people are led by a spiritual leader, or even a medicine man. A warlock is someone connected with witchcraft, not the natural spiritualism of Native Americans.

The most surprising aspect of Schreiner's review is his implying that Abel is passive and therefore seals his fate. He doesn't seem to understand that the reason Abel can't stay in the city is that he can't be passive. He can't be like Benally and take what the cop dishes out. He can't do anything about that because he is an Indian. Who would believe him?

This film shows exactly the "plight of the American Indian." It shows how, to be American, multi-cultural people must give up who they really are, and what they believe. Who are we, the Americans to say that someone is lesser than us because they look different of come from a different place?

Mark Schreiner, next time you go see a movie about a culture other than your own, open up your mind and your heart and try to learn. Experience something new — don't watch and judge. Hopefully, one day everyone will be open to others' ideas and beliefs and we'll all learn something new.

Mammal rediscovered

Lost lemurs found in Madagascar

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — A long-lost, tree-dwelling relative of humans and apes has been found in a leech-infested rain forest in Madagascar, an event described as one of the most important rediscoveries of mammals in a decade.

Bernhard Meier, a biologist at Ruhr University in Bochum, West Germany, emerged from the forest with an injured knee, blood poisoning and malaria — as well as the first photographs of the hairy-eared dwarf lemur, a tiny primate never before seen alive by scientists.

Five preserved specimens, the first collected 115 years ago, are held in museums, but until Meier's discovery researchers had no idea whether the creature still existed.

The first complete description of the animal, known to scientists as Alouatta trichotis, will be published shortly in Folia Primatologica, a scientific journal. Meier made the discovery last April, but it is only now being reported.

The lemur (pronounced LEE-mur) is brown and shaped like a mouse, with a body 5 inches long and a 7-inch, furry tail. It weighs no more than 3 1/2 ounces.

"Alouatta is the smallest primate species in existence, except during the dry season when the mouse lemur is not fat and is smaller," Meier said in a telephone interview Tuesday from his home.

The lemurs of Madagascar are scientifically important because they are group of primates that evolved in isolation during the millions of years that the other primates — monkeys, apes and humans — were evolving elsewhere.

"In effect, Madagascar is a giant experiment in alternative evolution," the New Scientist, an English journal, has said.

The rediscovery of the lemur is important because it is the only surviving species of an entire genus of lemurs that have disappeared, said Russell Mittermeier, president of Conservation International in Washington, D.C., and a primate specialist.

"If you lose a species, there are close relatives around," he said. "If you lose a genus, that's worse." The discovery of the hairy-eared dwarf lemur is one of the two most important rediscoveries of mammals in a decade, Mittermeier said. The other was the rediscovery of the soft-spined porcupine in Brazil in 1986, he said.

"It is a little bit bizarre that this animal was discovered as early as 1875, and a scientist never saw this species alive," said Meier, who has a reputation among other wildlife biologists as a fearless explorer.

"I went three times to that forest to find that animal, although I already knew it was there," he said. An old man in a nearby village had told him about it.

To get to the forest, near Mananara on the island country off southeast Africa, "you need to hike three days, long and strong," Meier said. "Nothing is dry after a few kilometers because you need to cross many big rivers and creeks," containing leeches.

"The leeches are not dangerous. Most people say, 'Oh, leeches, I don't want these plum-sized, ugly, satisfied leeches on me'... But the mosquitoes are dangerous. They transmit malaria."

Local television program focuses on international topics

By Monica Marcotte
Collegian Reporter

"Good evening, my name is Robert Auten. Welcome to 'International Affairs.'"

Being the host of a television show is something most people never have the chance to do. Robert Auten, graduate student in history, accepted the challenge. His show, "International Affairs," airs Friday nights on cable Channel 27.

Auten said he had watched programs such as the "Capital Gang" and "Crossfire" but didn't like the approach to news they used.

"Those shows try to bring the most radical opposing views together for the sake of ratings," Auten said. "I wanted 'International Affairs' to take an educated look at some of the world's problems."

Auten approached Jerry Morrow, program director at KBLE, the Manhattan cable channel, with the idea of a show that would cover the spectrum of world affairs.

"I wanted the show to be informative and avoid the showmanship that takes place on some talk shows," Auten said.

Morrow liked the idea and agreed to a trial taping of the show, Auten said. The show is aired every week under a free-standing verbal contract, and is in no way affiliated with K-State.

The show first aired last October and has covered such topics as the Soviet Union, Eastern and Central Europe, Lebanon, Japan, India and the U.S. defense budget.

Once Auten has picked a topic, he spends a considerable amount of time researching for background information.

"With the assistance of people who specialize in the study of our ever-changing world, it has been my intent to offer a show that informs and presents various solutions to the world's problems," Auten said.

Auten has had several K-State professors as guests, including Aruna Michie, associate professor of political science; Alden Williams; professor of political science; John C.K. Daly, assistant professor of history; and Michael Suleiman, professor of political science.

"I think it's great that we have a locally produced news program that taps the expertise of the academic community," Daly said. "What it means is that we are able to give valuable commentary on major issues in real time. Robert is an extremely industrious student and researcher."

Auten said he has contacted Sen. Nancy Kassebaum's press secretary about the possibility of interviewing Kassebaum on his show. Her press secretary requested a sample tape of Auten's work, and Auten is awaiting further word from Kassebaum's staff.

Auten said the show has helped him gain valuable experience in broadcasting and scheduling.

Homeless people being counted in nationwide, Kansas census

By The Associated Press

WICHITA — Census workers began counting the homeless in Kansas and nationwide Tuesday night amid controversy about how accurate and useful the resulting numbers will be.

In Wichita, six census enumerators working in teams of two left the Census Bureau office downtown shortly after 6 p.m. to begin checking on homeless shelters.

"I think the census is going to hurt people who are homeless because the number is too low," said Tim Method, a resident at the Interfaith Inn shelter.

The 24-year-old sign company worker said he doesn't see how census enumerators are going to come close to finding most of the homeless.

"If people are hiding from other people who are trying to find them, how are these census people going to find them?" he said.

Homeless advocates fear politicians will use the census figures as 100 percent accurate and base funding decisions on them.

"It's better to have no information than to be basing decisions on wrong information," said Renee Zimmerman, a United Way of the Plains vice president.

Cookie Nonken, manager of the Wichita census office, said the bureau realizes the count isn't going to be accurate.

"But it's a start. We're making an effort," she said.

Seven shelters are available in Wichita.

At the St. Anthony Family Shelter, 18 people from six families were counted by census workers.

"There was no problem," said a shelter staffer who asked not to be identified by name.

New farmers to pay lower rates

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The state announced Tuesday creation of the "Beginning Farmer Program" to help beginning farmers get started in business.

The plan, unveiled at a Statehouse news conference by Gov. Mike Hayden, Agriculture Secretary Sam Brownback and Allen Bell, secretary of the Kansas Development Finance Authority, will give new farmers a break on the interest rates they pay on loans to purchase land and equipment.

Under the program, banks and eligible farmers will negotiate terms of the loans sought by the farmers, then tax-free bonds will be issued to finance the loans, and banks will give the farmers a reduced interest rate because of the money they will save by paying lower taxes.

The program costs the state no money.

"It is the epitome of simplicity," Bell said.

Inflation rate increases

Clothing costs cause rise in February prices

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The largest surge in clothing costs in 43 years helped retail prices rise a brisk 0.5 percent in February even as fuel oil bills plummeted, the government said Tuesday.

The increase in the Labor Department's Consumer Price Index was about twice what had been anticipated and came on top of a weather-fueled 1.1 percent jump in January, the steepest in 7½ years.

Taken together, the first two months of the year represent an annual inflation rate of 9.9 percent, compared with 4.6 percent for all of 1989.

White House press secretary Marlin Fitzwater, on the other hand, said that, "overall, we continue to believe that inflation is low and under control."

The report flustered financial markets, where stock and bond prices fell immediately after its release. Traders interpreted the still-high inflation as an indication the Federal Reserve Board likely would not lower interest rates in the near future.

Economists said it was difficult to sort out underlying trends because so many of the report's components were swung by special factors.

An earlier-than-usual start to the spring fashion season pushed clothing costs up 3.3 percent on a seasonally adjusted basis. It was the biggest one-month gain since the government began tracking such prices and represented about two-fifths of the overall February increase.

Fuel oil prices plunged 18.7 percent, a record since 1935, following a 26.3 percent advance in January. A freeze in late December had caused shortages but unusual warmth this year quickly produced a fuel glut. Other energy prices and food costs, however, did not rebound.

In separate economic news:

■ The Commerce Department said the U.S. trade deficit widened to $9.3 billion in January, up from $7.7 billion in December. A 44 percent surge in oil shipments drove up imports, swamping a 4 percent climb in exports, which rose to an all-time high of $32.1 billion.

■ The Labor Department said U.S. workers' earnings rose 0.3 percent in February after adjustments for inflation and seasonal factors. That followed a 1.2 percent drop in January, much steeper than an earlier government estimate of 0.7 percent.

For the year, analysts expect inflation to be stable. Low unemployment is keeping wages rising. But economic sluggishness, particularly in manufacturing, is keeping inflation from getting out of control.

Many, but not all, economists look forward to a succession of milder reports this year and look toward a 1990 rate just under last year's 4.6 percent pace.

The Labor Department offered these details of February prices:

■ Energy costs overall were down 0.7 percent following a 5.1 percent gain in January. Gasoline prices rose 0.8 percent after a 7.7 percent spurt. Natural gas prices fell 0.2 percent while electricity costs rose 0.9 percent.

■ Food costs rose 0.5 percent after a 1.8 percent rise in January. Dairy product costs rose 0.9 percent. So did fruit and vegetables, following a 10.2 percent gain in January after a freeze ruined crops from Texas to Florida.

Tomato prices jumped 30.7 percent in February. For the two months combined, they were up 129.4 percent. However, egg prices dropped 9.3 percent. There also were declines for sugar, sweets, fats and oils.

A new crop is pushing vegetable prices lower in March, analysts said.

■ Excluding the volatile food and energy categories, prices rose 0.5 percent, largely because of clothing price hikes.

Spring fashion lines were introduced earlier in the year than normal, throwing off the department's seasonal adjustments. Infants' and toddlers' clothing rose 10.3 percent. Women's and girls' clothing was up 5 percent, while men's and boys' clothes rose 1.2 percent.

■ There was a 0.2 percent drop in new car prices as dealers tried a new round of incentives to stimulate lagging sales.

The various changes left the Consumer Price Index at 128.0 before seasonal adjustments. That meant that a hypothetical selection of goods and services costing $100 in the 1982-84 base period would have cost $128 last month, up from $121.60 a year earlier.

Wyoming files suit against athletic department

By Chris Hays
Sports Editor

The University of Wyoming filed suit Tuesday in Albany (Wyo.) County district court against the K-State athletic department for what Wyoming officials call a breach of contract.

The allegation stems from a 1984 contract which called for the two schools to swap home-and-home football games during the 1990 and 1991 seasons.

The two teams were first contracted to meet Sept. 15 at Laramie, but K-State, in what was part of a schedule modification implemented by athletic director Steve Miller and then-first-year coach Bill Snyder, slated a game with New Mexico

State on the same day.

Wyoming athletic director and football coach Paul Roach told the Associated Press that Miller and K-State had scheduled the game with New Mexico State before notifying Wyoming, and that K-State hadn't notified the school until January that the Wildcats were eliminating Wyoming from their schedule.

Conversely, Miller said that talks had been going on between the two schools for quite some time in an effort to solve the matter agreeably, and that K-State actually notified Wyoming of its intentions in writing almost a year ago.

"We had a game scheduled with Wyoming next year and we chose to change it," Miller said. "We abided by our expectations in the contract and we gave them five opponents.

"We found five different universities which were willing to play them, and each time they said, 'We don't want to play them. We want to play you.' And then they scheduled Arkansas State for the same date."

Roach also told the Associated Press that Wyoming was in the middle of efforts to fill the vacancy left by K-State, contradicting what Miller said about Arkansas State.

Miller said, K-State tried to find several opponents that were comparable to the Wildcats—in essence doing the shopping for the Cowboys in order to help them fill the void that the Wildcats had left by breaking the contract.

Arkansas State was one of those schools which K-State found, and Wyoming shunned the idea. But Wyoming has since scheduled a game with Arkansas State after K-State had introduced the idea, according to Miller.

"They wanted us to assist in paying the guarantee for Arkansas State," Miller said, "and we felt we did not have that responsibility. However, we have been talking to them about settling the matter, and from the standpoint of them going public about (a lawsuit), it's news to me."

It was also news to University attorney Richard Seaton, who has been K-State's chief negotiator in the matter.

"I'm not surprised, but I wasn't aware that they had gone on and done that either," Seaton said. "We were still talking and there had been offers back and forth, but nothing had been agreed on. We knew (the lawsuit) was a possibility, but they never indicated to us that there was a time beyond which they would do this."

Even though K-State tried to find schools to replace the Wildcats on the Wyoming schedule, Roach still said that K-State has obligations to fulfill.

"This unilateral breach of contract without notification is highly unusual in intercollegiate athletics and most inappropriate, especially by a university from one of the most respected conferences in this country,"

Roach said. "One of the criticisms of intercollegiate athletics today is a lack of integrity. This is one of the examples that lends credence to that criticism."

"When you talk about lack of integrity, I think he's exactly right. Lack of integrity is one of the biggest criticisms of intercollegiate athletics," Miller said of Roach's comments. "But I don't think Kansas State has done anything wrong, and I think Kansas State acted in good faith."

"I feel very confident that Kansas State fulfilled its obligations by not only informing Wyoming, but by providing suitable competition."

The lawsuit asks for damages in an amount to be proven during the trial.

Diversity

Backgrounds make team interesting

By Dan Wicker
Sports Reporter

Diversity is one of the main ingredients of the K-State tennis team.

The squad is mostly made up of players who are not from the state of Kansas. In fact, out of the top six players, Suzanne Sim is the only member from Kansas. The rest of the squad comes from across the United States as well as the world.

Marijke Nel, No. 1 singles, is from Muden, South Africa; No. 2 Helen Schildknecht is a native of Untersiggenthal, Switzerland; No. 3 Sara Hancock comes to K-State from North Weald, England; No. 4 Valerie Rive is from Lake Worth, Fla.; and No. 5 Thresa Burcham is a native of Little Rock, Ark.

"As far as the different backgrounds go that is one of the things that I am particularly proud of the program for," coach Steve Bietau said. "I think it says a lot about Kansas State, the university and the environment that we are able to unite such diverse backgrounds to a common cause."

Bietau came to K-State with a certain philosophy in mind—to get the best tennis players he could find, no matter where they were from, to come to K-State.

He said uniting players from around the world has a lot to do with the University itself.

"A lot of the ability to do that has to do with the school and the people that are here," Bietau said. "In other words, when people from Sweden or Switzerland come here, they usually like it."

South African Marijke Nel is among three international players on the K-State tennis team, which takes pride in combining all of its different backgrounds into one successful unit. The Wildcat women are also represented by England and Switzerland, as well as the U.S.

Mark Leffingwell/File

Nel, one of the four seniors on the squad, is also proud that the team can do well with people from so many different backgrounds.

"I think the fact that we are all so different and speak different languages and have different lifestyles just makes it more interesting, because we all perceive things so differently," Nel said. "But when we are on the court we are all playing the same game and are all going through the same emotional roller coaster ride that it binds us together as players and friends."

Sim, the only Kansas native in the starting lineup, believes that the background differences diminish when they step onto the court, but admits that she was a little bit nervous when she first came to K-State.

"To me it doesn't make any difference where everyone is from. Once you are on the court it doesn't even come into consideration," Sim said. "At first I was a little bit nervous because the foreign girls have been through a lot of things I didn't know about. But I was anxious to get to know everyone, because we were all from different backgrounds."

Bietau said international players are a fact of life in college tennis, and when he came to K-State six years ago, he used his earlier-mentioned philosophy to improve the program.

During those years the program gradually improved to where the K-State women finished with their best-ever placing in the Big Eight last season—a fourth-place showing. And, for the squad's efforts, Bietau was also recognized as the conference's coach of the year.

"I feel we have a really strong team. Last year's group really set the standards that the (K-State) teams of the future will be measured by, and of course we have many of the same players here," Bietau said.

Those same players, with the addition of a few new faces, will try to

Colts' star Dickerson vows to call it quits

By The Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — Eric Dickerson, who came to the Indianapolis Colts in 1987 in one of the biggest swaps in NFL history, says he would rather quit than stay in Indianapolis.

The perennial All-Pro running back, frustrated by injuries much of last season, has one year left on his current contract.

General Manager Jim Irsay calls Dickerson's stance "a slap in the face to the organization and the fans."

Dickerson, who first dropped hints of retirement on a television talk show last fall, finished the season with 1,311 yards rushing, third-best in the NFL, despite a nagging hamstring injury and a constant pounding by opponents. He indicated one reason for his decision was the inability of the Colts' offensive line to protect him.

"I mean, it's like taking a revolver and putting a bullet in it and spinning it around and sticking it to my head, and sooner or later a bullet is going to come out and kill me. And that's the chance I'm taking," Dickerson said in a television interview taped last week in Los Angeles and aired Monday night by an Indianapolis station.

Dickerson, the seventh-leading rusher in NFL history with 11,226 yards in seven seasons, has sought permission to talk with five teams — Washington, Philadelphia, Houston, the New York Giants and the Los Angeles Raiders — about a possible trade, said Irsay, who has given Dickerson until April 15 to seek employment elsewhere.

Dickerson reportedly plans to sell his Indianapolis home and already has begun moving out furniture.

Irsay said he doubted Dickerson would retire, although a year away from football might help him "resolve this thing in his mind."

Dickerson came to the Colts from the Los Angeles Rams in October 1987 in a three-way trade that also sent the Colts' No. 1 draft pick, linebacker Cornelius Bennett, to the Buffalo Bills. The Rams received the Colts' first and second-round picks in the 1988 draft, their second pick in the 1989 draft and running back Owen Gill, along with Buffalo's first pick in 1988 and the Bills' first and second picks in 1989 and running back Greg Bell.

"We can win with Eric or we can win without Eric," Irsay said. "But if Eric isn't here because of a trade, there is going to have to be a good price in return. We're not interested in any players or any conditions. We want straight draft picks."

Dickerson could not be reached for comment on Tuesday.

In the interview aired by WFYI of Indianapolis on Monday, Dickerson said.

Loyola-Marymount hard to cheer against

Scott Paske

Chalk Talk

Is it just me, or is it difficult to cheer against Loyola Marymount in the NCAA Tournament right now?

The Lions, who have dominated sports pages nationwide since the death of their fallen leader Hank Gathers March 4, are now dominating basketball's heavyweights with their run-and-gun style of play. It's amazing how the deaths of Gathers and Colorado quarterback Sal Aunese have served as motivating tools for their respective teammates.

Lion players and fans are expressing their devotion to Gathers in numerous ways. Bo Kimble, Gathers' best friend since their childhood days in Philadelphia, is shooting his first free-throw of each game left-handed — the way Gathers did. Gathers' jersey number is on the uniforms of players and cheerleaders. Fans have displayed signs proclaiming "Hank's still here."

As defending national champion Michigan discovered in Sunday's West Regional contest, a team with a mission can be invincible.

Loyola's performance against the third-seeded Wolverines had to leave your tongue hanging. Michigan tried to be macho and match fastbreaks with the Lions for 40 minutes. They succeeded for about 20.

Teams are finding it's as difficult to run with Loyola as it is to walk with Brigham Young. Perimeter ace Jeff Fryer, who hit a tournament record 11 three-pointers, and Kimble, the nation's leading scorer, combined for 78 points in the Lions' 149-115 thrashing of Michigan. The teams set a record for most points in a tournament game.

"Whoever is next — be ready," Fryer said.

Alabama is next, and the Crimson Tide, who are red hot as well, are planning to shift the Lions down a gear.

"We'll have to be patient and try to hold the ball as much as possible," Alabama player Keith Askins said. "They look for the fastbreak and steals."

Which is exactly the trap the Wolverines fell into Sunday. In the opening minutes, Michigan's Loy Vaught and Terry Mills finished several two-on-one fastbreaks with thunderous dunks. The Lions re-

NCAA officials drawing complaints

By The Associated Press

Oregon State is knocked out of the NCAA tournament by Ball State on a three-point play following a questionable foul call.

Virginia is eliminated when no foul is called on a drive to the basket against Syracuse.

A technical foul against St. John's helps Duke to a six-point swing in a game the Blue Devils win by four.

Key calls continue to influence tournament games. With 14 of the 48 games played so far decided by three points or less, some coaches have been driven into a frenzy. Purdue's Gene Keady lost control Sunday, blistering the officials with an obscenity-laced diatribe after the Boilermakers lost a one-point game against Texas.

Texas coach Tom Penders, previously reprimanded for similar outbursts against Southwest Conference refs during the season, watched

"I don't say every play is called right, but if we're in the 92-94 percent range, we're doing what we should do."

— Hank Nichols, NCAA officials coordinator

Keady's fury with interest. Then he tried to lighten the moment, inviting the Purdue coach to sample some SWC officiating.

Hank Nichols, coordinator of officials for the NCAA, was at the Purdue-Texas game and thought Keady was a bit off-base. "He's an emotional guy," Nichols said. "I understand that. And with everything on the line, guys will complain. That's nothing new."

"I think most games in the tournament have been officiated pretty well. I don't say every play is called right, but if we're in the 92-94 percent range, we're doing what we should do. Good refs are 94-96 percent."

Nichols was a good ref, working 10 Final Fours and six NCAA championship games. No official has worked more. Each year, he and rules committee secretary Ed Steitz conduct preseason seminars for coaches and officials at which attendance is mandatory.

Virginia's two-point loss to Syracuse was decided in the final seconds when Derrick Coleman blocked Bryant Stith's drive to the hoop.

"There are rules and guidelines to cover the charge-block call," Nichols said. "The ref must decide who the legal person was, offense or defense. Then, did the contact have an effect. It's an instant judgment."

"The defensive player can move and still be legal. They all know that, or they should. If he establishes position, two feet on the floor and faces the offensive player one time, he's legal. He can move his feet after that. If the offensive player gets by with his head and shoulders, the defender has to do that again to be legal."

"A lot of coaches teach the prat-fall. Did the player get hit hard enough to cause him to fall, or is it just a flop? It complicates what is a tough assignment to start with."

Shortly before Keady gave his speech, mild-mannered Billy Singleton was tagged with the technical and an eight-point St. John's lead melted to two against Duke.

"I think in a big game, in the heat of battle, sometimes you have to overlook a lot of things," Coach Lou Carnesecca said. "I think you have to be understanding of people in an emotional situation. I'm talking philosophically."

Vern's owner, John Hill, calculates the night's orders.

8:35 p.m.
Sueilyn Wyatt, Hill's daughter, prepares the dough in their basement bakery. The key to the doughnuts' success is the family's secret batter recipe.

Time to make the Doughnuts

John and Janice Hill's basement doesn't have boxes of stored clothes and discarded possessions in it, as most basements do. It doesn't even have a washer and dryer.

Their basement has racks, ovens, bins of flour and sugar, large mixers and a doughnut fryer. It is the home of Vern's Donuts and Cakes.

Janice Hill said her father, Vern Brannagan, acquired the doughnut recipe from Janice's Uncle Chaz. Chaz's car broke down in Nebraska, and he borrowed a car from Brannagan who was farming in Nebraska. Chaz could not pay him for using the car, so he gave Brannagan the doughnut recipe.

Chaz got the recipe while he was attending a Nebraska college during the 1920s. He boarded with an elderly woman there, did odd jobs and mowed her lawn. The woman told Chaz she couldn't pay him, but she could give him a doughnut recipe.

She told him not to change the recipe because it would sell itself.

The doughnut recipe has been selling itself at Vern's Donuts since 1937. Brannagan opened the business at 414 N. Ninth St. but had to close during World War II.

Vern's Donuts, like most restaurants at the time, was hurt by the rationing of sugar and shortening, Janice Hill said.

Brannagan reopened his shop in 1947 at the present location of 408 S. Sixth St. Janice and John Hill took over the business when Brannagan retired in 1969.

"I grew up in this house since I was four," Janice Hill said. "I don't get homesick."

John Hill and Sueilyn Wyatt, the Hills' daughter, make the doughnuts at night in the basement, Janice Hill said. They start about 8 p.m. and finish with deliveries about 8 a.m.

"We use around 500 pounds of flour each week to make doughnuts and cakes," John Hill said. "The most doughnuts we have made in one night was 1,790 dozen."

The most popular doughnuts are the glazed doughnuts, John Hill said. The caramel roll is the most popular roll.

Doughnuts are delivered to convenience stores, doctors' offices, grocery stores, scholarship houses and greek houses, Janice Hill said.

All the doughnuts are made from scratch — the old-fashioned way — with no preservatives, Janice Hill said.

"We use real eggs, bleached white flour and yeast," she said. "We don't use mixes."

The dough is mixed in either two 20-quart mixers or a 30-quart mixer, Janice Hill said.

The process for making glazed doughnuts takes about 2 1/2 hours. The dough must rise for about an hour and fifteen minutes. Then the Hills cut it into doughnut shapes and allow it to rise another 45 minutes.

Janice Hill said the dough is placed in a machine called a proof box, which decreases the amount of rising time.

"(The proof box is) the old-fashioned kind with humidity and heat controls," Janice Hill said.

Humidity is important for moist doughnuts because the weather affects the amount of moisture and number of doughnuts gotten out of the dough, she said.

The doughnut fryer helps increase production volume by frying four dozen doughnuts at a time.

Doughnuts can be bought the shop, which used to be the Hills' garage.

"We have regulars who come in every day. The regular customers are health-conscious, and they know it's clean and safe to eat here," Janice Hill said.

10:15 p.m.
Hill and Wyatt spiral their most popular item, caramel rolls, after kneading the dough.

11:30 p.m.
Hill cuts the last honey roll from a rolled log of dough and cinnamon and sugar.

Warmer weather brings tornados

By Bill Sier
Collegian Reporter

Along with death and taxes, a certainty for anyone who lives in Kansas is that spring and summer will bring severe thunderstorms. And as has been demonstrated already this year, where there are severe thunderstorms, there is always the possibility of tornados.

Bill Fortune, state of Kansas warning and preparedness meteorologist for the National Weather Service, said about 100,000 thunderstorms occur annually in the United States, providing as much as 80 percent of its annual rainfall. Of the storms, 10,000 are classified as severe.

Fortune said about 1,000 tornados are formed out of these severe storms, 20 of which are actually killer tornados.

"But it only takes one to kill or injure you, so you should take them all seriously," Fortune said.

Del Petty, Riley County rural fire chief and director of emergency preparedness, compared the fear of thunderstorms and tornados with a fear of the unknown.

"Those people who are not familiar with storms in this part of the country can get nervous at the least little wind," Petty said.

One thing to look for in a storm to determine if it is severe is the vertical rise of the clouds, Fortune said. The taller the clouds, the more severe the storm is likely to be.

Another clue to storm severity is the amount of apparent turbulence within a storm. The more updraft and downdraft activity within the storm, the more severe the storm will be, Fortune said. The front of the storm will appear ragged and uneven because it is the primary area of downdraft activity. This includes the heavy rain and hail associated with severe storms.

Fortune said it is in the quieter updraft area following the rain or hail in the downdraft area that tornados will most likely occur.

"People notice that it has suddenly gotten very quiet outside during a storm, so they come out to take a look around," Fortune said.

This is how many tornado injuries and deaths occur, he said.

Severe storm clouds will often have a bright, yellow-green color, Fortune said. The color is caused by nitrogen built up in a storm with a great deal of lightning.

"A lot of cloud-to-ground lightning is another factor in determining where tornados are likely to occur," Fortune said.

Thunderstorms are hard to track, even with radar, he said.

"That is why we still need spotters — to keep track of these storms through their reports," Fortune said. Doppler radar will make the job of tracking such storms easier, he said, but it will still not eliminate the need for spotters, people who watch storms for signs of possible tornadic activity.

The Topeka National Weather Service office is not scheduled to receive the Doppler system until 1992.

Fortune said the Doppler system will allow a meteorologist to make an earlier determination of a storm's severity by giving accurate information about wind speeds and turbulence.

Petty, who is in charge of deciding when to sound the tornado warning sirens, said he doesn't like to "cry wolf."

"If we sound the sirens too soon," Petty said, "we could have people in houses without basements going out into the storm to get to a shelter, wading through water, debris and downed power lines when they may be safest at home."

For this reason, if the sirens do sound, people should take them seriously, Petty said.

Petty said people should just head for shelter when a warning is sounded and not worry about their houses.

"If your house is that close to the path of a tornado anyway, it won't make any difference," Petty said.

John Lambert, K-State director of public safety, said there are two tornado alarm sirens on campus. The whistle at the power plant would blow for three minutes in the event of a tornado alert, he said.

"If you hear the sirens and you are outside, you should get inside immediately," Lambert said. "If you are inside, you should either go to the basement or to an interior hallway."

Lambert said he did not know of any buildings on the main campus that would require evacuation in the event of a tornado, but some of the temporary buildings in the agricultural portion of campus might.

Three tornado shelters are available for the residents of Jardine Terrace Apartments, said Connie Bingham of the Campus Housing Office. The residents living in the rows closest to Denison Avenue can take cover in the Veterinary Medical Sciences Building. Other residents living farther back from Denison have regular storm shelters in their areas.

"If a resident is unsure where the shelter is, they should get with the manager and ask," Bingham said.

Volunteer weather watchers observe threatening storms

By Jenny Kale
Contributing Reporter

When bad weather approaches, most people take shelter, but a few dedicated storm watchers head for less protected areas.

The storm watchers are a group of volunteer radio operators trained in severe weather surveillance. When the National Weather Service issues a weather watch or warning, storm watchers move to their observation points. These points include the Top of the World in Marlatt Park, the observation point at Tuttle Creek overlooking the dam and other high areas surrounding Manhattan.

From these points, the watchers radio reports of severe thunderstorm cells, strong winds or tornadic activity to the Emergency Operations Center at the Riley County Police Department. At that time, the proper warnings or advisories are issued to radio stations, park rangers, K-State and Riley County Police, and schools.

Del Petty is a storm watcher as well as the coordinator for Riley County Emergency Preparedness. Petty said although storm surveillance is done by the RCPD, it is frequently busy with other duties during a storm. This leaves storm surveillance almost entirely to the volunteer watchers.

The group started in the mid-1960s as a citizens' band radio club looking for a service project. Wayne Carstenson, storm watcher, said the city didn't take the club's efforts seriously at first.

The watchers used to locate one of their spotters outside the police station during a watch to relay incoming weather reports of severe weather. This method was used for a few years until one night in the late '60s.

Assigned to report at the police station, Carstenson stopped his vehicle just as a report of a funnel cloud was radioed in. Before he could get into the police station to report, he saw the funnel cloud ripping through the tops of trees in City Park. This was the first of five funnel clouds and tornados to be spotted in Manhattan that night.

After that storm, the storm watchers were able to radio their reports directly to the police in the Emergency Operations Center, Carstenson said.

Carstenson said a watcher goes on call an average of six or seven times each season. Depending on the storm, the watch may last for several hours.

The program is on a volunteer basis, so the watchers are not reimbursed for their time, radio equipment or storm damage to their vehicles.

When on assignment, the watchers look for several things indicat-

British band traps listeners' attention

The Beautiful South debut offers classic mix, melodies work way into musical memories

Mark Butler

REVIEW

The Beautiful South, one of Britain's latest pop sensations, have fashioned a stunning debut of classic melodies laced with scathing doses of acid wit and irony.

"Welcome to the Beautiful South" is a subversive album. It traps unsuspecting listeners with well-crafted, hummable pop tunes. After the songs have worked their way into the memory, the lyrical content of black humor and social criticism begins to resolve itself.

The title is an apt one. The album's songs are greetings for those who venture into the band's collective psyche.

While the Beautiful South may be a young band, they are actually a continuation of some members' pasts. Singers Paul Heaton and David Hemingway were formerly in the Housemartins, a band that collapsed after three years in the limelight.

The presence of Heaton's idiosyncratic songwriting and voice guaranteed that the Beautiful South would seem like an extension of the Housemartins. Although tremendous similarities exist between the bands, the Beautiful South retained their predecessor's assets while stripped away the Housemartins' often grating naïveté and optimism.

"Welcome to the Beautiful South" is an ambitious, if flawed, album. The band attempts to maintain a broad musical palette but often the execution is somewhat amateurish.

To their credit, they do not let logic overly influence their decisions. An excursion into synth-pop and a garage-band style cover of Pebbles' dance anthem "Girlfriend" may not be perfect but they are still worthwhile.

"Song For Whoever" leads off the album with pure pop bliss. The song sounds like one of those instant classics, one that incurable romantics would refer to as "our song." On the surface, the song is a polished piano ballad with plenty of I love you's popping up in the chorus. In all actuality, "Song For Whoever" is a complex criticism of sappy songwriters and those who buy such records.

"Oh Cathy, oh Allison, oh Phil, oh Sue/You made me so much money, I wrote this song for you," begins the chorus. Obviously, sentimentality is not a concern of songwriter Heaton. In case the attack on popular music wasn't clear enough, the song's bridge rectifies any uncertainty as Hemingway sings, "Deep so deep, the number one I hope to reap/ Depends upon the tears you weep, so cry, lovey, cry."

Despite the sardonicism of the song, "Song For Whoever" is a love song. It points out that love is something that can't be trivialized into a three minute ballad. Nonetheless, it is doubtful that it will become a favorite serenade for young lovers.

"Woman in the Wall" is another track that belies its bouncy sound. The funky bassline which anchors the track has little to do with the homical character of the song. Splashy African guitar gives the tale of psychosis and torture a strange effervescence.

"Have You Ever Been Away?" is a clever counterpoint of the invasions of Europe by liberating forces in World War II and by English tourists today. By this point, it is clear that the Beautiful South are not concerned with the standard sex, drugs and rock 'n' roll mentality. They prove that a great song is a great song and that lyrical depth should not be a limiting factor.

Conversely, the Beautiful South is not an "issues" band. Their songs do possess worthwhile ideals and comment, but they never preach. Celebrity championing of a cause often dilutes the issues. Wisely, the band offers opinions as opinions, not truth. In fact, some lyrics provoke thought through their crypticism rather than through over-the-top directness.

Despite their frequent cerebralism, the Beautiful South is a band with a stinging sense of humor. "I Love You (But You're Boring)" is a comic acoustic piece where Heaton becomes frustrated with his lover's conservatism. Traffic noises and odd background conversations add to the offbeat sense of the song.

"Straight In At 37" is a contemplative look at success in the music industry. It manages to confront the serious issue of having pop stars for house guests. The track finds Heaton confessing, "Simon Le Bon stayed round my house before/And he was sick on the plants and sick on the floor/And he wouldn't go home until he'd sung his song."

The band is not slick by any means but they are engaging. The multiple vocal approach keeps Heaton's whiny tenor in check while allowing Hemingway and brass backing vocalist Brianna Corrigan to shine. Producer Mike Hedges gives the sound a depth and warmth which makes it appealing.

"Welcome to the Beautiful South" is an often mysterious journey, through conventional sound. Heaton and Hemingway have fashioned an album which advances their musical capabilities without relying too much on past accomplishments.

final touches on podiums, banners and other decorations for the celebrations. Excited youngsters helped put up flags and decorated walls in some areas with murals showing peace and prosperity in the new nation.

Foreign leaders and diplomats streamed into Windhoek, transforming the city into a miniature United Nations as Namibia counted down the final hours before independence.

Representatives of dozens of nations attending the celebrations were using the occasion for some behind-the-scenes consultations, with the United States, the Soviet Union and others holding an elaborate series of meetings.

They used the occasion for behind-the-scenes consultations throughout the day, with the United States, the Soviet Union and others holding meetings.

Baker met Tuesday with Angolan President Jose Eduardo dos Santos to explore ways to end that African nation's 15-year-old civil war, and a U.S. official said dos Santos appeared more flexible on a proposed cease-fire.

The official, who demanded anonymity, said it was the first such meeting since Angola gained independence from Portugal in 1975.

South African black leader Nelson Mandela drew a fervent burst of applause when he entered the stadium.

The Soviet news agency Tass reported an influx of about 5,000 foreign guests and said the hotels of Windhoek, population 100,000, were overwhelmed.

"Journalists were offered railway cars as makeshift homes. Like other journalists, we wrote this reportage from a private house where we rent a room with great difficulty," the Tass correspondent wrote.

Among the foreign guests attending the celebrations are U.S. Secretary of State James A. Baker III and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze; Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak; the leaders of at least 12 African nations; and the foreign ministers of Britain, West Germany, Romania, Indonesia and other nations.

Earlier, de Klerk said, "We welcome... the birth of a new neighbor state. We intend to live in good neighborliness with them as we endeavor to do with all our good neighbors.

"What is happening here is the end of a particular chapter, but the beginning of a new era," he said.

De Klerk held a dinner for the visiting guests in a last act of South African hospitality. Zimbabwe President Robert Mugabe canceled his visit at the last moment, reportedly because he did not want to meet de Klerk because of South Africa's apartheid policies.

ing tornadic activity, Carstenson said. Tornadoes are generally located at the southwest edge of a storm. If viewed from the east, storms frequently move from left to right. A heavy wall of precipitation precedes what is known as a wall cloud that is located in a rain-free base. The wall cloud is a hanging cloud slightly lower than the base.

Regardless of how much training a spotter has, each tornado presents a different situation. Sometimes the tornado is not visible except for a dust cloud at the base. Frequently, rain shafts or mammatus clouds, hanging round clouds, are also mistaken for tornadoes.

"There is nothing that you can say about a tornado that is always true. All sorts of freak things can happen out there," Carstenson said.

The storm watchers don't seem to be worried about potential danger, however.

"I'd rather be out there watching for a storm than sitting in an office with no windows," Petty said.

Telephone communications between Lithuania and the West were restored on Monday after being cut off for 2½ days due to what Soviet officials said was maintenance work.

However, Lithuanian Deputy Prime Minister Kazimieras Motieka said Soviet military airfields in the republic "have an excessive number of helicopters and perhaps also military units."

Lithuania, on the Soviet Union's Western front line, contains eight military bases and tens, if not hundreds of thousands of troops, according to emigre sources.

Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev has said he does not intend to use force against the rebellious republic.

Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze, speaking Tuesday in Windhoek, Namibia, reiterated that position. "We are against the use of force in any region, and particularly against the use of force domestically," he said.

The White House voiced concern about Soviet troop movements on Lithuania's borders, but spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said Gorbachev had offered assurances the Kremlin would not resort to force.

A Lithuanian activist said people still were worried that an attack might be staged on Soviet soldiers or their families to create an excuse for a military takeover.

"We are concerned for the safety of Russian officers and their families," said Virgilijus Cepaitis, who served as a Lithuanian representative in the Soviet Parliament until the declaration of independence.

Cepaitis said Lithuanians also feared an embargo and that individual Soviets in positions of power would cut off supplies.

With the Soviet economy already experiencing extreme shortages of nearly everything, he said it would be very easy for a manager who cannot fulfill all his orders to send his goods to the Ukraine rather than Lithuania.

sponded with 50-foot inbound passes and four-on-three situations at the other end. On 21 occasions, Loyola's possessions ended in successful three-pointers.

Many Loyola fans held up additional signs saying, "A three is better than a two." Loyola was 21-of-40 behind the arc for the game.

The Lions' fastbreaking success is no secret. Loyola's been doing it ever since former Los Angeles Laker coach Paul Westhead arrived on campus. Westhead's team averaged 124 points per game this season. Golden State, the highest-scoring team in the NBA, averages 116.

"The way that we play, which is an all-out style of play, that emotion has really helped us and will continue to be with us throughout all the tournament," Kimble said.

The Lions are saying nothing can stand in their way of a national championship. With Alabama waiting Friday, and potential future opponents UNLV, Georgia Tech or Syracuse lurking in the distance, Loyola has plenty of critics to silence. But whether or not the Lions carry the championship trophy off the McNichols Arena court April 2, their story is definitely one to remember.

were very hostile. One nurse responded, "That's OK, we'll do an abortion for any kind of blood type."

Most women with HIV simply don't tell — "that's the way they get abortions," Franke said.

But for women who do and are refused or referred to a crowded public hospital, the result may be delay in getting an abortion, which increases chances of complications. "The later the abortion, the less safe it is," she said.

The chances that a woman will pass the AIDS virus to her baby are estimated at between 20 percent and 50 percent.

Los Angeles obstetrician-gynecologist David Grimes said that, in his experience, half of HIV-infected women opt for abortion and half give birth.

or, for a court order to be placed on K-State, forcing the Wildcats to play at Laramie this coming season.

Wyoming has been the only school with which K-State has not been able to come to an agreement in the Wildcats' schedule renovation. Miller and Snyder decided it to be in the best interest of the University's football program if they changed the schedule, which was inherited by Miller when he was hired as athletic director two years ago.

K-State had been successful in changing future dates with Ohio State, Florida and Clemson among other schools. Next season, the non-conference schedule includes home dates with New Mexico, New Mexico State and Western Illinois, and a road game at Northern Illinois.

"When we undertook the process of getting the program on the right track, we felt it was important for us to adjust the schedule so that it gave us a competitive opportunity," Miller said. "We inherited that schedule. We want to find comparable foes and then enhance the schedule each year."

"And it wasn't just a matter of Wyoming solely. It was a matter of hanging on to what we felt were our responsibilities to the program."

"I think (the lawsuit) is kind of a knee-jerk reaction without us sitting down and talking," Miller added.

"Juvenile laws are in a state of flux," Jepsen said. "When this proposal was designed, it was okay for juvenile detention, but they just keep changing the rules."

SRS would be contacted and the design would be improved so the facility would be acceptable if the improvements are feasible, Shoultz said.

Bachamp said he was worried about escapes from the facility. He said since he has lived in the neighborhood there have been three escapes. During one of the escapes, the escapee fled down an alley where one of his children was playing and an officer drew his gun on the children.

Loading prisoners for transport is the most likely time for escape, Shoultz said, adding that the new facility will be safer.

There will be an enclosed loading section where the transfer car can be brought into the building, he said. The loading area is then sealed so the prisoner can be loaded into the car preventing escape.

Jepsen said the jail is still in the development stages and nothing is set in stone.

"If you come to (the commissioners) with your problems and talk to us," he said, "we can usually change them and will be responsive."

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Kansas State University, Manhattan, Kansas 66506

Volume 96, Number 116

Rep. Artie Lucas, R-Highland, explains the parent notification bill to a group in Putnam Hall Wednesday, while Rep. Katha Hurt, D-Manhattan, and Jan Galitzer, of the Religious Coalition for Abortion Rights, listen. The bill requires minors' parents to be notified before an abortion.

Abortion issue debated

Officials present opposing views at Putnam forum

By Sandy Hegarty
Collegian Reporter

A debate in Putnam Hall Wednesday demonstrated the complexity of the issue of abortion.

The discussion, which was part of a forum sponsored by the hall for HGB Week activities, reflected the fact that rather than being just a question of legality, abortion is an issue that questions religious, moral, economic and social values.

Jan Galitzer, president of the Religious Coalition for Abortion Rights, said the issue should be based on each individual's religious conviction.

"In my opinion, the issue of abortion must be kept separate from government and laws and be left up to our own personal religion," she said.

Artie Lucas, R-Highland, who is pro-life, said he wanted to "stick strictly to the facts" of abortion. Lucas sponsored the pre-notification bill that was brought before the Kansas House of Representatives. It would require doctors who perform abortions for girls younger than the age of 16 to notify another adult.

He entered a car registration bill into the House Transportation Committee, substituted in the wording of Gov. Mike Hayden's pre-notification bill that had been defeated earlier and put it on the Senate floor.

"I was looking for a vehicle to get the bill on the floor," Lucas said. "I got the opposition to get the bill to the Senate."

Tami Hagedoren, a representative from Life Choice Ministry and also pro-life, provided a personal side to the issue of abortion. She said she has had two abortions and wants to prevent others from the grief she went through.

"I have been in the shoes of both sides," Hagedoren said. "Girls will have to make choices they will have to live with the rest of their lives."

Katha Hurt, D-Manhattan, who is pro-choice, said no one really favors abortion, however, no one wants someone else trying to change his or her way of thinking, either.

"We want to keep things in the proper perspective," she said. "Preventing pregnancies before they occur is something we can all agree on."

But Hurt said she hopes Kansas follows other states on abortion bills. More than 150 abortion bills have been introduced in the United States and only one passed.

Gene Schneider, Manhattan, makes a point before asking a question following the presentations of the panel members.

Wefald seeks library study

Proposal requests funds for consultant

By Lori Mikesell
Staff Reporter

A request to hire a consultant to study Farrell Library space needs will be heard at today's Board of Regents meeting.

Increasing student and administrative concern prompted the request, said Brice Hobrock, dean of libraries.

"The student sit-in, which focused on the need for a library addition, got things off the ground in January. But it was President Wefald who really moved things along," Hobrock said.

Hobrock said Wefald called for the $25,000 base-line study of library space. The last library space needs assessment was completed in 1981. That study, which was flawed from the beginning, doesn't fit anymore, he said.

"The library has simply run out of space, even though in 1986 200,000 volumes were moved to Nichols Hall," Hobrock said.

The 1981 study provided no basis for library improvement, said Bob Krause, vice president for institutional advancement.

"We need a study that will say, 'Look, this is what is needed and this is how much it's going to cost.' That would put us on much more solid ground when we request additional funding," Krause said.

If authorized by the regents, the consultant will be asked to look at the space requirements for staff, students and books, Hobrock said.

Using regents' library space standards, Farrell shows a 140,000 square foot deficit. The consultant will be asked to estimate how much space is really needed, Hobrock said. In addition, the consultant will look at the older portion of the building, and suggest methods of renovating and updating that section of the library.

Hobrock said the study is a first step, but from there it's hard to predict what future actions might be taken based on the study results.

Krause said he anticipates a debate on the tuition policy task force report at the meeting today. Among the provisions in the report is a proposed restricted-use engineering fee.

Remaining items on the agenda are mostly program review ideas such as a new degree proposal for a bachelor of science degree in agricultural advancement.

Inspection revision discussed by panel

By Melissa Simpson
Staff Reporter

An audience of around 80 landlords and tenants waited patiently as the Citizens' Advisory Committee discussed the rental inspection program revision for one hour and fifteen minutes before they were allowed to speak and express their views Wednesday night.

The committee met at 6:30 p.m. at the Manhattan Fire Headquarters and Training Facility.

Committee members discussed components of the rental inspection program that has been in process for over a year. Landlords, City Attorney Bill Frost, City Manager Mike Conduff and City Inspector Chuck Williams composed the committee.

Richard Hill, landlord, said he believed he was being treated as a second-class citizen, and the committee should operate on a two-way street. He said the standards considered in the program have gone too far, and it needs health and safety standards for tenants before window sizes should be considered and inspected.

"It bothers me that I'm in this position defending myself," Hill said. "Ceiling heights and door closures are unimportant to considering sanitary conditions. I think we need to rewrite the codes."

Hill also mentioned that there are few records of building permits for the years of 1950 and 1960. He has looked at record books and found them and missing pages.

Conduff answered Hill by telling him businesses should keep their own business records.

Committee member Wade Whitmer expressed concern about tenants having to sign a lease in order for them to request an inspection of the housing unit they are considering. Tenants may suggest the landlord request an inspection before they move in.

Linda Conderman then asked Frost about violations to the program and codes and how they would be handled.

Frost said any ordinance violation is penalized. A fine will be imposed, which will be at a the court's discretion.

Before a 15-minute break, Tom Abbott said he wants the committee to realize that most students are on a budget, and the only way they can afford to rent is to room together, which is usually in places that don't meet code requirements.

Following the break, Ruth Schrum, landlord association president, asked the committee to table the rental inspection program. She said there are no programs in Lawrence, Kansas City, Wichita or Emporia, and Manhattan's program needs more commitment and time before it should be considered.

Schrum also said affordable housing is a big problem that needs addressing.

Engineers fear cuts may hinder research

By Bryan Ackley
Science Reporter

Recent state budget cuts have some K-State engineers worried that one of their primary sources of research funding, Kansas Technical Enterprises Corporation, may soon get "the axe."

The College of Engineering's Center for Research in Computer-Controlled Automation is one of six KTEC Centers of Excellence, said Gale Simons, dean of research for the College of Engineering.

In 1989, the center received about $2.1 million in funding as a result of KTEC-initiated activities, he said.

State budget pressures, however, may force KTEC, which is funded with Kansas lottery revenues, to reduce or discontinue its funding of the center, Simons said.

Although KTEC and the Kansas lottery were established to help boost the state's economic development, the state may decide to cut some or all of its funding of KTEC and use lottery revenues, for example, to provide businesses and residents with property tax relief, said Marianne Hudson, executive vice president for KTEC.

"We don't want to see that happen," Hudson said. "The center is a valuable resource for Kansas' businesses."

The growth of the state's economy is partially dependent on the success of KTEC and engineering's Center for Research, Simons said.

Center funds have been used, for example, to purchase equipment with which to research and develop advanced manufacturing techniques that will help Kansas' manufacturing businesses produce better products, he said.

Furthermore, this program provides incentive for University engineers to work with Kansas' businesses, Simons said.

"You get to see the fruits of your labor," he said, "and that's kind of nice."

"All of that $2.1 million (in KTEC-provided funding) was geared toward enhancing the Kansas economy."

But if budget pressures force

Core curriculum proposed

By Heather Anderson
Collegian Reporter

A proposal for the application of a university-wide core curriculum is being reviewed by individual colleges, and response to the proposal is expected by April 20, said Jerry Frieman, chair of the Common University Degree Requirements Committee.

"The goal of the core curriculum is to give our students the kind of education they would receive at a good liberal arts school," he said. "I won't accept, as it has been suggested to me, that our students are incapable of that kind of a curriculum. I believe that they are."

The proposal, which is a compilation of research and recommendations made by three committees over a time span of three years, was completed Jan. 30 and presented to the Academic Affairs Committee of the Faculty Senate.

The committee will use the college responses to modify and improve upon the proposal, Frieman said.

Current general requirements of all students at K-State include six hours of English composition, two or three hours of public speaking and one hour of principles of physical fitness.

The proposal would increase the composition requirement to four written composition courses, one oral communication course, a communication-intensive course within the core, and one within the major.

A library use seminar would be required of all students, as well as a quantitative reasoning class, which would carry a prerequisite of a C or better grade in College Algebra.

Two natural science courses, a knowledge course and eight humanities courses would complete the general requirements.

The humanities courses are divided into two parts, four to be chosen by the student from a list of

University considers academic minor plan

By Elvyn Jones
Collegian Reporter

Undergraduate students at K-State may soon be able to minor in a discipline if there is enough interest from the different colleges in a Student Senate proposal forwarded to the Faculty Senate.

According to the proposal, undergraduates would be free to pursue a minor in another discipline of 15 to 21 credit hours plus the appropriate prerequisite courses.

Courses taken in the minor discipline could be used to satisfy requirements and free electives in the major curriculum. However, nine hours of free electives would be preserved in any published major-minor curriculum.

The proposal, based on a program developed by North Carolina State University after three years of study, stipulates that academic departments offering a major will be allowed to develop a minor if they so choose. Minor curricula and new courses proposed for minor curricula will be subject to approval by the appropriate departmental and school committees, by the University Courses and Curricula Committee and by all appropriate academic committees.

Agriculture Senator Todd Heitschmidt said more students would be inclined to enroll in a block of classes in another discipline if they received the recognition of a minor degree.

If approved, the proposal would increase the marketability of K-State graduates because many job applications ask what minor degree the applicant has received, he said. Completion of a minor is a prerequisite for admission into graduate

Students protest elections

TAIPEI, Taiwan (AP) — President Lee Teng-hui was elected Wednesday by aging lawmakers who have not faced voters in more than 40 years while thousands of students demanding direct presidential elections protested for a sixth day.

Student representatives met with Lee at his office Wednesday evening and said he made vague promises of political reform. Lee said earlier in a statement that he would not propose any changes before he is sworn in for a six-year term May 20.

"We don't quite agree with his promises, but we can accept them," said student leader Fan Yun, one of more than 50 representatives who met with the 67-year-old chairman of the ruling Nationalist Party.

Lee was the only presidential candidate before the National Assembly, which is dominated by elderly deputies who have not faced elections since the Communists drove them from mainland China in 1949.

Lee received support from 641 of 688 National Assembly members who cast ballots at a suburban meeting hall. The other delegates cast invalid ballots. About 2,000 police officers in full riot gear stood guard.

Jury indicts bid peddlers

WASHINGTON (AP) — A former Navy procurement officer and two private consultants were indicted Wednesday on charges of peddling confidential bid information about lucrative Pentagon contracts to defense firms.

George G. Stone, a former division director at the Navy's Space and Naval Warfare Systems Command, and consultants Thomas E. Muldoon and Mark C. Saunders were named in the eight-count indictment returned by a federal grand jury in suburban Alexandria, Va.

The indictment was returned as part of the Justice Department's continuing investigation of Defense Department procurement fraud nicknamed "Operation Ill Wind" that has netted more than 30 convictions.

The three were charged with participating in an illegal scheme to sell bid information about a contract to build a battlefield air traffic control system for the Marine Corps to two defense contractors.

Schooling not law for Indians

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — State laws requiring parents to send their children to school do not apply to Indians because "reservation self-government" must prevail, the Iowa Supreme Court said Wednesday.

The court said Congress has sole jurisdiction over Indian educational issues and state interference "will deprive the federal courts of exclusive jurisdiction over compulsory school attendance of Indian children."

"We avoid the difficulties of subjecting the Sac and Fox to the standards of two sovereigns and the risk of double prosecution for essentially one offense," said the court.

In making the ruling, the high court upheld the dismissal of charges filed against Archie and Anna Bear, members of the Sac and Fox Tribe. The Tama County couple were charged with failing to send their son to school in the South Tama district of central Iowa during the 1987-88 school year.

The district serves the Mesquakie Indian Settlement. Court records said a magistrate had issued three charges of violating the compulsory attendance laws, and when the two didn't appear on those charges they were found in contempt of court.

Museum purchases 'Iris'is

MALIBU, Calif. (AP) — The J. Paul Getty Museum announced Wednesday it has purchased the masterpiece "Iris" by Dutch artist Vincent van Gogh for an undisclosed sum.

Painted in 1889, "Iris" was sold to the museum by Alan Bond, the financially troubled Australian entrepreneur who paid a record $53.9 million for the work at a 1987 auction.

In keeping with its policy of not discussing details of private acquisitions, the museum will not be disclosing the price of the work, the Getty said in a statement.

The painting already is on display in the museum's second-floor galleries, where other 19th century paintings are displayed, including works by Pierre-Auguste Renoir, Edouard Manet and Edvard Munch.

Getty, the late oil baron, endowed the museum with $2.1 billion, making it the world's richest art institution.

The painting, characteristic of van Gogh's bold style, represents a patch of garden in a French asylum at Saint-Remy de Provence, where the troubled artist committed himself following a mental breakdown in Arles.

State to turn site to park

OLATHE (AP) — A 300-acre site near Olathe will be acquired by the state and turned into a park to preserve its native grasses.

"That's one of the most significant sites in that part of Kansas. It's one of the few sites with native vegetation," said Todd Graeff, chief of the parks and public lands division of the Kansas Department of Wildlife and Parks.

The site, called the Prairie Center, is four miles west of Olathe and north of Johnson County Industrial Airport. It contains 40 acres of native prairie tall grass which has never been plowed. The preserve also has five ponds, six miles of hiking trails and 60 to 80 acres of restored prairie grass.

The Grassland Heritage Foundation bought the Prairie Center in 1983 to prevent it from being developed. The foundation plans to sell the land this spring to the Nature Conservancy, which acquires ecologically significant areas to protect them. It will keep the preserve until the state can purchase it.

"We always dreamed this would happen," said Elaine Shea, a board member of the Grassland Heritage Foundation. "It's a perfect example of Kansas City's natural heritage."

EPA to remove uranium

DE SOTO (AP) — The Environmental Protection Agency will begin overseeing the removal of barrels from a dilapidated uranium storage building in western Johnson County this week, officials said Wednesday.

Kansas officials said 352 drums of depleted uranium and 80 barrels of a highly caustic cleaning compound are stored at the building near the Sunflower Army Ammunition Plant and the Countryside Intermediate School south of De Soto.

Vick Cooper, a state radiation control inspector, said state officials had been asked to be at the site Thursday, but EPA spokesman Rowena Michaels said she did not know whether removal would begin Thursday or Friday.

The uranium and cleaning compound belong to Jerald Gershon, owner of Chemical Commodities Inc. The EPA has spent about $1.8 million from its Superfund to clean up the company's chemical supply warehouse in Olathe.

State and federal officials repeatedly had said that only depleted uranium was stored at the site. But after reviewing a recent report prepared for the De Soto School District, EPA officials sent inspectors to the site March 9, and the drums of caustic cleaning compound were discovered leaking near the center of the building.

Computer virus affects system

By Chris McEntee
Collegian Reporter

A rogue computer program that is sweeping into Internet systems has not yet affected University computers.

Internet is a connection of corporate, government and university computer systems linked worldwide. It was the same system thrown into chaos in November 1988 when a program written by Robert Tappan Morris, a Cornell University graduate student, jammed it. K-State experienced minor problems with that virus.

"We have not noticed any break-ins so far," said Virgil Wallentine, professor of computing and information science.

Wallentine said the rogue computer program steals electronic documents and user passwords and erases files.

Wallentine said computer systems are either open or closed, and in the academic programs on campus, the priority is for an open system that allows easy access to resources. The University's open systems are easier to get into than other systems, and the University has decided to wait and see what happens.

University Computing has not taken any precautions to stop the hacker from getting into the system, he said.

"If we noticed a break-in, first we would diagnose it and find out where it came from and how it got in. Second, we would notify Internet, which immediately passes on notice to other universities," Wallentine said. "It is a very costly thing," he said. "The most costly thing about it is the loss of confidence in our information inter-structure."

Stephen Coulson, director of engineering experiment stations, said no virus has been detected in the College of Engineering's computer systems.

"We are far enough removed from the basic Internet programs that we are pretty hard to reach, and hackers don't find our information as interesting as some other types," he said.

"We are comfortable with the level of security we have in our systems, but no system is absolutely fool-proof," Coulson said.

Violence escalates across Romania

By The Associated Press

BUCHAREST, Romania — The provisional government accused Hungary on Wednesday of inciting tensions between Romanians and ethnic Hungarians that led to bloody street battles this week in Transylvania.

In a strongly worded statement released to news media, it charged Hungarian officialdom with "propagandistic actions ... that present Transylvania as a Hungarian component."

Clashes between the Romanian majority and Hungarian minority left several people injured Wednesday in the Transylvanian town of Targu Mures, scene of Tuesday night's bloodletting that killed at least six people and injured about 300.

Tanks cordoned off all highways into the city of 165,000 northwest of Bucharest and patrolled downtown, where the pitched battles Tuesday featured men swinging scythes surging into crowds to beat other men.

Targu Mures was reported quiet Wednesday night.

However, Romanians and Hungarians were entering the city on foot late Wednesday afternoon armed with clubs and iron bars, witnesses said. The army had orders to arrest anyone carrying a weapon on the streets.

The government accused interim Hungarian President Matyas Szurocs of issuing a March 18 call through the press to ethnic Hungarians in Romania, urging them "to intensify their activity, and to organize themselves according to the idea that Transylvania would be 'native Hungarian land.'"

But the provisional leadership that has run Romania since the December revolution that overthrew Communist dictator Nicolae Ceausescu also put some of the blame for the violence on right-wing elements inciting ethnic Romanians.

Interim Vice President Cezar Ionescu blamed the clashes on a resurgence of the fascist Iron Guard.

A special commission of inquiry flown to Targu Mures on Wednesday agreed to meet Thursday with representatives of both the Romanian and Hungarian communities.

At United Nations headquarters in New York, a Hungarian diplomat said Wednesday that Hungary has appealed for U.N. help to protect the rights of Hungarians in Romania and is pressing for Security Council action to halt ethnic violence in Transylvania. He demanded anonymity.

In a letter to Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar, Hungarian Foreign Minister Gyula Horn asked the international community and the United Nations "to take effective measures ... to protect the individual and collective rights of the largest minority in Europe."

Horn said "legal Romanian organizations" have fueled ethnic tensions and prompted violence against Hungarian minorities in Transylvanian cities.

Outside, snow was falling in the late February day.

"Have you heard how much longer this stuff will last?" asked Bob Berry, creator of the comic strip "Making the Grade." About three inches of snow had already fallen, and no end was in sight for at least 24 hours.

"You see, I've been wanting this to happen for a long time, because in that closet," Berry said, pausing for dramatic effect and pointing to the closet across the room, "are two sleds."

Sledding might not be something you'd expect from a guy who has spent most of his adult years in college — eight years to be exact — but "adult" isn't exactly a word that describes Berry well.

Berry, senior in art, has a youthful sort of exuberance, the kind that might be expected from a cartoonist. He's funny. His eyes are aglow with ideas, making one wonder just what is going on in his head.

He looks quite a bit like the character "Jim" in his strip. Or is it "Joe"?

"I'll admit it, I gave them

Artist shows 'exuberance' Cartoonist Berry relishes role as 'closet comedian' really blah names," Berry said. "Now I've offended everyone named 'Jim' and 'Joe.'"

"Making the Grade" has a simple premise. Jim and Joe, who go to college, live with a walking, talking, beer-drinking, 7-foot Kodiak bear named Filbert.

When people ask, "Why the bear?" Berry has a simple and capitalistic response.

"Merchandising," Berry said. "It's all merchandising. Those 'Filbert the Bear' lunchboxes. Snoopy's not going to hold that corner forever — he and Garfield."

Berry, a Kansas City native, has attended four colleges in his quest for a somewhat elusive undergraduate degree.

"Well, I started in pre-law," Berry said. "That was a mistake."

"I've been in college forever. The goal is to get a college degree before my 10-year reunion — either that or I'm going to start driving a cab. I couldn't make it for the five-year reunion, but at the 10-year reunion I'll be able to honestly say 'I'm still thin and I have a degree.'"

"Making the Grade" originated in the fall of 1984 at the University of Missouri's student paper, The Maneater, Berry said.

"The Maneater published only student cartoonists, and I was looking at some of that stuff and said, 'Well, jeez, I can do that,'" Berry said.

Berry took some sketch diaries to the editor. The editor liked his work, so Berry began drawing the cartoon on a regular basis.

This is the first semester the strip has appeared daily in the Collegian. Berry said producing a daily strip is a little tougher than producing one three times a week. Now he sometimes finds himself drawing at the last minute.

"It depends," Berry said. "If I've got a plot thought out, I might do three or four at a time. Jill Hayden — she does 'Ripple' — and I were talking. She says she whips them all out in a weekend, and I'm like 'How do you do that?'"

The Collegian cartoonists have a sense of camaraderie, Berry said.

"Every once in a while I'll see Rich Broadfoot — he does 'Salad.' It's always fun talking to him and Jill," Berry said. "I don't know, I guess we share something."

Berry's creative muses assault him from all angles and at any time. He could be driving down the road, watching the news or in the middle of a class, and

EDITORIAL

Collegian must maintain responsibility

Student Senate is scheduled tonight to vote on an increase in the line-item fee for Student Publications Inc. And the Collegian will not endorse the fee increase through an editorial. Neither will it oppose it. Yet, the Editorial Board believes the reasons for its decision should be made known.

The editorial, which appears on this page under the heading Editorials, represents the consensus opinion of the members of the Collegian's Editorial Board. The Editorial Board determines the editorial positions of the paper. When the board authorizes an editorial on an issue, it speaks for the Collegian. The names of board members appear at the bottom left-hand corner of this page in the masthead, which also lists the paper's staff members.

Theoretically, the editorials represent the views of the paper after the board has discussed the pros and cons of the issues it considers for comment. While the board members bring to these discussions their viewpoints, they are expected to consider these issues solely on the basis of the merits.

I'd be lying to you if I said that at all times all of the board members are completely informed about every issue they discuss. What actually happens is that members of the board are better informed on some issues and not on others. In the board's discussions, the best informed members tend to take the lead in the discussion of an issue. They also tend to draw the assignment of writing the editorial after the board has reached a consensus opinion on that issue.

In writing editorials, board members explain the viewpoint of the board, not their own opinions.

This is also the reason why the editorials are unsigned. The editorials represent the opinions of the paper and not of any one individual.

As a board member, my privileges are the same as those of any other member. Sometimes I raise an issue, board members kick it around and then a silence falls across the room — a silence quickly broken by Eric Henry calling for more ideas from the board. As editorial page editor, Henry is chairman of the board.

As the person legally responsible for the content of the paper, I may veto an editorial if I believe it could cause the Collegian to face a lawsuit. But the reverse is not also true. I cannot impose my views on the board. I have never vetoed an editorial.

Again, throughout this sometimes chaotic or sometimes orderly process, the board members are to consider issues on the merits and not on how an endorsement or opposition to an issue may benefit themselves or the paper.

That is why the Collegian will not endorse the increase. It could not do so without creating the appearance of a conflict of interest because the paper will benefit from the increase.

Erwin Seba

EDITOR

The fee increase is intended to offset a decision this year by the state Department of Revenue that Student Publications must pay sales tax. In the past, Student Publications has been viewed by the Department of Revenue as a non-profit educational enterprise. While still a non-profit corporation, Student Publications has been told it does not meet the definition of an educational enterprise and must pay sales tax.

The secondary purpose of the fee increase is to begin building a fund to prepare for the replacement of aging equipment, such as the 12-year-old video display terminal I'm using to prepare this column.

To further complicate the matter, the University controller's office has told Student Publications that it does not have to pay the tax. The complication is caused by the timing of the decision by the controller's office. Student Publications was told of the decision after it had made its request to Student Senate for the increase.

It may seem that the matter is settled, but the Department of Revenue has yet to say it agrees or disagrees with the controller's office.

Until two agencies of the state of Kansas — the University and Department of Revenue — get their heads together, Student Publications may be faced with a $24,000 tax bill in this fiscal year, creating a budget deficit of the same amount. This year, Student Publications was planning on breaking even. In fiscal year 1989, Student Publications made a profit of $12,533.

Without the fee increase, and if the Department of Revenue disagrees with the controller's office, Student Publications will have to somehow increase its revenues. Among the possibilities considered are student advertising rate increases, business advertising rate increases and reduction of the number of delivery points for the paper.

Increasing advertising rates would result in at least a temporary decrease in the amount of advertising in the paper. Increasing student rates would increase the operating expenses of student organizations. Reducing the number of delivery points would inconvenience some of our readers. In fiscal year 1989, 83 percent of Student Publications' $961,815 budget came from revenues it earned. The remaining 17 percent came from student fees.

If Senate were to increase the line-item fee from the current $4.80 for full-time students and $2.40 for part-time students to the requested $5.95 for full-time students and $2.95 for part-time students, Student Publications could meet the possible tax burden and begin saving for the future equipment replacement.

The Senate Finance Committee has recommended an increase of $5.50 for full-time students and $2.75 for part-time students. This increase would also allow Student Publications to offset the tax increase and save a little for equipment.

Either of these increases would prevent Student Publications from reducing services and/or increasing prices and advertising rates. If Senate were to pass the fee increase, the Collegian would not face a possible reduction of its revenues.

This newspaper, as part of Student Publications Inc., would benefit from the fee increase. To present, in an editorial, an endorsement of the increase would be an abuse of the unique position of the Collegian as the University. It could also serve to harm the confidence readers place in the paper. While an increased tax burden may be withstood, the cost of ignoring our ethical responsibilities is too high a price to pay.

Jail expansion should continue

Riley County officials make effort to please parents, improve safety

Every issue has at least two sides; that is what creates a controversy. Many residents of Manhattan are weighing the arguments concerning the expansion of the Riley County jail in the area of Sixth and Colorado streets.

On one side are parents whose children attend Manhattan Catholic Schools and oppose the jail addition. They would like to see the jail built on a different site, one closer to the edge of town.

Many of the parents have trouble with the proximity of a jail to their children, saying the increased traffic and the possibility of a jail break pose a safety risk to their children.

Opposite this argument, members of the Riley County Commission have shown support for building the jail in the same lot. They argue that the cost of moving the jail site would be too expensive, compared to building on the existing lot.

County officials have also altered their plans for the jail and adjacent storage areas in an attempt to appease some of the opposition being shown toward the planned addition.

Entrances to the facility have been modified to increase the safety factor for children.

It is the willingness of the county officials to work with residents of Manhattan combined with the costs of moving the facility that tip the balance in favor of keeping the jail where it is.

Surprisingly, some parents argue, "Does anyone want a jail across from a school?"

The question should have been, "Does anybody want a school across from a jail?" in 1908 when the Catholic church purchased the land adjacent to the jail.

IRS is formidable foe

"Well, if I called the wrong number, why did you answer the phone?" James Thurber, American artist and writer (1894-1961).

White House press secretary Marlin Fitzwater recently revealed that President Bush was the object of a crank phone call. The lowdown, dirty phone fiend identified himself as Iranian President Hashemi Rafsanjani, desiring to speak to Bush about the American hostages held by Muslim terrorists. Fitzwater indicated the conversation "was a little embarrassing" for Bush. I bet it was.

In fact, this story strikes me as having all the characteristics of another of Bush's presidential "ignes fatui." Here's what really happened.

"Hello? ... Yes, this is George Bush."
"George ... Hash here. How's it doing?"
"Holy s---, I thought I made it clear never to call me! Ollie has been exposed, and R.R. is your contact man now!"

"Yes I know, but the former 'Great Satan' confuse everything. I tell him I want bazookas and he send me bubble gum. What to do, huh? I swear by the prophet — blessed be his name — this man cannot find his camel's tail with both hands!"

"Ok, ok. I'll take care of it. Your contact from now on will be a veteran agent in political subterfuge, code named 'Tricky Dick.' Now, read my lips! Don't call me again, got that?"

"For certain. But do not misunderstand.

Brad Seabourn

COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

We will not be deceived. No arms — no hostages. And remember, ayahtollah so."

My brother used to do the same thing to me with unflagging regularity. Give me a call, disguise his voice like Omar Sharif or Charlie Chan, tell a story, then start reeling. Hooked me every time. What a laugh.

Not that I wasn't suspicious, mind you. I didn't get calls from Clint Eastwood every day, you know. But he knew just how to mix the right amount of fact with fantasy to convince me. He knew exactly who I wanted to believe had called — just what I wanted to hear.

Such is the case with President Bush. A few years ago, with the aid of a friend unknown to my brother, I reciprocated with a prank of my own.

My friend called my brother and identified himself as a tax examiner for the Internal Revenue Service. She informed him in a no-nonsense tone that his tax returns for the last 5 years would be audited — paying particular attention to those summers in which he earned wages as an itinerant, house-painting medical student, working on a CASH ONLY basis. She mentioned his social security number, checking account number ... all the sundry personal information to lend the call credibility. But, the last little tidbit about his house-painting revenue was the "coup de grace," you might say.

I listened to the conversation on an extension. Fear and trepidation engulfed my dear sibling like a bad case of food poisoning. It was great.

I hadn't known such rejoicing since the morning when we were mischievous adolescents and he took the rap for the gum I had stuck to the headboard of the bed the night before, and which was now all over the bed sheets and his hair. Punk hair styling started with my brother.

I let him fret for a few days, and then called him before he completed packing his bags. Let's just say my brother has not made any phony calls to me since.

This just goes to show you, the three letters IRS are more feared than CIA, KGB, CBS or GOD. President Bush should take careful note of this fact. "Don't mess with the IRS," is an adage with no language barriers.

So, George, here is what you do. Give Hash a call and tell him if he doesn't get the hostages released soon, he's going to have to deal with a most formidable weapon — the IRS.

I guarantee, the hostages will be home quicker than you can say, "ayahtollah so."

Census Bureau counts homeless

Over $2.7 million spent in nationwide search; critics question effectiveness of first-ever survey

By The Associated Press

After sending 15,000 workers into camps and caves, streets and shelters, the Census Bureau declared success Wednesday in its first-ever tally of the nation's homeless. But critics found fresh ammunition to charge that the special census failed to do its job.

Census workers, many of them homeless themselves, endured gunfire, robbery, insults and foul weather to count the number of Americans with no fixed address. Past guesses have ranged from 250,000 to 3 million.

The results won't be announced until late 1991, and the debate over the census will continue until then and beyond. It was framed again Wednesday by two men on opposite sides of the country.

In New York, Dwayne Mays stood up for the census, in which he participated both as a counter and as one of the counted. He, too, is homeless.

"Hopefully, it will let people realize there is a whole population of homeless people that is not dehumanized, still maintains self-respect and self-esteem, that is living in conditions that are abhorrent," Mays said. "We're here, and we are counted now."

Not all the homeless were counted, though, even by the Census Bureau's assessment. In some cases, homeless people avoided the census takers; in others, they were apparently overlooked.

In Manchester, N.H., census takers failed to count a man who was sleeping on the steps of City Hall — he was outside their survey area.

In San Diego County, Calif., a group of farmworkers in a migrant camp said a team of Census "enumerators" walked past them without stopping to count.

In New York City, reporters watched Census workers mill around a newsstand on the ground floor of the Port Authority bus terminal, apparently avoiding the upper floors where hundreds of homeless sleep. Census officials insisted they had canvassed the entire station.

The Census Bureau spent $2.7 million on the homeless count, which it carried out between 6 p.m. Tuesday and 8 a.m. Wednesday in every city with a population over 50,000.

In several cities, Census workers said homeless people had vanished from their usual spots, apparently to avoid the government.

"That tells us something," said Don Weese, manager of the Census Bureau office in Tulsa, Okla. "It tells us there's a large segment of the homeless population that simply does not want to be recognized, known or encountered at all."

The issue is politically important because federal money goes to cities and states on the basis of population. Urban leaders have been fuming for a decade, saying the Census Bureau ignored most of the homeless in the 1980 census.

"Shelter and Street Night appears to have been a success," Census Bureau Director Barbara Bryant said. "I believe our efforts have given us a good start on achieving our goal of a full and fair census of the American people."

Bryant conceded that Census workers had missed some shelters and other homeless hangouts, and would have to try again Wednesday night in a handful of cities. They included Washington, New York, Philadelphia and Cleveland.

Critics found nothing in the tally to change their view.

"You can't use this census with any degree of legitimacy," said Mitch Snyder, an advocate for the homeless in Washington. "Politicians can use these figures to say anything that they want."

as homeless?"

"If they had come last week, we had 20 people living here," Rankin said, "but we have been able to help them relocate to their own places."

Kim Greenwood, media specialist for the Regional Census Center in Kansas City, Mo., said the initial count of people is scheduled to be given to Congress and President George Bush by the end of this year.

"The detailed state information is due to be made available to the individual governors by no later than April 1, 1991," Greenwood said.

Corrine Johnson was one of the homeless interviewed at the shelter.

"They just gave us the forms, showed us where to sign and what blocks to fill out," she said.

"All the questions on the forms were about where we were born, and our birthdays and whether we were from in state or out," said Herberto Rodriguez, another homeless person who was interviewed.

Johnson said she believed the count would be inaccurate because no one wants to talk to the homeless.

"They are discriminating against people that they are afraid to talk to," she said.

Johnson was concerned about people who were too proud to come into the shelter.

"I know I was afraid to come in here at first," Johnson said.

University employees recognized for service

By Heather Stewart
Collegian Reporter

Classified employees were honored at the 13th Annual Classified Employee Recognition Program Wednesday in McCain Auditorium.

The K-State Classified Affairs Committee recognized 242 classified employees for outstanding work, length of service and retirement.

The employees included nine finalists for employees of the year, employee scholarship winners, 26 retirees and 199 employees with five, 15, 25 or 35 years of service, said Joe Younger, personnel officer and coordinator of the Employee Recognition Program.

"The selection of the Classified Employees of the Year is made by the Classified Affairs Committee," Younger said.

The employees of the year were chosen from three different categories: office/clerical, technical/professional and service/skilled crafts.

Out of nine finalists, the winners were Linda L. Morse, office assistant in continuing education, Paul K. Maginness, administrative officer in photographic services, and Martin V. Snyder, facilities maintenance supervisor.

Snyder, who has been working at K-State since 1972 said, "Without my staff I couldn't do it."

Maginness said he could thank his whole staff since it was such a small department, but is thankful to the other departments on campus for supporting photographic services.

"This year 52 nominations were made," said Ronda Bokelman, chairman of the Classified Affairs Committee. "Of those nominated, we send interview teams from the committee to do written and oral interviews. Then we chose the three winners."

Each of the three winners will receive about $1,000 in cash and prizes, and their names will be recorded on a permanent plaque in Anderson Hall, Younger said.

The Classified Employee Recognition Program began in 1978 when Walter and Katherine Jones provided the initial endowment to start the program, Younger said. From 1978 to 1986, the program honored one employee each year. Since 1987, three employees have been honored each year, Bokelman said.

President Jon Wefald presented the first President's Scholarship for Classified Employees. Sharon Starkey from the entomology department and Jeannie Skolaut from the office of student financial assistance won the scholarships. The award enables staff members to pursue a college degree while working for the University.

Of the classified employees awarded with five-, 15-, 25- and 35-year service pins, two were awarded 35-year pins. Harlan Hale, analyst in the computing and telecommunications, and Marie Ward, keyboard operator in the plant pathology department, received 35 year pins.

Local homeless among those in national count

By Bill Sier
Collegian Reporter

Head counters from the Census Bureau found 11 homeless people living in the Manhattan Emergency Shelter when they came in Tuesday evening, said Kathy Rankin, executive director of the shelter.

The Manhattan count was part of the nationwide effort to count the number of homeless in the United States, but the public won't be able to find out exactly how many there are until late next spring.

Robert Hamilton, district manager for the Census Bureau, Topeka district, and three head counters, or enumerators as the Census Bureau calls them, counted the Manhattan homeless Tuesday. Rankin said she did not know what other places in Manhattan they may have checked.

"We know of four homeless people in Manhattan who are living in their cars, but we don't know if they found and counted them or not," she said.

Hamilton and his assistants did ask questions about the residents who were not in at the time of the visit, but Michael Cody, shelter lifelines coordinator, doubted whether they were able to get an accurate count in just one night.

"It depends on how they define 'homeless,'" Cody said. "Do they consider a family that is doubling up with another temporarily

Aspirin may reduce chances of stroke

By The Associated Press

NEW ORLEANS — An aspirin a day cuts in half the risk of strokes caused by abnormal heartbeats, devastating disruptions of blood flow to the brain that strike 75,000 Americans each year, a major new study concludes.

Such strokes are triggered by extremely rapid beating of the heart's upper chambers. Blood clots that form inside the heart are launched into the bloodstream and travel to the brain, where they get stuck and choke off the blood supply.

Recent studies have shown that aspirin can dramatically lower the risk of heart attacks, but doctors had said they had little reason to hope that the commonplace medicine could ward off the disastrous effects of clots that arise in the heart.

However, the study in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine found that people with the heart condition, known as atrial fibrillation, suffered only half as many strokes if they took a single aspirin tablet each day.

"We are talking about a condition that probably causes 200 strokes a day," said co-author Dr. Jonathan L. Halperin.

Recruiting now Kruger's priority

By David Svoboda
Sports Reporter

Let the rumors begin flying — college basketball's spring recruiting season is in full swing.

For the K-State men, there are six holes to fill. Five seniors have exhausted their eligibility, and one player was lost early in the season for personal reasons.

And make no mistake about it, the five seniors Coach Lon Kruger is now faced with replacing were of the "impact" variety.

Gone will be Reggie Britt, Steve Henson, Tony Massop, Lance Simmons and Billy Ray Smith. Already departed — at mid-season — was Ryan Thornton.

Henson, Massop and Simmons were starters at season's end. Smith was the team's "sixth man." Britt was a tremendous crowd favorite.

But losing players is the status quo in the college game.

"When you lose five seniors like we will lose, you're losing the heart of your squad," Kruger said. "But that's the nature of college basketball. Every year you're going to lose some people that have been very important to you, and this year is no exception."

Just how Kruger goes about filling those holes is the subject of a great deal of conversation — on both national and local levels.

One of the six scholarships open has already been spoken for.

Kruger announced on Nov. 9, 1989, the signing of Lorenzo Lockett, a 6-9, 210-pound forward to a letter of intent in the early signing period.

Lockett, a product of Indian River Junior College in Fort Pierce, Fla., prepped at Fort Pierce Westwood before going on to Central Florida for his freshman year. He did not play there, and transferred to Indian River for his sophomore campaign.

While in high school at Westwood, Lockett posted some impressive numbers. In his senior season, he averaged 16 points and 12 rebounds a game. His career scoring high was 37 points, and his rebounding best was 18. He set school records in blocked shots for a career (618), season (210) and game (13).

Another of the six scholarships will likely go to College of Southern Idaho point guard Anthony Williams, who verbally committed to K-State in late January.

Kruger said, however, that he was not locked into awarding all six scholarships.

"With the remaining five (after Lockett), we'll take as many players as we feel are capable of stepping in and helping our program," he said. "If that's five, fine, or three or four — we're not going into it saying we will sign five or we won't sign five. We'll just take a look and see how recruiting develops."

Kruger said he also will likely follow his recruiting formula from years past.

"We're looking for good people, good athletes who shoot the ball well. That's kind of always been our criteria," he said. "And right now we've really got to get some people who can score. We had some trouble scoring this past year, and we need some assistance in that area."

Kruger also said he anticipates signing a mixture of high school and junior college talent.

"We want to have good people in our program," he said. "You'd always prefer to have good people around four years as opposed to two. On the other hand, if you have good folks around for two, it's not all bad. We like a combination, a mixture of the two."

There are currently seven players who may be a part of that mixture.

From the junior college ranks, two guards and two centers are reported to be on the Wildcat list. In the April 1990 issue of Basketball Times, Rick Ball's juco report lists the following players as being interested in K-State:

Paris Bryant, a 6-1 guard from Walker, Ala.; Allen Jackson, a 6-3 guard from Rend Lake, Ill.; Von Bennett, a 6-8 center from Northeastern Okla. A&M; and Jeff Stern, a 6-9 center from South Plains, Texas.

Top high school players in Kansas include Tony Arrington, a 6-5 product of Topeka High; Cortez Barnes, a 6-7 player from Wichita Heights; and Andy Berlin, a 6-7 product of Class 5A state champion McPherson.

Another player who might transfer to K-State in January 1991 is J.R. Rider of Allen County Community

Wildcats drop twinbill

Staff and Wire Reports

SPRINGFIELD, Mo. — K-State just might have run into a good baseball team at a bad time Wednesday in a double-header at Southwest Missouri State.

The Wildcats, weary already from a week-long spring break trip, saw their record dip to 8-11 with back-to-back losses to the Bears, 6-3 and 9-1.

"I think maybe being tired is part of it," K-State coach Mike Clark said, "but we came out swinging the bats well."

In fact, the 'Cats jumped out to a 3-0 lead in the first inning of the opener, only to watch Southwest Missouri stifle the 'Cat attack.

The Bears held K-State scoreless the rest of the way while tallying one run themselves in each of the first four innings. Mike Hedrick came in and pitched some quality innings in relief of Greg McNamara after that barrage, but he too made a mistake.

Catcher Scott Upp gave the Bears two big insurance runs when he belted a Hedrick pitch for a two-run homer in the sixth inning, and K-State was not able to overcome the deficit.

Of K-State's five hits in the first game, second baseman Jeff Troll led the 'Cats with a double and a triple.

In the second game, K-State failed to take advantage of a big opportunity in the fourth inning. Third baseman Scott Stroth led off the inning with a single and then shortstop Craig Wilson moved Stroth to third with a no-out double.

From there, however, Southwest Missouri pitching coaxed the 'Cats into a pop-up, fly out and strikeout.

K-State matched the Bears with seven hits in game two, and Chris Hmielewski's RBI single in the first provided the 'Cats with their only run. Kent Hipp took the loss for K-State.

"It was just the same verse for about the 17th or 18th ball game," Clark said of the Wildcats' inability to score runs. "One of these days, everything is going to fall in, and whoever it's against will pay heavily."

K-State will finally play its first home game in about two weeks Friday with a single contest against Regis College. From there, the Wildcats will embark on another road trip with a weekend series at Western Illinois.

College of Southern Idaho point guard likes K-State

By David Svoboda
Sports Reporter

HUTCHINSON — The scene was one pleasantly familiar to K-State basketball fans.

The team trailed by a single point as the floor leader — the point guard wearing uniform No. 12 — slowly brought the ball up the court.

He alerted his teammates with a wave of his right hand that they would be running the "motion" offense. He then made a pass to the far wing, cut down to the baseline on the opposite side, knifed through the lane and found himself open behind a pick.

With that, he caught a perfect return pass and rose up, his feet just behind the three-point line. The jumper he put up found nothing but the bottom of the net.

On the next trip to the offensive end, he cut through the lane all the way to the basket for a driving layup. Another "trifecta" followed his own steal on the next trip.

Just like that, a one-point deficit was a seven-point advantage. One man had taken over the game.

And no, that man wasn't Steve Henson. He was the player who may be destined to be Henson's heir apparent — Anthony Williams.

"Anthony's a point guard, make no mistake about it," said Williams' coach, Fred Trenkle, who saw his floor general score 22 points in the College of Southern Idaho's 88-85 win over San Jacinto (Tex.) College Wednesday in the opening round of the NJCAA Tournament at the Hutchinson Sports Arena.

"But in the second half, he kind of reversed roles," Trenkle continued. "He just decided, 'I'm going to take this in hand and see that it gets done.'"

That Williams did.

After a first half that saw him register just seven points, Williams hit on 3-of-4 three-point attempts and 3-of-5 additional field goal tries in a second-half explosion.

It's that kind of performance that has Division I head coaches around the country taking notice of Williams' performance. But Williams

"K-State's at the top right now. I like the coach and the style they play."

— Anthony Williams
junior college guard

ended a great deal of speculation in late January when he verbally committed to K-State. It's a commitment he's all but sure to keep, he said.

"K-State's at the top right now," Williams said of his list of choices, which he said includes two or three other schools he's also thinking about. "I like the coach (Lon Kruger) and the style they play. He gives the guards a lot of freedom, and I like that."

Williams, who made a visit to Manhattan during the K-State season, was also impressed with several other things. The atmosphere, he said, is much like the one he's accustomed to in Idaho.

"It (Manhattan) is pretty much the same kind of community as Twin Falls," he said. "It's quiet, small, and doesn't have the things that a big city does that can lead you to get in trouble."

"It looks like a great place to study and make sure you're keeping up with the books. And it seemed like everyone was real friendly there."

And yes, one of the friendly people Williams met and has watched on TV three or four times this year, and in the NCAA tournament, was Henson.

"I know about Steve," Williams said of the man whose role he might be stepping into if he signs the letter of intent in three weeks and wins the job next fall. "He was a great player and a four-year starter. You can't do much better."

Williams also said he's ready to take on the responsibility of trying to be a star at the next step. His junior college numbers — 16 points and 3.8 assists per game — are impressive, but they were put up at the juco level, not in Division I ball.

"There will be pressure making the move," he said. "But I know that already. There will be big crowds, better players, everything. But I think I'm ready."

His current coach, Trenkle, does, too.

"He's a good kid and a smart player, and his assist totals would be a great deal better if our stats people knew what an assist was," Trenkle said.

It's his ability to make things happen for other people that is often overlooked, Williams said. That's another reason he's looking forward to a possible move to K-State.

"I'm comfortable with my shooting — taking threes and everything — but I think my biggest strength is and will be creating for the big men inside," he said.

Williams committed just 38 turnovers in 39 games during his first season at Southern Idaho, and has led the team to a 33-2 mark thus far this year.

With the basketball season ended, Wildcat coach Lon Kruger will now focus most of his attentions on the recruiting process.

NCAA play resumes with 4 games tonight

By The Associated Press

The Midwest Regional's top three seeds — Oklahoma, Purdue and Georgetown — are gone from the NCAA tournament, and that leaves Arkansas in a risky position.

The Razorbacks, at No. 4, are the highest remaining seed in the Midwest.

Arkansas (28-4) meets North Carolina (21-12) in the first of two Midwest games Thursday night at Reunion Arena in Dallas. In the second game, Xavier (28-4) meets Texas (23-8).

While the trend in the Midwest seems to portend bad things for the Razorbacks, geography is on their side. The Southwest Conference tournament was held at Reunion Arena, and an estimated 80 percent of the fans who bought tickets were from Arkansas.

It's estimated that about 65 percent of the NCAA regional tickets also went to Arkansas fans, many of whom bought NCAA tickets during the conference championships.

"They're talking about it being like a home court for Arkansas," North Carolina coach Dean Smith said. "Not only the crowd but the fact they've won six games through the Southwest Conference tournaments."

North Carolina upset the region's top seed, Oklahoma, to get to Dallas.

Xavier also will be going up against a hometown favorite in Texas, revitalized under coach Tom Penders. Xavier ousted No. 3 seed Georgetown, while Texas eliminated No. 2 Purdue.

"They penetrate and shoot real well," Xavier coach Pete Gillen said. "They like to run, and we like to run. It should be fun."

Thursday's other tournament action takes place in the East Regional, where Connecticut (30-5) meets Clemson (26-8), and Duke (26-8) plays UCLA (22-10). The winners play Saturday night for the right to go to the Final Four in Denver.

On Friday, it's Minnesota (22-8) vs. Syracuse (26-6) and Michigan State (28-5) vs. Georgia Tech (26-6) in the Southeast Region, and Loyola Marymount (25-5) vs. Alabama (26-8) and Nevada-Las Vegas (31-5) vs. Ball State (26-6) in the West Region. The two winners meet in the regional finals on Sunday.

EAST

at East Rutherford, N.J.
Connecticut, the No. 1 seed in the East, uses a press and a running offense, and the Huskies had a combined 35 steals in tournament victories over Boston University and California. Clemson, led by the frontcourt duo of Elden Campbell and Dale Davis, likes to get the ball inside.

"Connecticut's defense is the key to the game," Clemson coach Cliff Ellis said. "It does not matter how big we are or anything. If we do not break their press, we do not win the basketball game on Thursday night."

Duke, one of four ACC teams still left in the tournament, is 9-1 at Brendan Byrne Arena and has been to the Final Four three of past four years after winning a regional championship

Judge determines privilege protects Iran-Contra diary

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The judge in John Poindexter's Iran-Contra trial reversed himself Wednesday, saying that former President Reagan does not have to produce diary entries sought by his one-time national security adviser.

U.S. District Court Judge Harold Greene issued the ruling as the jury began watching eight hours of videotaped testimony by Reagan.

Greene had ordered Reagan to turn over the diary, but said after reading the three dozen entries sought by Poindexter that the material was not "essential to the achievement of justice in this case."

Poindexter said he needed the excerpts because Reagan, in his taped testimony, "professed a total inability to recall" the diversion of Iran arms sale proceeds to the Nicaraguan Contras and a 1985 Hawk missile shipment.

Defense lawyers also said Reagan was unable to recall Poindexter's activities on behalf of the Contras.

Poindexter is charged with five felony charges of conspiracy, making false statements and obstructing Congress in connection with the Iran-Contra affair.

"Mr. Reagan did testify under oath at great length about many specific activities in his administration — an event that is unprecedented in American history," Greene said in a 14-page ruling.

He granted Reagan's motion to quash Poindexter's subpoena for the entries, which relate to both the Iran initiative and Contra resupply operation, saying they "offer no new insights about these events."

Reagan, later joined by the Bush administration, fought the subpoena by invoking executive privilege.

"If the concept of executive privilage is to retain any meaning, it will surely shield personal presidential papers from production ... on so flimsy a basis," Greene said.

"The inability of a witness to recall ... does not automatically entitle a party ... to rummage through ... personal papers, including his personal diary," he said.

Prosecution witnesses have testified during the 7½ days of the trial that Poindexter destroyed a presidential document and sent false letters to Congress about covert aid to the Contras.

Reagan's videotaped testimony taken Feb. 16-17 was shown in Greene's courtroom on television monitors, including one positioned in front of the jury.

The jury spent all day Wednesday watching the videotape and was to finish the process Thursday morning.

The jurors watched intently as Iran-Contra prosecutor Dan Webb questioned Reagan in rapid-fire fashion.

"Did you ... give authority to John Poindexter to make any false ... statements?" Webb asked.

"No," Reagan replied. "And I don't think any false statements were made."

"Did you ever ... give authority to John Poindexter to destroy ... records?" Webb asked.

"No," responded the former president.

"Did John Poindexter ever tell you ... he planned on destroying any documents?" the prosecutor asked.

"No," Reagan responded.

KTEC to discontinue its funding of the center, the College of Engineering will be deprived of at least that amount of funding in future years, Simons said.

The state's small manufacturing businesses would be most affected, which is significant because of all the manufacturing businesses in Kansas, 90 percent have fewer than 50 employees, he said.

The center is particularly interested in providing the state's small- to medium-sized manufacturing businesses with technology and resources they would otherwise be unable to afford, Simons said.

To accomplish this, the center has targeted several areas for research and development, including artificial intelligence and expert computer systems, robotics, machine vision, image processing, radiation detection, engine and transmission control testing, and computer-integrated design, manufacturing and assembly.

"We wouldn't be doing this type of research without KTEC support," Simons said.

With hopes of rallying public support for the Center for Research, KTEC and college officials conducted a media tour Tuesday of the center.

"We're trying to show that those dollars (KTEC's funding of the center) were well spent," Hudson said. "Computer-controlled automation will be a $1.5 billion industry in Kansas by the end of this decade."

Laws can limit awards

Court decides amounts given in civil cases may be lowered

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A majority of the state Supreme Court defended Wednesday its decision to declare constitutional state laws limiting the amount juries can award in civil cases for damages such as pain and suffering.

The court released a long-awaited opinion in a personal injury case in which a 5-2 majority upheld 1987 and 1988 laws limiting awards for non-economic damages to $250,000 in personal injury, death and medical malpractice cases.

When they ruled in the case in March 1989, the justices issued only a notice of their decision and not a full opinion. That 1989 ruling came only a year after the court ruled, 4-3, that a 1986 law enacting a similar cap was unconstitutional.

In writing the majority opinion Wednesday, Justice Tyler Lockett said the 1987 and 1988 laws are constitutional because they also prevent a judge from reducing a jury's award for non-economic damages. The Legislature can abridge the right to a jury trial as long as it creates an adequate substitute, his opinion said.

"Our constitution does not make this court the critic of the Legislature," Lockett wrote. "A statute will not be declared unconstitutional unless its infringement on the superior law of the constitution is clear, beyond substantial doubt."

Justice Kay McFarland wrote a separate opinion, concurring with the majority's result. However, she said the majority did not need to search for a tradeoff, or "quid pro quo," to find the laws constitutional.

"I believe the scope of the remedy to be afforded is a matter of legislative determination without the quid pro quo requirement affixed by the majority," she wrote.

Justice Harold Herd wrote a stinging dissent, in which he said the court's majority should "adhere to its noble words" and overturn the laws. Herd noted that the state's constitution declares the right to trial by jury "inviolable."

Justice Donald Allegrucci dissented separately but did not write his own opinion.

Herd chastised the majority for what he said was its willingness to yield to "upheavals of the time," a reference to the contentious legislative debate over such laws in the 1980s. Supporters of limiting awards saw such laws as a way to help prevent large increases in liability insurance, saying the fear of large awards caused insurance companies to increase rates.

"It has often been said that expediency is the worst enemy of a written constitution," Herd wrote.

Soviet Union tightens grip

By The Associated Press
VILNIUS, U.S.S.R. — President Mikhail S. Gorbachev increased pressure on the breakaway Lithuanian republic Wednesday by ordering its citizens to turn in their guns and telling the KGB to strengthen controls on the republic's border.

In a decree certain to heighten tension between Lithuania and the Kremlin, Gorbachev also temporarily banned the sale of firearms in Lithuania and said those citizens who do not surrender weapons within a week will have them confiscated.

Premier Kazimira Prunskiene of Lithuania told reporters in Vilnius her government still was counting on negotiations with Moscow on the republic's declaration of independence March 11.

"All these questions should be resolved by negotiations," she said. "We are not getting too worked up about this. We hope common sense will prevail."

Gorbachev has proclaimed the declaration of independence invalid, but Lithuania refuses to recognize his authority.

In issuing the decree, Gorbachev used powers given him when he was elected to the new, more powerful presidency last week.

"The decree demands that citizens living in Lithuania turn all their firearms in to temporary police custody within the next seven days," the Tass news agency said.

He directed the Interior Ministry "in the event of citizens' refusal to turn in these weapons, to ensure their confiscation."

Gorbachev said despite previous directives from the Kremlin, "the Lithuanian parliament and government continue passing bills that violate the rights of Soviet citizens and the sovereignty of the U.S.S.R."

Access to firearms is severely restricted in the Soviet Union, and it is unknown how many weapons might be in the hands of Lithuanian residents.

Lithuanians have begun signing up for voluntary defense service, and some Lithuanians serving in the Soviet armed forces have deserted.

Gorbachev previously said he expected to talk with Lithuanian leaders about the declaration of independence, and senior officials have said the Kremlin does not intend to use force to bring the Baltic republic back into the Soviet fold.

The White House reacted "with concern" to the latest developments. "It's a matter that we are watching seriously," said presidential press secretary Marlin Fitzwater.

Gorbachev demanded that national and local governments ensure that Soviet law and the rights of citizens be observed and called for KGB border troops to increase security on Lithuania's section of the Soviet border. It ordered the government to "tighten control over issuance to foreigners of visas and permission to visit Lithuania."

That move apparently was aimed at many ethnic Lithuanians, who have returned recently to help set up an independent government and market economy in the republic.

A draft law outlining requirements for secession passed its first legislative hurdle in Moscow on Wednesday. Deputies said the secession procedure, which requires a republic-wide referendum and a transition period of up to five years, would have to be observed by Lithuania.

"It gets close to 100," answered Brice Hobrock, dean of Libraries.

"Yeah," Hobrock said. "It gets

"Nope," Hobrock said. "It never did. The administration changed and it just sort of faded away."

The newer addition was built in 1970 during the James McCain administration, Hobrock said, and when the administration changed in 1975, the fact that the addition would be filled by 1983 was forgotten.

Questions could prevent airline delays

By The Associated Press
WASHINGTON — Airline passengers hate delays, yet few seem to realize they could improve their odds of arriving on time if they heeded one simple clue.

Just for the asking, travelers can learn any flight's recent record for tardiness.

An example: If you were thinking of taking USAir Flight 896 from Philadelphia to Boston at 5:55 p.m. you could know your chances of arriving late are better than 80 percent. "Late" is defined as more than 15 minutes behind schedule.

The clue lies in the flight's code that appears in airline and travel agent computers. The code for the USAir flight, for example, has a "1" as the last digit. That means that for the past month the flight has arrived on time between 10 and 20 percent of the time.

A "2" at the end of a flight's computer code would mean the flight lands on time between 20 and 30 percent of the time, and so on up to the 90 to 100 percent range. A rating of less than 30 percent gets "chronically late" honors in the Department of Transportation's monthly "Air Travel Consumer Report."

So what does a traveler do if the flight has a low score?

A passenger flying from Philadelphia to Boston could take Delta 648 at 4:50 p.m. with a 60 to 70 percent chance of arriving on time, or USAir 424 ten minutes later, which has a 40 to 50 percent chance.

But how often do customers ask for this information?

"No one ever has," said Yolande Frommer, referring to customers at her Washington, D.C., travel agency. They'll ask the type of aircraft, how many seats are in a row, where the exits are and what movie is playing, she said, but they don't think to ask the chances of the plane arriving on time, even though it often is a major concern.

Many people simply aren't aware that the information is available.

Phil Davidoff, president-elect of the American Society of Travel Agents, said that although few travelers use the data, some agents notified customers when the on-time rating is below 50 percent.

"It's clearly down the line in factors that will affect a decision," about which flight to take, Davidoff said.

The data comes from the airlines themselves. They are required by law to report it to the government each month. Delays due to mechanical problems are not counted in the ratings because the government thinks that including them might encourage airlines to rush repairs.

Clean air proposal defeated by Senate

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Senate turned back a third attempt to strengthen the compromise clean air bill on Wednesday, defeating a proposal supporters said would close "loopholes" in the battle against urban smog.

Opponents argued the amendment, which lost on a 53-46 vote, would burden too many small businesses with expensive pollution controls and require unnecessary federal involvement in urban air pollution plans.

The vote marked the third unsuccessful attempt by a group of senators, mainly from urban areas with the dirtiest air, to add tougher environmental controls to a compromise bill worked out between Senate leaders and the White House.

Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, argued on each vote that the compromise bill already goes far beyond current federal pollution control laws and that compromises are needed to win approval in the Senate.

But Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass., one of the key sponsors of the proposal, argued the amendment would only retain requirements in current pollution laws that are necessary to clean up the air in scores of cities so they meet federal health standards.

Kerry's proposal would have preserved the federal government's authority to impose air pollution reduction plans if states and local officials failed to act. It also sought to eliminate waivers — based on expense — for some industrial polluters and broaden the smog-controlling curbs to include smaller polluters.

Kerry said a clean air bill without the amendment "would legalize new loopholes for delay" in getting cities to meet air quality standards.

But Mitchell said, "This is a small business killer amendment." Senate leaders fought all three environmental amendments, arguing they threaten the agreement with the White House and could jeopardize passage of a clean air bill altogether.

Environmentalists said they would now focus on the House, where a clean air bill is still in committee, in their attempt to strengthen curbs on smog-causing pollutants.

In defeating the Kerry amendment, "the Senate voted to shred the environmental safety net of the Clean Air Act," said Daniel Weiss of the Sierra Club.

On Tuesday night, the Senate by 52-46 rejected a plan to tighten automobile emissions controls and require broader use of alternative fuels, including production of 1 million clean-fuel vehicles by the end of the decade.

Earlier, a proposal which would have required a reduction in toxic chemical emissions from automobiles fell by 65-33.

Opponents of Kerry's smog amendment said the provisions were not needed.

Sen. Max Baucus, D-Mont., said the Environmental Protection Agency has for nearly 20 years had authority to force federal smog-control plans on states and cities, but has never done so.

Research proves fusion process difficult to repeat

By The Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY — It seemed so simple. A pair of scientists had unlocked the mysteries of nuclear fusion after an inspirational walk in the woods and a couple of shots of sour mash.

It was never so simple again. A year after chemists B. Stanley Pons and Martin Fleischmann announced they'd achieved room temperature or "cold" fusion in a laboratory flask, their work remains devilishly difficult to duplicate.

Not only has subsequent research failed to nurture initial hopes for a clean and limitless energy source, but cold fusion has cooled to the point that a chief supporter describes it as a commercial gamble.

"This is one of those areas where a certain amount of risk-taking is needed, but the payoff is very large," said Fritz G. Will, director of the state-funded National Cold Fusion Institute. "We need luck and money."

If either is forthcoming, it will require a reversal in cold fusion's fortunes in the laboratory.

"As a whole — and it's always dangerous to characterize how the scientific community thinks on this — but on the whole, the scientific community is still extremely skeptical about it," said Ronald Parker, director of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology's Plasma Fusion Center.

Pons, a University of Utah chemistry professor, and Fleischmann, of England's University of Southampton, announced their findings at a press conference last March 23.

They described how they hatched the idea for the experiment during a hike in the Utah mountains, then sketched the apparatus in Pons' kitchen over a bottle of Jack Daniel's.

Eventually, they said, they created a nuclear fusion reaction in a bottle of deuterium oxide, or heavy water, using a palladium electrode wrapped in platinum wire. They ran electricity through the two metals and reported that the device put out more energy than they put into it.

The announcement, stunning in its possibilities, conjured visions of a cheap, relatively safe and virtually inexhaustible supply of energy. Normally, fusion has occurred under enormously expensive extremes of heat and pressure.

Conventional nuclear energy, or fission, splits atoms; fusion produces energy by fusing them together.

After the announcement, scientists lambasted Pons and Fleischmann for rushing to the popular press with neither a theory to explain the results nor ability to reproduce them at will.

A year later, they have yet to publish definitive scientific papers detailing their research.

Other scientists tried to replicate the process. Few met with success and many gave up, although work continues in universities and centers such as the Los Alamos National Laboratory in New Mexico, and in laboratories in Japan, India, and the Soviet Union.

Senate to study notification

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The Senate is expected to debate next week a bill that would require doctors to notify the parents of a teen-ager who is about to undergo an abortion.

The Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee heavily amended a House-passed version of the bill Wednesday before sending it to the Senate on an unrecorded voice vote. The committee strengthened the measure considerably after the House watered it down during a stormy floor debate two weeks ago.

Senate Majority Leader Fred Kerr, R-Pratt, said he did not yet know what day next week the Senate will take up the issue.

Anti-abortion lobbyists said they were satisfied with the committee's action, and predicted quick passage in the Senate. It is now more similar to one endorsed by a House committee, which was then watered down during the House debate before being sent to the Senate.

Sen. Eric Yost, R-Wichita, offered a series of amendments to the House bill that tightened the measure. It would now require doctors to give 72-hour notice to at least one parent, rather than just clergy member or a blood relative over 21, if a teen-ager is going to have an abortion.

Under the proposal, if the girl does not have parents, the doctor must notify the guardian or the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services if the girl is a ward of the state.

The age of the teen-agers affected was in doubt after the meeting. Questions were raised about the vote for that particular amendment.

Committee Chairman Ed Reilly, R-Leavenworth, ruled that an amendment to decrease the age from under 18 to under 16 was successful on a 5-4 vote. However, that proposal apparently was not adopted.

Sen. Ben Vidricksen, R-Salina, said after the meeting that he changed his vote. He said he first voted to have the proposed law apply to girls under 18, but later changed it to 16 and under. The House version applied to girls under 16.

"It was a judgment call," Vidricksen said.

Reilly later explained during the Senate's daily session that he apparently miscounted votes because Vidricksen had voted for the other amendments.

"It was not done intentionally on my part," he said. He said the matter would be resolved at a committee meeting Thursday.

Library

ceiling of stack level eight where rust has eaten through the metal roof and the wooden boards suspended above the bookshelves which are used to hang plastic sheets.

"There have been many years we've had plastic draped from one end to the other just to keep the water off the books," Hobrock said.

"There are some really dirty parts of this building that I think are really hazardous, fire traps and places that students never see," Hobrock said.

Hobrock also showed Carlin the newer additions to Farrell, including the compact disc databases and the new computerized NOTIS reference system that will replace the ALIS system currently in use by the library.

But the newer technologies aren't taken into account by the accreditation evaluation, Hobrock said.

Carlin said it was unfortunate and wrong for the newer systems not to count toward an evaluation.

At the end of Carlin's tour, Hobrock said for him to keep in mind that much of the library's collection is housed elsewhere on campus.

"The thing you need to remember is that we have an additional 200,000 volumes in the basement of Nichols Hall," he said. "Twenty percent of our collection is out of the building and we're headed for double that. So we're that full."

Carlin said it was helpful for him to see the new technologies being implemented in Farrell.

"It isn't like you're sitting in an old facility doing nothing for yourselves," he said. "You're doing a lot for yourselves and that's very valuable to know."

But as to the dilapidated condition of the stack areas, Carlin was not surprised.

"It pretty much confirms generally what I've been told," he said.

Children support baseball program

By Tammy Breitenbach
Collegian Reporter

A new group of fans is cheering on the K-State baseball team this year. This group, called the Knothole Gang, is made up of children from kindergarten through eighth grade. It is the first fan club of its kind in K-State baseball history, said Dave Ebberts, assistant director of marketing and sales for the athletic department. The Knothole Gang got its name from the holes in fences to watch baseball games for free, Ebberts said.

For $12, children in this age group receive a season pass to all home baseball games, a Knothole Gang T-shirt, a membership card, a baseball clinic and a barbecue given by the players, Ebberts said. Through this fan club, the baseball team is able to gain momentum for future support, Ebberts said. "The idea behind it is not only to increase attendance at baseball games but to build fans from a grassroots level, to build support for K-State when they are young," he said.

Baseball player Brad Rippelmeyer, freshman in radio-television, said the Knothole Gang benefits both the children and the players. "When I was a little kid, to go to a clinic and to see someone who was either playing college or professional baseball and have them talk to me personally and tell me things about the game — I'd be really excited about it," Rippelmeyer said.

"At the same time I think it will be a lot of fun for me to work with little kids, to see them excited and having fun," he said. Ebberts said 37 children have signed up, and sign-up sheets for the club will remain available at Vista Restaurant until after the clinic on April 20. Proceeds from the Knothole Gang dues will go into a fund for new uniforms and recruiting, Morgan said.

Alaska jury acquits captain in oil spill

By The Associated Press

ANCHORAGE, Alaska — A jury on Thursday acquitted Exxon Valdez skipper Joseph Hazelwood of being drunk and reckless in the nation's worst oil spill but convicted him of a minor charge of negligent discharge of oil.

After deliberating for just 10½ hours, the jurors absolved Hazelwood of one felony and two misdemeanors stemming from the disaster, in which his tanker ran aground and spilled nearly 11 million gallons of oil into Prince William Sound on March 24, 1989.

The misdemeanor charge on which he was convicted carries a maximum sentence of 90 days in jail and a $1,000 fine, far less than the 7½ years and $61,000 fine he could have faced if found guilty on all four charges.

Superior Court Judge Karl Johnstone set sentencing for Friday at 1:30 p.m.

There were bursts of applause in the court room as the judge read the three verdicts of "not guilty" to counts of criminal mischief — a felony — reckless endangerment and operating a vessel while intoxicated.

Hazelwood's New York lawyer, Michael Chalos, a former classmate of Hazelwood's at the Maritime Academy at Fort Schuyler, N.Y., clapped the skipper on the shoulder and hit the counsel table with his hand at the first "not guilty" verdict.

The normally taciturn defendant smiled broadly for the first time in the two-month-long trial and commented briefly to reporters, saying, "I'm just relieved. I was nervous."

"I'm going to try to get along with my life. ... I'd like to go back to sea," Hazelwood told reporters at a news conference later. "That's what I do."

His lawyer said he would begin negotiations with Exxon to get the former skipper's job back.

Consultant approved

Regents agree to studying Farrell's space deficiencies

By Gregory A. Branson
Collegian Reporter

The Kansas Board of Regents Wednesday approved spending about $25,000 of University funds on a consultant to study deficiencies at Farrell Library.

The University will proceed with the hiring of a professional consultant who will assess the condition of the existing library space, and also future space requirements.

Brice Hobrock, dean of the library said, "This will help us to establish a new baseline for what our actual needs are. It is going to be a help to have an outside opinion."

"This will show our needs and deficiencies," President Jon Wefald said. "It will help to educate the citizens of Kansas and the Legislature on what we need to make our library a 21st century library."

The next step is to advertise in professional magazines for interested consulting firms and conduct interviews. A report could be done as soon as September.

Student Body President Todd Johnson said he was happy that work is under way to improve the library.

"It's long overdue, and I commend President Wefald on finding the $25,000," Johnson said. "It's being done on a timely basis, and we're going to be one step closer to making the library addition a reality."

The Board of Regents also received a final report from the Task Force on Tuition Policy. This task force was formed to develop a plan which would identify and address tuition-related issues.

Included in the report is a recommendation that may hurt chances of approval for a proposed engineering fee. The proposed engineering fee would charge students in the College of Engineering an added amount for each credit hour in engineering to help pay for new equipment.

The report recommended three criteria a university would have to meet before they could have a restricted fee. These criteria include:

- The program must have a history of chronic underfunding and the underfunding must adversely impact the quality of the program.

- All other sources of funding, including external and internal reallocation, have to be exhausted.

- The university must prove that failure to authorize the fee will jeopardize the viability of the program.

Bob Krause, vice president for institutional advancement, said he thought K-State's engineering fee would still qualify under these guidelines.

"We have looked internally for the money," Krause said. "We can't keep the state-of-the-art equipment there without new funds."

Wefald said he thinks the University would meet the criteria and be granted the restricted fee.

"We've already reallocated $175,000 in equipment," Wefald said. "We've exhausted all funds available to us."

Johnson said there may be problems dealing with which restricted fees will pass and which will not, because of the vagueness in the wording of the recommendations.

"I think the size of the window will be in the eyes of the beholder," he said. "I don't

Increase taken off agenda by Senate

By Chris Koger
Government Editor

In a swift and surprising move, Student Senate Finance Committee dropped a bill for a Student Publications line item fee increase from the Senate agenda Thursday night.

Barry Beck, coordinator of finances, at first declined to say why the bill was dropped without any debate, and said the committee didn't want him to give an explanation.

After a motion was made to return the bill to the agenda, and failed to obtain the two-thirds vote needed, Beck explained the committee's decision.

"The reason there was no explanation was because we fully expected this to happen," he said. "When Student Publications came before Senate, they said if there was no tax reclassification, they would not ask for the fee."

Beck was referring to an expected change in the interpretation of tax laws that would charge Student Publications taxes on all items bought by the corporation.

However, a letter sent to Student Publications by University Controller Keith Ratzloff stated that the tax might not be applicable to Student Publications. The letter also said an audit by the state Department of Revenue might force it to pay the tax.

Senate could not vote for the fee because of the confusion over the tax, said Travis Stumpff, arts and sciences senator.

"It's my understanding that it is unclear and there are contrasting opinions about whether they have to pay the tax," Stumpff said. "We can't pass things we're not sure of, but we have a safety valve. We can go a long way and then bail them out (if they have to pay the tax)."

Gloria Freeland, associate director of Student Publications, told the senators that Student Publications would need more finances even if the tax wasn't charged. She cited higher postal rates, aging equipment used to produce the Collegian, space limitations in Kedzie Hall and rising inflation.

Senators also expressed concern about the bill's failure.

"This proposal had other reasons than just the tax," said Dave Whetstone, veterinary medicine senator. Whetstone suggested a special meeting be convened to consider a bill excluding the tax.

Senate also approved first readings of resolutions to commend Steve Henson and the men's basketball team, and bills for allocations to Older, Wiser, Learning Students and the Native American Indian Student Body. OWLS is requesting $258 for expenses for a conference today and Saturday, and the Native American Student Body is requesting $200 for activities during Native American Heritage Month.

Scholarship offered in pageant

Poise, appearance of 13 competitors judged for title

By Margaret Clarkin
Collegian Reporter

The Miss Manhattan K-State Pageant is more than just blondes and swimsuits, said Jimmy Steele, master of ceremonies.

The pageant will take place at 7:30 p.m. Saturday in the Manhattan High School Auditorium.

"These are very talented, intelligent ladies trying to develop skills like poise and articulation," Steele said. "It judges abilities that they will use in the real world."

Thirteen contestants will compete for a $1,000 unrestricted scholarship, said Nancy O'Kane, pageant director.

"The money must be used to further their post-high school education," O'Kane said. "Unrestricted means it can be used at either a university or a vocational school, wherever they want to go to school."

"I'd rather be in this pageant than work as a fry cook for five months. It's a pretty good prize," O'Kane said.

Besides the scholarship, the winner will also receive a large addition to her wardrobe.

"Several merchants donate different things — shoes, accessories and things like that," O'Kane said. "The winner will have a substantial wardrobe."

The contestants are judged in four areas. Their talent abilities, poise and how well they do during their interviews account for a large percentage of their scores. They are also judged on their appearances in swimsuit and evening gowns.

Preliminaries were held in January, O'Kane said. At that time, 13 contestants were selected from 21 competitors.

Melinda Arnold, sophomore at Manhattan Christian College, became involved with the pageant two years ago.

"I got involved in the pageant because of friends who had been in the pageant before and had said it was a fun experience, and they convinced me to give it a try," Arnold said.

"It's really a lot of competition," she said. "There are some really good girls who have some really awesome talent and who were really good in interview."

Arnold went to a modeling school during her junior year in high school. She said she received some experience there, but she found modeling and pageants to be different things.

"In modeling school you work on the walk, hairstyles and makeup, but in the pageant you have to portray confidence, and you have to have a talent,"

Committee recommends salary study

Survey says lowest salaries paid to English instructors

By Tim Clopton
Collegian Reporter

At a time when the literacy and communication skills of students are national concerns, another issue has been raised for those who teach at the University.

An administrative study of the salary structure for instructors and the establishment of a minimum salary have been recommended by the Faculty Women's Caucus.

"The starting salary for a teacher at Manhattan High School is $20,000," said Charlotte Dahl, instructor of technical communications and a caucus member. "Some of the instructors here have been working for years and are below that level."

"Instructors, especially in English, are not being paid enough for the amount of work they are doing. I think a fair minimum salary for instructors should be about $20,000."

Dahl said a caucus committee reviewed salaries of regular and term instructors and found that English instructors were paid the least. Recently regularized English instructors make about $16,000 to teach eight sections per year.

"The University needs to put its value where its mouth is," said Alison Wheatley, instructor of English. "If instruction is important, then they should show us. It makes me feel that the University doesn't value my work as much as I value what I do."

Thomas Isenhour, dean of arts and sciences, said he agrees that something should be done.

"We need to raise instructor salaries in (the College of Arts and Sciences) as well as the salaries of other faculty ranks," Isenhour said. "I would be delighted to have minimum salary levels for all ranks."

This fiscal year, the five deans in the College of Arts and Sciences received a total increase in salaries and wages of about $90,000. One of the deans was newly hired, receiving a salary of about $65,000.

According to the annual budget, the speech department, with more than 30 members, received an increase in salaries and wages of about $125,000.

"Historically, it would seem that the administration has not complained about salary. They seem to be paid on a par with our peer institutions," said Phil Anderson, instructor of speech. "Since the faculty is not (paid on a par), I would conclude that historically, the administration took a disproportionate share of the pot and let the remainder trickle down to the faculty."

He said the Faculty Senate and the administration now have an agreement that the administration will not take a larger percentage pay increase than the faculty.

Isenhour said he has identified additional money for instructors.

"Instructor salaries have increased more rapidly in Arts and Sciences for the last three years than the average," he said.

Dahl proposed that the administration study the salary structure and set a base salary for instructors during a speech given at the Caucus' meeting with President Jon Wefald last month.

The administration is studying both points.

Provost James Coffman said he is reviewing the instructor salary range in comparison to instructors' salaries nationally and to professors' salaries.

"Salaries for instructors are at a more competitive level to our peer institutions than our professors are," he said.

A recent report comparing the average instructor salaries at K-State to 76 other members of the National Association of State Universities and Land Grant Colleges, showed English instructors at the University received a 6 percent lower salary than the other member universities.

The average salary for speech instructors, about $20,000, showed a 8.7 percent deficit to similar instructors at the other NASULGC schools.

"We are not paid on a par with our peer institutions," Anderson said. "That is what the Margin of Excellence is for, to help raise our salaries."

The MOE is a program that allocates extra money for unclassified positions which include the administration and faculty.

In 1989, the first year of the MOE, $1.6 million was allocated for faculty salary parity. This was an increase of 2.4 percent in the average salary.

The figure rose to $2 million for fiscal year 1990, an increase of 2.6 percent. Both years included a 5 percent increase in salary from the state. The final year has been delayed by Gov. Mike Hayden.

Colombian candidate killed

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — A young man reached out as if to welcome a presidential candidate Thursday and shot him to death with a submachine gun hidden in a newspaper. Police said a notorious drug lord ordered the assassination.

Colombia's intelligence police chief, Gen. Miguel Maza Marquez, said an investigation had determined that the leader of the Medellin drug cartel, Pablo Escobar, ordered the assassination of Bernardo Jaramillo of the leftist Patriotic Union Party.

An official communique from the National Security Council said the police had intercepted radio communications between Escobar and one of his subordinates implicating the drug boss in the killing early Thursday at Bogota's El Dorado International Airport.

Earlier Thursday, a telephone caller claimed the attack for the Medellin cartel.

Restrictive abortion law passed

BOISE, Idaho (AP) — The Idaho Senate passed and sent to the governor Thursday the most restrictive abortion law of any state, one that could become a test of the U.S. Supreme Court's commitment to legalized abortions.

If signed by Democratic Gov. Cecil Andrus, the measure would take effect July 1. Andrus has declined to announce his intentions on the bill but has reiterated his long-held anti-abortion stand.

"Abortion in my opinion is cruel and unusual punishment," Republican Sen. Roger Madsen, the Boise attorney who helped draft the legislation, told the Senate before the 25-17 vote.

"It is the destruction of life, and what can we say about the future of our society when defenseless victims are destroyed for the convenience of personal choice?" Madsen said.

The law would make abortion illegal except in cases of non-statutory rape reported within seven days, incest if the victim is younger than 18, severe fetal deformity or a threat to the mother's life or physical health.

L-tryptophan recall expanded

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government expanded its recall of L-tryptophan Thursday because of fears that a sometimes fatal blood disorder can be caused even by small doses of the dietary supplement.

"We are confronted with a major public health problem," Health and Human Services Secretary Louis Sullivan warned in the announcement by the Food and Drug Administration.

"I urge everyone to stop taking these supplements immediately."

L-tryptophan is an amino acid that occurs naturally in some foods that are high in protein, such as milk, beef, turkey and beans. But it is also sold over the counter as a manufactured dietary supplement used for insomnia, depression and weight control.

It has been linked to a blood disorder called eosinophilia-myalgia syndrome, or EMS.

So far, 1,411 cases of EMS — including 19 deaths — have been reported, the FDA said. Cases have been reported in every state.

The Council for Responsible Nutrition, which represents manufacturers of nutritional supplements, endorsed the FDA's action.

Oil theft finding disputed

WICHITA (AP) — The Bureau of Land Management is disputing a Senate subcommittee's finding that Koch Industries Inc. stole more than $30 million worth of crude oil from Indian lands through deliberate mismeasurement.

BLM officials conducted their own investigation of Koch's oil measuring practices on Indian lands. Only three minor discrepancies were found, according to a report issued Wednesday.

Earlier this week, the Osage tribe in Oklahoma issued a statement saying it had completed a review of its dealings with Koch during 1987, 1988 and the first five months of 1989. It found a $22,000 discrepancy. During that period Koch purchased 10 million barrels of Osage oil and paid $33 million in royalties for it. The discrepancy amounted to less than one-tenth of 1 percent.

Election results surprise speakers

By David Freese
Collegian Reporter

Nicaraguan cities and towns were like the Mardi Gras the day before the recent elections there and deserted and desolate the day after, said Wilfredo Gutierrez, graduate student in sociology.

Gutierrez, along with Kansas City area residents Kate Neely and Cathy White, spoke Thursday night at a Manhattan Alliance on Central America program that focused on the aftermath of the Nicaraguan elections.

The three speakers were in Nicaragua during the elections. They agreed they were all dumbstruck by the outcome in which United National Opposition candidate Violeta Barrios de Chamorro defeated President Daniel Ortega.

"You couldn't see anybody walking on the street after the elections," Gutierrez said. "It was like a morgue. To me, that shows that there is no connection between the leadership and popular support."

"There was a sense of shock, like a day of national mourning, after the elections," White said. "It was very frightening. And what was amazing was within a couple of days, everyone was so scared about what had happened, how it had happened and what they were going to do about it."

She also said that she hardly saw anyone supporting the UNO and was incredulous as to how Chamorro won.

Neely, who is a reporter for the Kansas City radio station KKFI, showed slides of Ortega supporters coming to polling places loaded in the beds of dumptrucks and by any other means available to them.

"The enthusiasm was there," she said. "Those who voted for the Sandinistas voted very strongly for them. The other people that voted for UNO, a great majority of them, voted with their stomachs, but did not totally support UNO."

Neely said she expects the Sandinistas to work all the more harder to support the revolution. Not simply to gain power, she said, but to ensure there are no rollbacks by a fledgling UNO government.

"The revolution is not dead," she said.

Hochhauser discusses bills

By Elvyn Jones
Collegian Reporter

The parental notification bill passed on to the Senate by the Federal and State Affairs Committee may be too strong to gain approval in the House, Rep. Sheila Hochhauser, told a meeting of the National Organization for Women Thursday.

At the NOW meeting in the K-State Union, Hochhauser said the bill on the Senate floor was changed from the House version. For abortions performed for girls under 16, the bill would require a 72-hour prior notification of parent, stepparent or legal guardian in person or by a registered letter. The bill that passed out of the House required the notification of any blood family member over 21 or a member of the clergy, she said.

The Senate bill would make it a class A misdemeanor if physicians fail to meet these notification provisions, Hochhauser said. It also would provide for the recovery by the parents of punitive and actual damages from offending physicians.

"I think the senators are out of step with what the majority of Kansans feel," Hochhauser said.

Hochhauser also brought the NOW members up to date on other bills of concern to women. One bill concerning surrogate mothers has passed the Senate, she said. It would void any agreement made between a surrogate mother and the prospective family if any money was exchanged and would allow the biological mother to void any altruistic agreement.

It would also make it a class E misdemeanor to arrange a contract with a surrogate mother. Hochhauser said this would not survive a House vote. The final bill probably would make all contracts voidable and move to regulate surrogate births in the same manner as adoptions, she said.

Interviewing faux pas can be avoided

It's interviewing season! I've got ages and ages of school left, so I've been keeping busy laughing at all of you foolish people who think you belong in the real world. You're trotting off to interviews like lambs to slaughter while the rest of us peacefully prolong our collegiate careers to incredible lengths. Then you waste what's left of college waiting for those letterhead envelopes that will propel you into a world of working weekends and small paychecks. Me, I want letters after my name, and lots of them, so I'm a carefree college student for at least a few years yet. Actually I just haven't found a job that allows me to avoid scheduling anything until after noon, when I'm feeling my best.

But for those of you who really feel that it's time to stop sleeping through classes and start spending your days sitting at a desk doing whatever it is that people with desks do, the first thing you've got to do is get through that interview. Then you've got to get through another interview, and maybe another, and then you've got to get through life with a job and get a car and some kids and a house in the suburbs ... but first things first.

Some major interview no-nos — my dad always warned me that being able to bong a twelve pack without throwing up is not actually considered a job skill by most companies. But then he may have been wrong, so feel free to keep practicing. Just to be on the safe side, though, I'd leave it off the resume and save it until you're asked. You never know what an interviewer could be curious about.

Apparently some of the new interview questions going around will make you understand why they poisoned Socrates. I heard about one that goes something like this: "Give me an example of a time when you used facts and figures to bring people around to your point of view. Good. Now give me another. Good. Now tell me about a time when you were the only person in a group who held an opinion and you convinced everyone to go your way. Good. What were the results of that? Now give me another example." And so on. I'm not kidding here, but I wish I was. Hit the deck, boys, they're using real bullets.

That scares me so much that I'm going to give real advice, or at least real advice that I've gathered from various sources, because after all, what do I know about interviews? It would take me a week to think of the answer to one of those questions, and that wasn't the whole interview — just the beginning. No one can tell you how to answer those questions, so come up with some answers of your own in advance. What are your major achievements? Why did you join this club/fraternity/organization? What did you give to your college? Why do you want to work for our company? Of course, you have to be careful here that your answers don't sound canned. Prepare general responses, not memorized paragraphs.

A magazine published by the Wall Street Journal offered some other helpful hints, sighting disastrous interviews where interviewees forgot the interviewer's name, insulted their secretary, chewed gum or committed a number of other faux pas. The article suggested a polite, common-sense approach to interviewing. For example, never be late to an interview, and always take along a phone number to call the interviewer should unforeseen circumstances arise. I recommend finding the location ahead of time. Businesses tend to hide themselves in office parks that are specially designed so that their street address bears no relationship to their location and all the buildings are unlabeled and identical. This can make you very, very late. In fact, that's why they're designed that way. It's like a basic accounting class — it weeds people out. Anyway, never be late, but don't be so early that you look like you don't have a life, either. You're not begging for a job yet. You can always stay in school.

Other basics include being polite to the secretary. Many interviewers ask their secretaries to give an opinion on candidates. Besides, the object is to get the job and go to work in that office, so why antagonize any of your future coworkers? Also, don't smoke (even if the interviewer does), don't get too personal, use your deodorant (okay, some articles are a little insulting to the intelligence), don't use too much perfume, etc. So what? We could have learned all that from Miss Manners. But there were a few things that could be useful.

Discussing salary before you get an offer is a big no-no. I've read that over and over. I guess once you get the job, if they want to pay you more than you think you're worth, you can turn it down and go work at McDonalds. On the other hand, I've also read that now is the time to ask for more, to negotiate for benefits and confirm when your performance will be evaluated — in other words, when will you be considered for a raise. Unless you manage to be really offensive, they're not going to fire you for being ambitious.

The Wall Street Journal magazine article said that in most cases, thank-you notes were unnecessary, as most decisions are made on the day of the interview. Frankly, I'm not sure I'd want to risk a job on that advice, but there it is. I always picture the interviewer sitting with a red pen, the mail, and a list of the interviewees. "Okay, it's been a week and no thank-you, he's out, she wrote a nice one, whoa, here's one on Snoopy stationary, he's out ... " But I could be wrong.

But what about interviews with questions like the horrors I mentioned earlier? What if you find you're just not prepared? It's okay to give up. It's okay to say "I'm sorry, I'm not prepared and I am wasting your time" or even "This is ridiculous and I don't want to work for a company that interviews this way," and leave. It isn't a sign of failure. One interview does not a career make, and besides, there's always graduate school!

Exxon, Valdez captain not properly punished

Big corporations in this country are untouchable.

After two months of deliberation, a jury acquitted Exxon Valdez captain Joseph Hazelwood of being drunk and reckless in the Prince William Sound oil disaster. Hazelwood was found guilty of negligent discharge of oil.

But was Exxon found guilty of negligent discharge of oil, negligent destruction of the environment, or perhaps even reckless operation of a major corporation? No. Exxon escapes with not much more than a slap on the hand.

Hazelwood was tried, risked his freedom and lost his reputation because he was a scapegoat. Exxon virtually hid behind its employee in an effort to dodge attention and avoid the consequences of its accident, including the responsibility of cleaning up the mess.

Exxon's "mistake" ruined miles of beautiful beach and killed thousands of plants and animals. Exxon's "clean-up," didn't. Instead the clean-up effectively sterilized what was left of the beach. That was not the employee's fault, but the corporation's.

While there may have been many factors contributing to the Exxon disaster, Exxon was in charge of all of them. The loss of Prince William Sound was, therefore, Exxon's fault.

It is time corporations were made to take responsibility for everything that happens within them.

Wildcats end season better than expected

The season is now over, but it ended with a bang, not a whimper.

For the K-State men's basketball team, the 1989-90 campaign was a roller coaster ride that has finally come to a close.

There were thrilling victories over Missouri and Oklahoma in Bramlage Coliseum, but there were heartbreaking defeats against Fresno State, Colorado and Nebraska sprinkled in.

But when it came time for the NCAA tournament selection committee to put together its field of 64 for the annual run for the Final Four, the 'Cats were right there.

In making the tourney field, Coach Lon Kruger's squad made K-State basketball history. The Wildcats have now competed in four straight NCAA tourneys — a first for the men's team at K-State.

Kruger, who came to the University four years ago, has taken the program to unparalleled heights. Though the final 1989-90 record was just 17-15, the Wildcat mentor deserves a great deal of credit for holding the team together in the face of mounting criticism.

Following a disheartening three-game losing string, the first the Wildcats had suffered through in Kruger's tenure, K-State rebounded with the stirring win over Missouri. That game set the college basketball world on its ear.

Kruger would no doubt be quick to shift the credit for the team's resurgence to his seniors. The five — Reggie Britt, Steve Henson, Tony Massop, Lance Simmons and Billy Ray Smith — displayed individual flashes of brilliance and a concern for the overall good of the team possibly unequaled in recent memory.

The team, having lost to Xavier in the first round of the NAAs, may not have achieved the success on paper of the 1987-88 squad, which reached the final eight.

But this team did achieve a kind of success that is possibly every bit as important — they never quit believing in themselves, and they earned national recognition in the process.

The roller coaster ended at the top of the tracks.

...First in war, first in peace and last in the hearts of his Communists.

Report biased

Editor,

On March 20, the Collegian ran an Associated Press story on the post-election situation in Nicaragua that was fraught with inconsistencies, contradictions and clearly biased language.

Insisting that the Sandinistas "dominate" the scene in the country they are still legally in control of, the AP gave the impression that it is due to Sandinista intimidation that supporters of the victorious United Nicaraguan Opposition "have not held a public celebration." This comes despite information further on in the article on how the opposition's policies "are still unclear, as is the balance of power in (its) 14-party coalition."

UNO's splintered coalition, made up of parties ranging from ultra-left to ultra-right has never been able to come together on much of anything except a common opposition to the Sandinistas. Perhaps this is the real reason behind their inability to muster a vast display of public support since the elections.

Another major example of poor reporting in this article was the author's interpretation (read distortion) of President Daniel Ortega's warnings that violent civil strife could break out if the disbanding of the Contras is not handled carefully. The reporter characterizes Ortega as "issuing warnings of insurrection and civil war," then goes on to quote Ortega as saying, "We have to avoid being crushed by the tempest of civil war, popular insurrection, violence." Ortega clearly did not say what the reporter ascribed to him.

There are other points in the article that any reader familiar with the situation in Nicaragua will recognize as one-sided, sensationalistic distortions. Readers not familiar with the situation, if they take care in evaluating what is being said, will notice simple discrepancies of logic and loaded language.

I hope the editors responsible will take more care themselves in reading their wire reports before printing them as news.

Lift barriers

Editor,

It is time for the K-State Student Government to lift all barriers of investing in corporations doing business in South Africa. Now that President F.W. de Klerk has placed South Africa irreversibly on the road toward national reconciliation, equality and the complete dismantling of apartheid, sanctions no longer serve a purpose.

Ironically, those who are shouting loudest to maintain sanctions are not black South Africans. Instead, they are American lobby groups who fear the prospect of finding themselves out of work. Thousands of blacks bare the brunt of U.S. sanctions, losing their jobs and means of family survival, while sanctions lobbyists such as Randall Robinson of TransAfrica are getting filthy rich on this issue.

A recent Gallup poll revealed that 85 percent of blacks in South Africa are against sanctions. Furthermore, Chief Buthelezi, leader of the 7 million strong Zulu nation in South Africa, repeatedly stated during his visit with President Bush that "the vast majority of black South Africans reject sanctions and isolation of South Africa which minimizes black growth and maximizes black misery."

Those of us in America should not be led astray by self-serving lobby groups. Instead, we should listen to the voice of the South African people, black and white, who realize that it is not necessary to have their economy destroyed in order to promote changes that have already begun.

Disarming wrong

Editor,

In my opinion, the Bush administration is making a serious and perhaps fatal error in disarming our country. As I understand it, his plan is to get rid of 62 naval vessels, including two battleships, two aircraft carriers, 80,000 airmen and 100,000 soldiers. For some reason they seem to feel that if we disarm, the Soviet Union will also do so, presumably because they said they would. To the best of my knowledge, however, the U.S.S.R. has never signed a treaty it did not break. Its word would seem to be worthless.

Its actions in Europe, such as the tearing down of the Berlin Wall, may very well be nothing more than a charade to get the United States to lower its guard so that we may be attacked and destroyed by the most massive military force in the history of the world, or just as bad, blackmailed into surrendering by threat of annihilation if we do not surrender.

Instead of disarming, we should keep our military at full strength and implement the Strategic Defense Initiative, which in a matter of a few months would protect us from incoming missiles, and eliminate the nuclear threat from the U.S.S.R. or any other communist or terrorist country.

Why are we disarming? Does our President know something the common man does not know? Has he already decided to surrender to the communists? Are the American people simply pawns in the game? Does our government plan to comfortably merge the United States with the Soviet Union? Are the political, scholastic, industrial and banking elite attempting to make an end run around our national sovereignty, so that we will have a one world government, with THEM at the top? There must be some logical, though perhaps unpleasant, explanation. Otherwise it does not make sense!

Fine art program influences youth

By Angela Tholstrup
Collegian Reporter

Elementary and secondary school students are able to experience fine arts due in part to a program at McCain Auditorium.

"The people in the schools believe in it," said Richard Martin, director of McCain Auditorium. The goal of the program is to make the arts accessible to the young people.

Sometimes, performers go directly to the schools. At other times, the students are bused to the performances at McCain, Martin said.

Thursday morning, about 950 fourth- and fifth-grade students came to McCain to see the Theatreworks/USA presentation of "The Secret Garden."

The musical was based on the children's story by Frances Hodgson Burnett.

Nancy Thompson, director of elementary education for USD 383 said the performances are educational excursions for the students.

"It's important for the students to do their own productions," Martin said, "but seeing live performances is essential to raise questions and ideas."

The schools try to bring a variety of fine arts events to Manhattan, Thompson said. Some years the schools have a few big events, and other years they will have several smaller events.

In the past, artists-in-residence have worked in the schools for a few weeks or a semester, she said.

"We believe we are building an adult audience by getting children involved in the fine arts," Thompson said.

Students to lobby at State Capitol

By Chris Koger
Government Editor

Student Governing Association lobby team and cabinet members, student senators, Associated Students of Kansas members and other students will participate in K-State's Student Lobby Day in Topeka Monday.

Campus ASK Director Todd Heitschmidt said "basically it's going to be a bunch of students talking to legislators to tell them what's going on here — there will be no hard-sell lobbying."

About 65 students are expected to attend the effort in the Capitol, where they plan to have short, informal meetings with legislators, Heitschmidt said.

"The main thing is we're reaching a critical time in the budget process, and the focus is on the university's budget," said Mark Tallman, executive director for ASK.

Tallman said the House and Senate committee higher education budget recommendations will probably be brought up on the House floor Monday, and it may be a week or two before the final budget is voted on.

The recommendations fall substantially short of the budget the Board of Regents' recommended and ASK endorsed.

The regents requested an increase of about $46.1 million, the Senate recommended $19.9 million and the House recommended $14.9 million. Tallman said it is critical to convince House representatives to raise the number closer to that of the Senate.

"The important thing about Monday is to remind the legislators that the issue is still important and ask them to support the Senate's higher budget," he said. "The closer they are, the better chance there is that the higher budget will be accepted."

Tallman said the higher Senate proposal is due to the Senate's Assessment and Taxation Committee's acceptance of a proposed cigarette tax that will fund higher education. The tax bill calls for a 5-cent tax on packs of cigarettes, and a 5 percent tax on all other tobacco products. ASK has not formally endorsed the tax, Tallman said, but the organization encourages any forms of budget enhancements for state higher education.

UConn, Hogs, Texas, Duke move on

Huskies' last-second shot dooms Clemson | Seeded Arkansas cruises past Tar Heels

By The Associated Press

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Tate George took a length-of-the-court pass with one second left and hit a 12-foot jumper as Connecticut, after blowing a 19-point lead, stunned Clemson 71-70 Thursday night and advanced to the East Regional final of the NCAA tournament.

Clemson, which overcame a 19-point deficit against La Salle in the second round, seemed ready to pull off another amazing come-from-behind victory after David Young's 3-pointer gave the Tigers a 70-69 lead with 11 seconds left.

George then missed a jumper and Clemson's Sean Tyson grabbed the rebound and was fouled with 1.6 seconds remaining. But Tyson missed the front end of a one-and-one and Connecticut rebounded and called time with exactly one second left.

Scott Burrell, a pitcher who was the No. 1 pick by the Seattle Mariners last year, then threw a football pass from his own baseline to George, who caught the ball on the right side of the basket, turned around and swished the winning shot.

Replays showed that George released the ball just before the red light that signals the end of the game went off and before the horn sounded. Clemson's players, some of whom fell to the floor in shock, did not argue over George's shot.

Third-ranked Connecticut (31-5), whose only previous regional final was 1964, will play the winner of the Duke-UCLA game on Saturday in Dallas. No. 17 Clemson finished 26-9.

But until the final shot, it appeared the Huskies would lose for the first time this season after holding a half-time lead. UConn is now 30-0 after leading at the half.

No. 15 Duke 90, UCLA 81
Phil Henderson scored 28 points, including six 3-pointers, and sparked a decisive second-half run as Duke continued its Meadowlands mastery by beating UCLA 90-81 Thursday night and moving into East Regional final for the fourth time in five years.

The 15th-ranked Blue Devils (27-8), who won regionals here in 1986, '88 and '89, will play Connecticut on Saturday. The Huskies (31-5) beat Clemson 71-70 on a last-second shot by Tate George.

UCLA, which trailed by as many as 11 points in the first half, rallied to take the lead 66-65 on a 3-pointer by Tracy Murray with 7:53 left.

But with foul-plagued Duke trailing 68-67, Henderson hit his final 3-pointer to start a 15-5 run that put the Blue Devils ahead to stay 82-73.

UCLA, playing in its first regional semifinal since 1980, finished 22-11.

Christian Laettner, who played poorly in Duke's first two games of the tournament, finished with 24 points despite foul trouble in the second half. Alaa Abdelnaby, who also played with four fouls in the second half, added 14 points and Bobby Hurley had 12.

Don MacLean led UCLA with 21 points. Gerald Madkins added 17 and Trevor Wilson had 16.

Duke, now 10-1 at the Meadowlands, took a 72-68 lead before Madkins hit a 3-pointer to cut the margin to one with 5:05 left.

UCLA rallied early in the second half with an 8-0 run that made it 49-48.

By The Associated Press

DALLAS — Lee Mayberry's 3-point shooting and the inside play of Oliver Miller helped seventh-ranked Arkansas pull away from North Carolina in the second half and rout the Tar Heels 96-73 in a Midwest Regional semifinal game Thursday night.

Arkansas (29-4), seeded fourth, will play Saturday in the regional final against the winner of Thursday's late game between sixth-seeded Xavier and No. 10 seed Texas.

Eighth-seeded North Carolina, which was playing in the round of 16 for the 10 straight year and got there by upsetting top-ranked Oklahoma, ended its season 21-13.

The Tar Heels used an 11-1 run early in the second half to turn a 41-34 deficit into a 45-42 lead. Fox's dunk off a turnover made it 47-44, and they matched it moments later when Fox made a shot inside.

But with the score tied at 54, Mayberry made a 3-pointer. After a free throw by George Lynch, Arkansas got two more 3-pointers from Mayberry and one from Todd Day in just over a minute to take a 66-55 lead with 8:17 left. Mayberry finished with 19.

North Carolina pulled within 68-61 on a 3-pointer by Fox with 7:29 to play, but a 10-2 run clinched it. Miller helped Arkansas pull away by scoring 13 points in the final 6½ minutes. He finished with 19, 15 in the second half.

Fox, the Tar Heels' leading scorer at 16 points per game, went scoreless in the first half and finished with nine. Scott Williams had 20 for North Carolina.

Texas 102, Xavier 89

Lance Blanks scored 26 of his 28 points in the second half, triggering a Texas rally from a 16-point deficit to a 102-89 victory over Xavier of Ohio Thursday night, setting up an all-Southwest Conference final in the NCAA Midwest Regional.

Texas (24-8) will play third-seeded Arkansas (29-4) in the regional finals at Reunion Arena on Saturday. No. 7 Arkansas defeated North Carolina 96-73 in the first semifinal game.

It is the first time that two Southwest Conference teams have advanced to the final eight in an NCAA tournament. Arkansas beat Texas twice during the regular season.

Xavier finished 28-5, the winningest season in the school's history.

Blanks is the third member of the Texas three-guard "BMW" club which includes Joey Wright and Travis Mays. Wright scored 26 points and Mays had 32.

Derek Strong had 27 points for sixth-seeded Xavier and Tyrone Hill added 22.

Texas overcame a 16-point Xavier lead in the second half and went ahead 75-74 on Blanks' steal and dunk off a wayward Xavier inbound pass with 9:10 to play.

Blanks led Texas on a 15-2 run that made it 90-79 with 2:29 left. He had two steals and three baskets during the Texas point stampede. After a Xavier basket, he hit two free throws to make it 92-81.

Xavier led 53-41 at halftime and built the margin to 16 points with two straight buckets to start the second half.

Lacrosse squad to play host to KU

By The Collegian Staff

The first-year K-State lacrosse club will play host to its first home game of the season at 2 p.m. Saturday at Memorial Stadium. Their opponent will be the University of Kansas.

"I'm looking forward to a real fast and hard-hitting game," club founder Dave McConnell said.

Since the lacrosse club played its first game and suffered a close loss to KU March 3, McConnell has been helping teach the 30 team members basic skills.

McConnell said the second game was a come-together for the K-State team.

"KU was amazed at our play," he said.

"I was really pleased with their play against KU," said Don Tillar, K-State lacrosse coach and an officer at Fort Riley. "Probably, for 90 percent of them, that was the first time they saw an actual game."

"The guys have unlimited potential. They just need experience. Coach Pat O'Connor and I are just trying to give them some of our knowledge."

Coach O'Connor is also stationed at Fort Riley. He and Tillar have three years of experience with NCAA lacrosse. They played at the national tournament during their time at Army in West Point, N.Y.

Since K-State's first meeting against KU, intense practices have concentrated on getting possession of ground balls, playing man-to-man, and working on passing and catching, Tillar said.

Tillar said he emphasized the importance of building basic passing and catching skills.

"The strongest teams are great at passing and catching," he said.

McConnell said with the exception of two members who are out with knee injuries, the entire team will have the opportunity to play.

"About 30 guys are very dedicated, and we try to play all of them during a game to give equal time, and build experience and interest," Tillar said. "The guys are getting very excited and that's what we want."

Thursday evening the lacrosse club played an inter-squad scrimmage to get it ready for Saturday.

"It gives them a chance to get out and apply what they've learned," McConnell said.

The K-State football team is loaning the lacrosse players jerseys for Saturday's game, and the baseball team is providing chalk to mark the sidelines, McConnell said.

David Mayes/Staff

Jim Meskill looks to pass under close pressure from Matt Porreca during lacrosse practice Thursday afternoon at Memorial Stadium. The squad was preparing for its first home game against Kansas.

Baseball team to face Regis

By The Collegian Staff

After 10 consecutive road contests, the Wildcat baseball team finally returns home today for a 2 p.m. contest against Regis College at Frank Myers Field.

The road was not kind to the squad, which limped through the 10-game stretch with a 2-8 mark. The team's overall record currently stands at 8-11, though five of the losses have been either by one run or in extra innings.

The meeting with Regis will be the first ever for K-State. Regis is in Denver and has an enrollment of 1,060. The school is the second-smallest school the Wildcats will compete against this spring. Next Wednesday's opponent, Tarkio, is the smallest.

The Rangers are coached by Tom Dedin and had a 15-33 record in 1989. The Rangers have 15 returning lettermen.

K-State has been led offensively by junior college transfers Scott Stroth and L.J. Twyner. Both are battling for the team lead in doubles.

On the mound, staff ace David Hierholzer has gone 31 straight innings without allowing an earned run. His ERA is 0.51. Hierholzer needs just eight strikeouts to tie major leaguer Ted Power for fifth on the all-time K-State list with 148. If he gains another win, he'll catch Nick Horner and Wally Bramlage at sixth on the all-time victory list with 12.

In the bullpen, Scott Scoville has chalked up saves in three of the eight Wildcat wins. His earned run average is 1.69.

On Saturday, the team will be in Macomb, Ill., for the opening of a three-game weekend series with the Western Illinois Leathernecks. The teams will play a doubleheader Saturday and a single game Sunday.

Western Illinois is coached by Dick Pawlow, and finished 20-18 in 1989. The Leathernecks return 10 lettermen, and trail K-State 1-0 in the all-time series between the schools.

Club teams to compete

By The Collegian Staff

In addition to the K-State lacrosse team playing its first-ever home game Saturday in Memorial Stadium, the rest of the University's club sports are also getting into full swing.

The rugby football club takes a 1-2 record into its match-up with Columbia at Swope Park in Kansas City, Mo., Saturday at 1:30 p.m. The contest will be a key Merit Table game for the K-State rugbys, especially since the club's record isn't quite where it was expected to be at this point.

The K-State crew will be rowing in a regatta at Wichita in preparation for its big meet at St. Louis at the end of the month. The varsity men's heavyweight squad has also been invited to the San Diego Crew Classic March 31.

The K-State women's soccer team will get its Big Eight season into full swing this weekend with a game at Oklahoma State in Stillwater Saturday and at Oklahoma in Norman Sunday, while the men's soccer team will match-up against Wichita State Saturday in Wichita.

English students publish magazine

By Shannan Seely
Collegian Reporter

Touchstone literary magazine allows the work of undergraduate and graduate students in English to be taken seriously in the public eye.

Elizabeth Dodd, assistant professor of English said the 17-member student staff works together to produce the only annual student-run literary magazine at the University. As a first-year adviser, Dodd said she has had a small role.

"Touchstone is a student team project and the enthusiasm is up for it," said Anita Leverich, co-editor and graduate student in English.

The magazine has been published for 30 years, Leverich said.

Laurie McKinnon, co-editor and a graduate student in English, said the magazine is published during the fall semester. Copies are available from the writers, the English department and in the K-State Union.

"Although having a literary magazine is pretty typical of most English departments, a long range goal for K-State is to compete with other schools in national contests," Leverich said.

The challenge is finding enough funds to do it, especially because of this year's budget cuts, she said.

The English department budgets $100 for a short-story and poetry contest open to undergraduate students, she said. The deadline for this year's contest is March 31.

"Only University undergraduates are eligible to win the awards in each of the two categories," McKinnon said. "The entries are judged by the editors. We do remove the names from the entries before judging to ensure impartiality."

The staff has to raise money for most of the printing, advertising and other production costs on their own, Leverich said.

Any student may submit material to the magazine, McKinnon said. A box for submissions to Touchstone is located in Dennison 122.

Former editors of Touchstone have praised the benefits of the experiences in fund-raising and publishing responsibilities.

Jim Stein, a Manhattan resident and former Touchstone editor, said the magazine strongly affected his career goals.

"I was an older student, 33 years of age, but I didn't know what I wanted to do, like any freshman," Stein said.

Stein enrolled in an introduction to creative writing course and submitted his first story to the 1983 Touchstone undergraduate short-story and poetry contest.

Stein won the contest and continued to write for the magazine. He eventually became editor of Touchstone.

"On the whole, I really appreciated what goes into a story," he said. "Out of 200 stories submitted in a year, we selected only two or three for publication."

"I also gained insight on the ways — pleasantly and unpleasantly — to raise funding for the magazine," Stein said.

Stein said the staff noticed different themes throughout the years.

"In the '60s, the themes of the writing was flower power, peace and unity," he said. "In the '80s, the themes were serious social issues."

"My wife also won the contest with the first poem she wrote in 1987," he said.

LESSONS FROM A SCIENTIST
by Dan Walter

George Washington Carver was gifted in many ways. He was a great horticulturalist, an effective educator, and a brilliant scientist. He unlocked the secrets of the peanut plant in a way that changed the lives and fortunes of thousands of farmers around the world. He overcame incredible social barriers and racial bigotry in his rise to the top of the scientific world. And, perhaps most amazing, George Washington Carver maintained a very genuine spirit of humility in regard to all his accomplishments. Though he had earned the respect and appreciation of people around the world, Carver chose to live a simple life, shunning many of the luxuries of his day.

What was the secret of this remarkable man? He was often heard to say, "The Lord has guided me. He has shown me the way, just as He will show everyone who turns to Him." George Washington Carver believed that what the Bible said was true, and that Jesus Christ had come to earth to be the Savior of all mankind. Carver declared, "Without my Savior, I am nothing."

As with many of the great scientists, both in the past and the present, Carver believed that God created the heavens and the earth, along with each and every person on our planet. He once said, "Everything we have in our world of science springs from the world God has created for us. It is God's creation, His way of things. Science is simply a study of God's creations."

The same Lord who guided George Washington Carver is patiently waiting to guide each of us today. We must simply turn to Him, trust in Him, and let Him have His way in our hearts and lives.

think we'll meet the criteria from the information that I have."
In his report to the regents, Jake White, University of Kansas student body president, said the Students' Advisory Committee was opposed to any type of a restricted fee because it would set a dangerous precedent of more restricted fees.

"There would be no end to departments that could claim to be underfunded," White said.
Wefald said at the Council of Presidents breakfast Wednesday morning that he felt there was student support for the engineering fee, and that a precedent wouldn't be set.

"Student leaders are usually opposed to restricted fees," he said. "It's historic, and it's generic. The engineering students see the need and the engineering faculty see the need."
Johnson said he has not decided what his personal opinion is, but that not all of the students he has talked to are 100 percent behind the restricted fees.

"Even though President Wefald said we (students) are behind it," he said. "I've talked to some engineering senators and other student body presidents who say otherwise."
"KU doesn't support it at all," Johnson said.

The contestants have been rehearsing weekly for about a month, Arnold said. Rehearsals allow them to improve in some areas and become more comfortable with what they are doing.

"When we have the rehearsals, they bring in mock interview people who critique us and give us pointers," Arnold said. "There are also people who listen or watch our talent, critique it and show us ways to improve. That is really a nice part of the pageant."

O'Kane became involved with the pageant 21 years ago. She was in a Miss America pageant in Hutchinson in 1969.
"It was a significant impact on my life," O'Kane said. "I felt I was somebody. Some people think the pageant is crazy, but it has given me self-confidence."

The winner of the pageant will be eligible to compete in the Miss Kansas pageant June 5-10 in Pratt.

Farrell ranked last in Big 8

Library in Crisis

By Melissa Simpson
Staff Reporter

Not only is Farrell Library ranked last in the Big Eight, it is also the only conference library that is not one of the 107 members of the Association of Research Libraries. "Seven of the Big Eight institution libraries are recorded each year in the Association of Research Libraries data table, which consists of 26 elements," said Brice Hobrock, dean of libraries. "K-State is not a member of ARL. We belong to the Association of College Research Libraries."

The ACRL consists of the 107 top libraries plus the next 100. Farrell is ranked No. 13 in the next 100 in ACRL's data and No. 8 in the Big Eight.

ARL, however, ranks Farrell 19th on a separate listing of non-ARL members, making it the 126th academic library in the United States and Canada.

John Johnson, chairman for reference and informational services,

See related stories/Pages 6,7 said accreditation with the ARL is important when University officials apply for certain research grants, especially those pertaining to graduate programs. ARL membership is also prestigious and helpful when recruiting faculty and graduate students, he said.

Because Farrell isn't a member of ARL, many research grants are difficult or impossible to attain, Johnson said.

Hobrock said he knows of several institutional grants that were rejected or denied because of insufficient library resources. And, he said, deans have told him the University has lost teaching faculty for the same reason.

ARL membership standards provide the best basis for demonstrating research library adequacy, Hobrock said. To become a member of ARL, the University must meet its minimum requirements for four consecutive years and be invited into membership.

Important parameters considered when libraries are ranked every April are the total number of volumes in the library, the number of volumes added, the number of subscriptions purchased, the number of full-time staff members and the

University to hire Drake coach Yow

By Chris Hays
Sports Editor

Athletic Director Steve Miller is expected to announce at a press conference Tuesday that Drake University's Susan Yow will be taking over as the Lady Cats head coach.

Susan Yow

Tuesday at 9:30 a.m. in the Bramlage Coliseum Legends Room, Interim Coach Gaye Griffin's fate with the Lady Cats will become official, thus clearing up the head coaching vacancy that Matilda Mossman left when she unexpectedly resigned Dec. 5.

Yow said she would make no comment on the matter, but Griffin said Sunday that she had met with the players on Friday and told them, "there are going to be changes in life."

Griffin, who guided the Lady Cats to a second-place finish in both the Big Eight regular season and conference tournament and a 17-8 record after Mossman's departure, also said that she had cleared her things out of her Bramlage Coliseum office by Sunday afternoon.

Griffin said she has several options as far as what she will do in her next career move.

Players, who learned of Yow's hiring from Griffin, were immediately surprised at the news and were somewhat disgruntled that only one player, freshman Kelly Moylan, was on the selection committee.

Senior Rita Matteucci, however, said that any reaction should probably be read as more emotional than anything else right now.

Fire kills 87 in Bronx club

Man charged with arson; bar lacked exits, sprinklers

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Fire raced through an illegal social club early Sunday and turned a packed dance floor into a deathtrap of smoke and flame that killed 87.

A man who allegedly had earlier fought with a club worker was charged with arson and murder in connection with the blaze.

The fire, the nation's worst in 13 years, tore through the Happy Land club, which authorities said lacked proper exits and other safeguards.

The 3:40 a.m. fire killed 61 men and 26 women, most of them Honduran and Dominican immigrants. Most were found on the second floor.

"People literally were stacked on top of each other," said Anthony De Vita, the Fire Department's command chief. "It was a firetrap," he said of the two-story building in an impoverished neighborhood near the Bronx Zoo.

Some of the victims broke a hole through a wall to an adjoining hall in a desperate attempt to save their lives, said Red Cross worker Margaret Glugover.

Julio Gonzalez, 36, was charged with arson and murder in the case, said Lt. Raymond O'Donnell, a police spokesman. The district attorney's office later would determine how many counts Gonzalez would be charged.

"We believe the motive in this case was the result of a dispute he had with a female employee of the club," Police Commissioner Lee Brown said at a City Hall news conference Sunday evening.

Gonzalez emigrated in 1980 from Cuba during the Mariel boatlift that brought 125,000 Cubans to the United States.

Police said Gonzalez went into the club about 3 a.m. and began arguing with his former girlfriend, who sold tickets near the entrance.

"He's trying to talk her into making up, she's saying 'Leave me alone,'" said O'Donnell.

A club bouncer evicted the man half an hour later, and police alleged he returned and started the fire near the entrance.

The woman employee left before the fire, Brown said.

At least two women and one man — the disc jockey — survived, Brown said.

Most of the dead were believed to have suffocated from the thick smoke, which billowed hundreds of feet, but some were trampled, said Lynn Schulman, an Emergency Medical Service spokeswoman.

After viewing the bodies, Mayor David Dinkins called the scene graphic and sad.

Dinkins said an order to vacate the club was issued in November 1988 because the club lacked proper sprinkling systems, exits, emergency lighting and signs. City records show orders were delivered to the club July 24 and again Nov. 1, Dinkins said.

"I don't know what subsequent

Dr. Roger Fingland, associate professor of veterinary surgery and medicine, assisted by Bob Thayer, senior in veterinary medicine, check on the effects of a sedative on Big Boy, a Siberian Tiger admitted for tests Friday afternoon at the Veterinary Medicine Complex.

Tiger receives X-rays, checkup

Students gain opportunities by working on exotic animal

By Clinton Wolf
Collegian Reporter

Big Boy, an 18-month-old male Siberian tiger operated on at the College of Veterinary Medicine early in December, returned to K-State Friday afternoon.

After sedating Big Boy, veterinary medicine students and staff performed an X-ray examination, to check the tiger's progress since his surgery. Although the tiger growled and moved during part of the examination, there were no complications.

Dr. Roger Fingland, the veterinarian overseeing the case, said Big Boy had previously suffered from malnutrition.

"Finally he's getting the diet that he needs," Fingland said after comparing Friday's X-rays with those taken in December. "He's much improved."

Fingland said Big Boy had previously been fed raw meat by his owner, which resulted in a metabolic bone disease, or soft bones. The surgery was performed to clear out stool material that was blocked when the tiger's pelvis collapsed.

"We counseled the owner on proper diet," Fingland said. "He's doing very, very well."

X-rays taken Friday were of the tiger's pelvis as well as of his right rear leg, which Fingland said had been broken long before December's surgery. The leg had not healed properly due to a lack of calcium.

The X-rays showed the breaks had healed and that the pelvis had a more normal shape. Also, the bones appeared whiter in the X-rays, an indication of a higher calcium level, Fingland said. However, the X-rays showed Big Boy's leg bones are still curved.

"He'll be like this forever," Fingland said, looking at the X-rays. "He's healed very nicely, though." Blood tests were taken to determine whether the tiger had a higher calcium level as a result of the changed diet.

Ed Rueve, fourth year student in veterinary medicine who has been caring for the tiger, said that since the surgery Big Boy has been fed a special feed ration for large cats in captivity.

Ballots cast in Hungary

BUDAPEST, Hungary (AP) — Hungarians voted Sunday in their first free elections after 43 years of Communist rule, and early results indicated the party would lose despite taking a lead role in democratic reforms.

"We will be an opposition party," said Rezsoe Nyers, chairman of the Socialist Party, which was created by reformers to replace the old Communist Party. "This, to use a religious term, will be penance for the party."

"We will come through it, and we will be strong," he added. In Hungary, they competed with 11 other national parties for parliament seats. No party held a clear lead in the early returns.

Election results trickled in at election commission headquarters in the gothic Parliament building and at the election studio of state television.

Airstrips ordered destroyed

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — President Fernando Collor de Mello ordered the destruction of about 100 clandestine Amazon jungle airstrips to keep thousands of gold miners from returning to land reserved for Indians.

"Dynamite them, and be fast about it," the new president told federal police chief Romeu Tuma on Saturday while visiting Roraima state in the northwest Amazon.

During the trip, his first since taking office March 15, Collor also visited an Indian village and flew over mining camps ordered shut by former President Jose Sarney.

The order to destroy the airstrips was given to keep an estimated 40,000 miners from returning to lands owned by the Yanomami Indians, the world's largest remaining primitive tribe.

Last week, the government reported the end of an 80-day operation to force miners off Indian lands and onto three mining reserves.

Hospital releases Atwater

WASHINGTON (AP) — Republican National Chairman Lee Atwater was released from the hospital Sunday after physicians adjusted the medication he is taking for a brain tumor, an aide said.

Atwater, 39, underwent a radiation treatment Saturday at George Washington University Hospital after being admitted on Friday, complaining of queasiness, said Leslie Goodman, a spokeswoman for the Republican National Committee.

Alarm failed in sinking

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — Survivors of a vessel that listed and quickly sank in the icy Bering Sea say an alarm failed to sound and may have cost some of the nine missing crewmen their lives, an investigator said Sunday.

"At least two of the crew I interviewed said they felt that the delay didn't allow people to search for survival gear or to get to the deck" before the fish-processing ship Aleutian Enterprise rolled and sank within minutes of listing to port Thursday, said Alaska State Trooper Robert Stevenson.

Two crew members said they'd been given little or no instruction in using flotation suits designed to protect against the arctic waters.

Stevenson, stationed at Dutch Harbor about 800 miles southwest of Anchorage, said several survivors told him the alarm system had not worked for months. Stevenson interviewed 21 of the 22 survivors.

The nine people from the Seattle-based trawler are missing and presumed drowned.

Dan Roberts, executive vice president of Arctic Alaska Fisheries Corp., the company that operates the vessel, said Saturday he didn't know why the alarm might have failed to sound or have been inoperable. Company officials did not return telephone messages left Sunday with a secretary.

Meatpacking plants cut back

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — A shortage of cattle ready for slaughter is putting a squeeze on Midwestern meatpacking plants, officials say.

Large meatpackers have cut hours at their slaughter plants and at least one has furloughed workers because of the short cattle supply and relatively high prices for cattle.

"It's a very cyclical business," said Gene Meakins, vice president of public relations for the ConAgra Red Meat Cos.

Among the four companies surveyed by the Omaha World-Herald — Excel, ConAgra, IBP and BeefAmerica — only BeefAmerica has laid off workers as a direct result of tight cattle supplies.

Bill Hughes, BeefAmerica executive vice president, said the company has laid off 100 of the 120 employees at its LeMars, Iowa, beef slaughter plant.

Although the layoffs were termed temporary, the workers have been off the job more than seven weeks.

"We will start that plant when the cattle supply in that area is sufficient enough that we can operate," Hughes said.

Student exhibits art

Klopp uses world travel experiences for work content

By Shannan Seely
Collegian Reporter

Laurie Klopp has traveled throughout the world, exploring the world of art.

Klopp, graduate student in fine arts, earned her bachelor's degree in art education at Augustana College in Sioux Falls, S.D.

Her work will be on display at the "Prints and Drawings" exhibition in the K-State Union Art Gallery through April 6.

As an undergraduate, Klopp studied art history for a semester at Oxford University, in England.

She visited major art museums in England, Holland, France, Spain and Italy for six weeks during her stay.

"When I was there, I saw a show of impressionist drawings at the Ashmolean Museum and liked the artwork on paper more than the oil on canvas," she said. "I love the texture of paper."

Besides the Oxford experience, personal sketchbooks, theatrical shows and fictional literature also influence her work.

Klopp came to K-State in 1987 to work with a professor she had admired.

"I came here to work under Jim Munce, a printmaker. In South Dakota, I had seen his work and thought he was truly great," Klopp said.

For several years, Klopp has exhibited on regional, national and international levels.

She had a one-person exhibit of 30 etchings, lithographs and drawings at Oxford Central Library in Oxford, England.

Klopp has also exhibited in many group shows. She recently displayed her work in "Hot Off the Press," an invitational group show at the Artist en Masse Gallery in Lawrence.

"My artwork usually has two themes, the figure and the interpretation of events and actions," Klopp said. "It's ambiguous, you don't know immediately what's going on and I leave you, the viewer, to decide."

Klopp said the images in the drawings are a unique part of her work.

"My images are primarily autobiographical responses to places I have been, people I have known and events I have witnessed," Klopp said.

Klopp selects the art in the exhibition after advice from K-State faculty. The paintings are various sizes, from 5-foot drawings to 3-inch drawings. Other work includes hanging spheres, lithographs and etchings.

"Drawings are what I love," she said. "They are really personal to me."

One etching, called "The Conversation," depicts two people sitting near the ocean and wearing beak masks.

Klopp said the title contradicts what the etching represents.

"It intrigues me...the beaks mask off who we are, cutting off conversation and limiting interaction," she said.

Some artists work to achieve awards when the artwork is finished. Klopp said she gains satisfaction from the process of working and creating art, and not necessarily the finished product.

The time when the pieces of art "enter the world and venture out" to the public is exciting, she said.

Brad Camp/Staff

Teresa Schmidt, assistant professor of art, and Laurie Klopp, graduate student in fine arts, work on hanging pieces of Klopp's "Prints and Drawings" exhibition in the K-State Union Art Gallery Sunday.

Soviet troops occupy Lithuanian buildings

By The Associated Press

VILNIUS, U.S.S.R. — Soviet military commanders Sunday sent soldiers with automatic weapons to occupy two Communist Party schools in Lithuania but later agreed to discuss building security with the breakaway republic.

It was the latest escalation in the war of nerves between the Kremlin and the leadership of this Baltic republic, which declared itself independent March 11.

The commander of all Soviet ground forces, Gen. Valentin Varennikov, accused independence leaders of plotting to arrest Communists and send them to prison.

Lithuanian President Vytautas Landsbergis said he talked twice on the telephone with Varennikov, whose presence in Vilnius was a sign of Moscow's concern with the situation in the small Baltic republic. The general reportedly said no more buildings would be taken overnight but made no promises beyond that.

The soldiers occupied Lithuania's Institute of Marxism-Leninism and the Higher Party School.

The republic's deputy premier, Romualdas Ozolas, said earlier he feared Soviet forces might storm Lithuania's legislative headquarters.

Landsbergis asked for a meeting to receive an explanation about the building seizures, and Varennikov sent four officers to the Lithuanian parliament building.

In a brief news conference afterward, Landsbergis quoted the officers as telling him the buildings had been seized at the request of Communist Party members who remain loyal to Moscow.

"We expressed surprise and astonishment that the military can occupy buildings at the request of a political organization, and we asked if such requests come from other organizations whether they will fulfill them,"

Landsbergis said. "We did not receive a concrete answer."

Although Varennikov made no promises not to seize more buildings Monday, Landsbergis said the two sides agreed to form a joint committee on control of such buildings. More meetings on the issue were set for Monday morning, he said.

Franciskas Benicius, a director of the Higher Party School, said 30 soldiers who arrived there told him they were sent to guard the building.

"I asked, 'What are you protecting it from?' and they didn't know," he said.

The school is used by both the Lithuanian Communist Party that has broken with Moscow and the smaller group that remains loyal. Officials expected the school to open Monday despite the soldiers' presence.

There was no indication the Soviet army was trying to round up hundreds of Lithuanians who deserted and returned home after independence was declared March 11. A deadline of Saturday had been set for their return.

For days, as President Mikhail Gorbachev and other Moscow officials have squeezed the defiant Baltic state, official media reports have criticized a draft bill in Lithuania's new Parliament that they say could mean imprisonment for those who speak out against independence.

Gen. Valentin Varennikov, commander of Soviet ground forces, said workers he met with at a Vilnius electronics factory were convinced that Sajudis is trying to create in the republic a real dictatorship.

Sajudis is the grassroots political movement that has pressed for Lithuanian independence from the Soviet Union. Its candidates won an absolute majority in the Parliament that declared independence.

Homosexuality, rape not synonymous

In recent letters to the editors, John Meyer and Brent Pomeroy both speak of homosexuality as equivalent to rape. This is a classic example of men perpetuating male supremacy through reversal. It is heterosexism that fosters and supports rapist-ethics.

Get it right: Homosexuality is one element of a continuum of expression of love; Rape is an expression of hate that exists on a continuum of sexualized violence: sexism, heterosexism, racism, religious intolerance, ageism, ableism and classism are intertwined systems of hatred.

Researchers Mary Koss and Neil Malamuth have shown that we live in a society in which one in twelve men admit to having raped, one in three men would rape if they thought they could get away with it, and one of two men approve of rape in certain circumstances. It is no coincidence that the first question people ask about the group called Men Against Rape is "Is everyone gay?" This unconscious acknowledgement — "What heterosexual male would be against rape?" — reveals how well people actually know men's attitudes, which are quantifiably confirmed by the above statistics. You see, for a man to refuse to dominate, humiliate and control women is to step outside of the behavioral system called "masculinity."

The characteristics that our society associates with being a "normal" male — in control, dominant, unemotional, aggressive, strong, angry, powerful and so on — are the characteristics of rapists. By what method does society teach males to embrace these behaviors? Homophobia. The tactic is to control boys at puberty by ostracizing them at a time when it feels vital to conform. Those boys who shirk from their "responsibility" to dominate are taunted with the name "sissy." Those having an affinity for the caring and nurturing that are central to what a "normal" female is supposed to be are called "faggots." A male who is sexually attracted to females is still labeled "queer" if he treats them with compassion and respect. You see, it is necessary for men to learn to despise anything within them that reflects "female" gender characteristics if they are to be "real" men. As John Stolenberg says about both sexism and racism, it is necessary to dis-identify from a group of people if you wish to oppress them. Also, by making erotic love between men off limits, it is easier to focus sexualized violence away from men. Therefore, to stop rape it is necessary to stop heterosexism and homophobia.

In the summer of 1986, U.S. Attorney General Edwin Meese (a.k.a. The Pig) confiscated a $581,621 grant to the National Coalition Against Domestic Violence on the grounds that shelters for battered women were run by lesbians and subverted the "traditional family." Then by a strange coincidence, in March of 1987, Meese awarded a $622,905 "Domestic Violence" grant to the Task Force on Families in Crisis, an organization with no experience in the field that consists mainly of members of Phyllis Schlafly's homophobic organization, The

Jack Straton

GUEST COLUMNIST

Eagle Forum. If by the "traditional family" Meese meant the one in two families in which the wife is battered, if he meant the one in 12 families containing severe violence leading to more medical treatment for women than rapes, muggings and auto accidents combined, or if he meant the 33 percent of all women murdered last year who were killed by their husbands or partners, then Meese is correct. Meese's message is clear: to be against domination, humiliation and control of women is to be homosexual.

The Christian right wing demands that women be subservient to men in all facets of their lives. In this system in which male sexuality means to dominate and control (ever hear of the "missionary position?") — a system in which men are obviously the ones valued — it is "repulsive to the sight of God" for a man to do to a man the things he is "supposed to do" to a woman. Likewise, to be a lesbian is to be a woman beyond day-to-day control by men and therefore despised and feared by the Christian right wing.

It is interesting to note that no word equivalent to our definition of the word homosexual — an understanding that some people have a lifelong, constitutional orientation toward their own sex — appears in any of the original biblical texts written in Hebrew, Greek, Syriac or Aramaic. The Greek words malakos (1 Corinthians 6:9 and 1 Timothy 1:10), which was unanimously understood well into the 20th century by religious scholars to mean "masturbation," and arsenokoites, which was understood to mean "male prostitute," have been blatantly mistranslated into the 19th century English word homosexual in many editions of the Bible. Thus the biblical injunction against the exploitation of both male and female persons as prostitutes has been twisted by modern bigots to condemn the love of one human being for another of the same sex.

Throughout the Middle Ages, Christian literature often celebrated, sometimes using distinctly erotic overtones, the love relationships between same-sex pairs such as David and Jonathan, and Ruth and Naomi. In fact, the first church council to rule against homosexual acts was Lateran III, in 1179, which also imposed sanctions against moneylenders, Muslims and Jews.

Heterosexism is the system of domination, humiliation and control that turns a blind eye to gay-bashing and murder by gangs of college men or by police squads. It is not necessary for all heterosexuals to brutalize homosexuals for this oppression to continue.

Punks, preachers, police and politicians do this effectively. It is not necessary for all males to brutalize females for all women to live in fear. Our brothers, fathers, friends and sons do this for us. It is not necessary for all "whites" to brutalize people of color for injustice to flourish. Skinheads, the Klan, our neighbors and the U.S. Justice Department do this in our name.

It is necessary for you to speak up if you want oppression to stop. Silent "tolerance" and passive "acceptance" of homosexuality are not enough. Sexist and heterosexist violence will continue in your name unless you actually do something to stop it.

Religious intolerance is directly responsible for much of the mass murder this planet has known. It is no coincidence that Hitler's right wing Germany preyed upon homosexuals as well as Jews. When the Christian right wing in this country promotes religious intolerance and heterosexism in the same breath, will you be as silent as the Germans were? If you want to see a world free of violence against women, men and children of all colors and beliefs, you must become actively gay-affirmative.

I do not fear men who love other men or women who love other women; I fear men who do not love!

Jack Straton is a research associate in physics and is co-chair of the National Organization for Men Against Sexism, which advocates a profeminist and gay-affirmative perspective.

New inspection plan worthless legislation

The extensive revisions of Manhattan's rental inspection program show a lack of willingness by the city to stand up to landlords and are a complete departure from the original intent of the program.

The ultimate goal of any rental inspection program should be to improve the safety of a structure that will house tenants. In trying to find a middle ground, members of the citizen's advisory committee are creating another do-nothing piece of legislation that would address many concerns, but would accomplish nothing.

According to the revisions of the proposal, any housing unit constructed, remodeled or converted with a permit will not need to be inspected before a license is issued.

Only the units built without a permit will need to be inspected before licensing.

The arguments presented by landlords are understandable because of the costs associated with the renovations necessary in making rental units safe.

A rental inspection program for Manhattan must outline a systematic review of all tenant structures, not just those without permits.

Under the current revisions, the loopholes are mind-boggling. Wade Whitmer, student representative to the citizens' advisory committee and freshman in political science, summed up the implications of the revisions best during a meeting of the committee and the Manhattan City Commission.

"What I am hearing now is that I have to sign a lease for a hell-hole, move in, and then call for an inspection," Whitmer said.

What are these people thinking about? Why should tenants be required to ensure that the unit they wish to rent is safe? It is the landlords who are getting the checks every month. They should be required to offer a safe environment to their tenants if they wish to take advantage of the student market — or any market.

A rental inspection program that would require rental units to pass minimum safety standards would protect the landlords as well as the tenants in the unfortunate event of a fire.

Before members of the city commission support this worthless piece of legislation, they should be willing to take a look at some of the so-called apartments that are currently being rented to students. They might be surprised to see that the integrity of some landlords is slightly below their expectations.

semi-TRUE HORROR STORIES OF FARRELL LIBRARY

At 10:30 p.m. on a Thursday before finals week in the fall of 1989, Ted Crumbins got off work from his part-time job at Burgers Burgers-Burgers and proceeded to Farrell Library to do some research for his final psychology paper.

Unfortunately, Ted couldn't find what he needed before Farrell closed at midnight. (Not that it would have mattered, however, because you can't check out anything after 10:00 p.m. anyway.)

So . . . after he got off work at 8:30 p.m. the next day, he returned to Farrell to look again. But, unfortunately he forgot that it closes at 8:00 p.m. on Fridays.

So . . . he tried again, with no luck, at 9:30 a.m. Saturday, at 7:30 p.m. Saturday and at 11:20 a.m. Sunday. Finally, Ted got in at noon Sunday. But, after searching for a few hours, he realized that due to budget constraints, Farrell no longer subscribed to the particular journal he needed.

The next morning Ted failed psychology, flunked out of school and returned to Burgers Burgers Burgers, where he now works full-time for a guy who went to KU. (Where, incidently, a well stocked, well funded library stays open until 10:00 on Fridays.)

Change not needed

Editor,

In response to Thursday's article about the core curriculum, I have to say that implementing such a curriculum would be nothing more than a hindrance to students.

In high school, students take courses in many different areas to give them a broad base of knowledge. At college, however, students pay a lot of money to be trained in their respective majors. The school is here for the student — it should be used by the student to obtain knowledge of the trade of his choice.

Would it take longer to get through school if the core curriculum were enacted? Many majors that have four-year programs usually end up requiring 4½ or five years of study. Why increase the class load?

If a student wishes to be well-rounded, the opportunities certainly exist at K-State for him to take a diverse range of classes. But why make it mandatory? Let's not forget what the college is here for.

Stance not strong

Editor,

I find it appalling that the University came out in initial favor of a proposal like the Rental Housing Inspection Program, but when the political heat was on, it stepped back.

If any party should be loudly heralding a move toward safer, more decent housing, it should be the University. Yet, in public meetings held thus far in regard to the Inspection Program, no one from the University faculty or administration has been there to speak up.

While it is understood that the University has a tenuous position due to its liaison with business and community leaders, that is no excuse for failure to send a representative from the office of the President to address the Program.

This is not a time to grease the wheel that moves you. It is a time for honesty and bluntness with the City Commission as to the need for a program as initially proposed that puts some teeth into the enforcement of housing conditions and code violations.

The University has been accusing the state of failing to follow through on money promised for enrollment increases — however, it appears it is also guilty of looking to where the political winds are blowing rather than standing in support of its constituents.

Priorities skewed

Editor,

Although I have composed hundreds of letters to the editor in my head, this is the first time I have been compelled to actually write.

On Wednesday, the classified employees of K-State were honored in a ceremony at McCain Auditorium. Retiree, certificate of merit, scholarship, service and employee of the year honors were bestowed upon more than 100 employees. This recognition ceremony is held annually and is a first-class tribute to the hundreds of employees at K-State.

At this ceremony, the three classified employees of the year were announced from a field of nine employees who were subjected to months of scrutinizing by the classified affairs committee. This ceremony culminated a suspenseful process for the nine who were being considered and allowed the three winners to be honored.

This ceremony was a big deal and was news for a good portion of the readers. But the Collegian buried the story on Page 5 the following day. No pictures were printed. The three winners (I was not one of them) should have been recognized with a photo and story placed in a prominent position in the newspaper.

However, Friday's Collegian carried a front-page story and photo of another competition. I am referring to the Miss Manhattan-Kansas State pageant story and photo. Why did this competition merit front-page status? Could the swimsuit photos have been the determinant? I would argue that the classified employees' recognition ceremony was of more importance. After all, our contribution to the mission of the University is immeasurable, and the contribution of the pageant to the mission of the University is hard to define.

This certainly must have been an oversight, because any other reason for the lack of consideration would be an insult.

Children learn from interaction with exhibits

By Donna Warren
Collegian Reporter

An exhibit in the Manhattan Town Center allows children to see the journey food takes from the field to the dinner table.

The Young People's Discovery Museum opened its second exhibit, "Your Food Comes From the Sun," Saturday. The museum is unique because it is designed specifically for children and encourages visitors to feel and touch the exhibits.

"The museum is very process-oriented, arranged in logical order to help children understand food production and to realize food isn't made at the grocery store," said Sue Boxer, Manhattan resident who originated the idea for a children's museum.

At the beginning of the museum, visitors walk past exhibits explaining how plants and seeds grow. Next, posters explain the process of photosynthesis. The visitors then view wheat stalks and have the opportunity to grind wheat and sift flour.

Next the visitors can shop at a mini grocery store, modeled after Dillons. The children are allowed to shop for groceries, ring up customers as a cashier, sack the groceries and restock the shelves.

Boxer said after moving here two years ago, she realized there were no museums designed for children in Manhattan and thought it could be beneficial to the community to have one.

"A children's museum uses a process of exploration and experimentation which encourages learning," Boxer said.

Boxer and Nancy DuTeau, research associate in plant pathology, joined Manhattan residents Nancy Kiefer and Jo Brunner to coordinate a museum that families can attend together.

"The museum is a very subtle way for children to acquire knowledge," Boxer said, "and although we're not trying to teach them everything, we hope to make the children curious so they will wonder about the world."

The first exhibit, on display last fall, used the theme "A Mini-Memorial Hospital." This exhibit allowed children to gain a better understanding of a hospital environment.

The four women coordinated the museum, but contributions have made it possible. Dillon's set up the miniature grocery store and supplied food, shelves and other supplies.

She said the Kansas Wheat Commission supplied wheat stalks, wheat kernels and display pictures. The University's Department of Agronomy serves as a reference source for the educational aspect, Boxer said. Other groups and individuals also donated time and money to make the museum possible.

Randy Plummer, assistant manager of Dillons, said helping the museum was interesting and exciting, and he was glad to help because it gives kids something to do.

The Town Center donated the space for the museum, but it is not a permanent location.

"The Manhattan community has been very responsive to the museum and we would like to have a permanent location in order to remain open all the time," Boxer said. "We are also finding that school groups and day care centers are excited for the opportunity for us to be an appendage to them," Boxer said.

The museum will be open from 9:30 to 11:30 a.m. on Thursdays, and from 2 to 4 p.m. on Fridays, Saturdays and Sundays until April 29.

Capacity to be reached in 1993

Library will need to find space for 300,000 more volumes

By Lori Mikesell
Staff Reporter

For all practical purposes, Farrell Library will be full by 1993.

But University officials don't expect funding for a library addition to be available until 1997, and construction to be completed until 1999. During that 10-year wait, space for 300,000 more volumes will have to be found.

"Unless the state comes to grips with the problem and figures out some way to finance an expansion, the situation will become very grave," said Brice Hobrock, dean of libraries.

Prior to the 1988 university planning review, the library was scheduled for improvements in 2007 and was 14th on the Strategic Planning list of priorities. Now the library is fifth on the list and construction is expected to begin in seven years, Hobrock said.

"Everything in front of the library was already on the official list to the Board of Regents," Hobrock said.

Farrell has 157,000 square feet of book storage space. An addition of 75,000 and 85,000 net square feet today would be adequate in the short run, said John Johnson, chairman of reference and informational services. In the long run, however, it would take an addition of 120,000 net square feet to allow the library to grow for up to 20 years.

The last shelf space expansion, made in 1989, will be full by 1993. Hobrock said he expects a second storage facility will be provided by that time.

"There's a realization from the University administration that the problem isn't going away," Hobrock said. "But the state doesn't intend to do anything until 1997 at the earliest."

In 1986, 200,000 volumes were moved to Nichols Hall. By 1993, Hobrock said 280,000 volumes will have been added to Farrell since the 1986 move.

Prior to the 1986 move, the library was over 80 percent full. When libraries are over 85 percent full, books cannot be added to the stacks without constant shifting. In this condition, called gridlock, the return or purchase of a single book is enough to fill the shelf.

The 1986 move of resources to Nichols temporarily solved the problem, but as of September 1988, Farrell stacks were already at 73 percent capacity. By December 1992, the library will have once again reached gridlock.

"University planners just don't understand library growth," Hobrock said. "You don't throw books away — the collection is continuously growing. A massive amount of new space must be built every 30 years."

This continuing struggle isn't unique to K-State. Colorado State University stored 500,000 volumes in a metal storage building that had no heat or air-conditioning and was located seven miles from the main campus. The University of Missouri used an old grocery store for its library storage.

At one time, the addition of stacks to Farrell's basement was considered a short term solution for the space crunch. However, University Central Computing, the university's main computer center, has taken over the basement, eliminating it as an expansion possibility.

"Farrell gave blood to accommodate central computing, a fact that seems to have been conveniently forgotten by many," Hobrock said.

In the short run, the University has several options. Hobrock said storing books in the former Kansas Farm Bureau building on Anderson Avenue, building a metal storage building, leasing unoccupied downtown retail space or renovating Ahearn Field House are all possible solutions to the space problem.

The Farm Bureau building has 17,000 to 18,000 square feet of flooring capable of holding books, Hobrock said. This would provide only two to three years of growth space after moving volumes currently stored in Nichols Hall to the Farm Bureau building. In addition, he said the building would be difficult to staff and keep open.

If the Farm Bureau building option is selected, by 1997 the library would again be in a crisis situation, Hobrock said.

In 1997, construction on a seven-story addition to Farrell is expected to begin. Johnson said plans are to expand south to Denison Hall.

At this time, renovation of the 1927 A and B stacks, which are supported by glass floors and aren't air-conditioned, should also begin, Johnson said.

In 1980, a library employee fell through one level of the glass floors. Following that accident, the floors in the A and B stacks were covered with plywood.

"Our feeling is that A and B stacks need to be gutted, renovated and used for offices and study space," Hobrock said.

Another possible long-term solution to the space crisis is building a separate facility for science research. Similar to the newly opened University of Kansas science library, this option would allow Farrell to be used strictly as an undergraduate library, Hobrock said.

If no action is taken in 1993, library authorities will be forced to convert all of fourth floor to stacks, begin boxing books and look into renting space. Johnson said there would be fewer than 700 student seats available and the library would be 100 percent full.

Hobrock agreed, saying that if nothing is done, congestion would reach the point where students would give up and no longer even attempt to use the facility.

An issue related to book storage space is student study seats. Considering that 175,000 new volumes will have been added by 1993, space will have to be found at the expense of student seating for 62,000 volumes.

To meet current accepted minimum standards for seating, a library should provide a seat for one out of every 10 students, Johnson said.

For years, it has been known that there are too few seats for students in Farrell, Hobrock said. Seats declined from more than 1,000 in 1983 to fewer than 800 in 1987. Hobrock said while not all seats are full at all times, students won't even come to the library if they know they can't get a quality seat.

Today, Farrell has seating for 830 students. Johnson said they are trying to add 20 more seats, but even at 850, the library would be 1,200 seats short. And, of the seats currently available, 80 percent are located in the 1927 building, which lacks air conditioning.

But for all the library's faults, Farrell offers services such as compact disc indexes comparable to the best libraries, Johnson said.

Service-wise, Farrell does a better job than many other schools, Johnson said. Farrell's staff does more one-on-one work with faculty and graduate and undergraduate students than many other schools, he said.

Farrell Library for graduate

By Tomari Quinn
Staff Reporter

While a severe lack of funding affects most people involved with Farrell Library, graduate students and faculty members are among those affected the most.

John Johnson, chairman for reference and informational services, said Farrell has an adequate collection for the undergraduate programs, but needs a larger journal collection to fulfill the needs of graduate students and faculty.

"It's at the graduate level and the research level that we're hurting," Johnson said. "My biggest concern is that we are really putting our graduate education program at a disadvantage by not having a larger journal collection."

Farrell has between 5,400 and 6,400 periodicals on hand, after inflation forced the cancellation of about 1,600 journals two years ago. The round figure is due to not having a clear definition of what is considered a periodical.

"We've been told by members of the faculty and various administration that we've actually lost graduate students when they've come here and seen the library," Johnson said. "That can't do anything except detract from the graduate student programs."

R.F. Kruh, vice provost and former dean of the graduate school, said reports on the condition of Farrell have been overly dramatic.

"The fact is there is a library collection of over a million books that are especially concentrated in the important areas including excellent resources for master's and doctoral programs," he said.

But although Kruh has a positive attitude regarding the library, he said some areas could use improvement.

"We had over 1,000 titles cut due to economics and inflation," he said. "I find that distressing. We do have our problems and needs, but we need to look to the more positive points."

Johnson said research have their own information, but graduate students need to have the same amount of information as graduate schools.

Thomas Van Sant, a graduate student, said research materials must be obtainable in a timely manner. He said it takes 10 days to get materials from Farrell.

"There is a real shortage of materials," Van Sant said.

With a few hours of research, he can find some materials in the country at the 100-day mark. He said the library in Abilene and Library and Museum at Johnson said all libraries are facing cuts, but Farrell is the smallest before the cuts.

"I would say we're low on our closest peers," Johnson said.

Farrell administrators proposed for the next year a process that calls for a journal base of journals.

"We really feel we need a collection to be competitive," Johnson said.

Full funding from the state would enable the library to make adjustments for inflation. He said the library would be competitive with its peers in five years, he said.

The $3 million from the state would be a big problem, but would be a direction, Johnson said. "I feel we're going in the sense that we're funding for some of it."

think you can expect the state to fund to a certain level, but beyond that we'll have to look for other sources."

Johnson keeps in close touch with Oregon State University, one of K-State's peer institutions whose library employs two full-time fund-raisers.

"I don't know whether our situation is the same as theirs, but it is becoming more obvious that we are going to have to go out and raise some funds," he said. "I'm optimistic we're going to be able to get those external funds."

Johnson said Farrell has a strong interlibrary loan program and remains a net lender. "We still lend out more materials than we borrow," he said. "It's the things that we are borrowing that we shouldn't have to borrow."

Students need to look at the resources the University offers, Johnson said. If those resources aren't adequate or necessary, the students should speak up, he said.

"I think we're very fortunate to have a group of students who have seen the library problems and want to help," he said.

Van Sant said while he, too, is optimistic with the student interest in Farrell, he is disappointed with the athletic fee imposed last year.

"I think if the library had adequate research materials, the library would pull in as many students as a new basketball coliseum," he said.

Johnson said a prior demonstration held in 1968 led to the Farrell addition of 1970, and Oregon State students staged a sit-in in their library that led to the approval of a building project by the Oregon State administration and state legislature.

"I think it will take us a minimum of five years to get to the point where we are on a par with the rest of the Big Eight," he said. "I don't think we will ever be a leader in the Big Eight because Farrell has a historic pattern of underfunding."

total expenditure or budget of the library, Hobrock said.

The results are used to make cases for improvement of resources, especially financial resources, he said.

"K-State ranks in the top 100 institutions for awarding Ph.D.'s each year; however, in terms of library resources it does not rank within the top 107," Hobrock said. "That's the type of argument we need to make. If we're supposed to be that type of an institution, then we should have library support to support our programs."

In order to be included in the top 107 academic libraries ranked by the ARL, Farrell would need a 50 percent budget increase, Hobrock said. Farrell's budget is $6 million.

"We do not have the budget, collections or qualitative environments to fit into ARL's requirements," Hobrock said, "but the two formats and data elements are identical in both ARL and ACRL ranking groups."

Johnson said Farrell's weakest area is volumes held, the category on which ARL has placed the most emphasis. Farrell has fewer volumes than any ARL member. However, Farrell is also low in current serials received, volumes added and staff. As salaries contribute heavily toward total expenditures, low staff numbers weaken this factor as well, he said.

Prior to the 1986 serials cut of 1,600 titles, Farrell was statistically meeting the minimum criteria for ARL membership. Today, however, Farrell falls short in nearly every category, Johnson said.

The University of Missouri is No. 41 out of the top 107 libraries in the ARL and No. 2 in the Big Eight. Its total library budget is $6.5 million.

"In total number of volumes added a year, we are not doing too well," Bob Almony, assistant director of libraries at MU, said. "We were No.

95 in volumes added and No. 77 in the number of journals purchased."

Almony said MU will continue to slip further in the rankings, relative to peer institutions, in the total number of volumes of material.

"The ARL doesn't account for quality of the collections or the people, just the gross numbers," he said. "The ARL only represents high numbers, and not the quality, and some of our collections are very expensive."

Books that were bought for $5 in 1969 now cost Farrell $50 each, Hobrock said. The costs of chemistry and journal subscriptions range from $200 to $250 each.

"Farrell's budget has always been low," Hobrock said. "There's also been lots of improvement, but you can only make up so much ground. We have to control what we buy. Every library has the same problems, because so much material is being published every year."

Mary Hawkins, assistant dean for public service at the University of Kansas, said KU's library is No. 31 in ARL's data table of total number of volumes and No. 1 in the Big Eight. KU has 2.5 million volumes, more than twice as many as K-State's holdings. KU's library budget is $10.4 million.

Hawkins said Watson Library houses humanities, general and social science volumes, and the Anschutz Science Library houses a large science collection.

"The ARL rankings are serious, and we use them for reference a lot," Schannette Kirby, library assistant at KU, said. "They are widely used for comparison of funding and how we rank with other institutions."

Hobrock said Farrell must purchase volumes strategically, but the technology is changing, and access rather than ownership will be the big test of the future.

"You have to maintain a certain core of material, but access through on-line cataloging with other universities is becoming more important," he said.

"Membership in the ARL and ACRL is secondary to having strategic resources to do the job. There's prestige with being a member. People notice, but the current measures and parameters are becoming less important. New ones will develop."

The following are other Big Eight universities ranked in ARL's data according to total number of volumes, followed by their budgets: University of Oklahoma, No. 49, $4.7 million; University of Colorado, No. 50, $10.5 million; University of Nebraska, No. 61, $6.8 million; Iowa State University, No. 74, $8.9 million; and Oklahoma State University, No. 97, $6.4 million.

visits were made there," the mayor said, adding that the city was stepping up efforts to shut down such clubs.

"This is the worst thing I have seen in my career," said Emergency Medical Services specialist Christopher McCarthy. "It hurt my stomach. It was sickening."

"Most of the bodies were in dance clothes," McCarthy said. "They were out to have fun. ... I saw wall-to-wall bodies — an indication of mass confusion and panic."

EMS Lt. Roy David said there were "a lot of people, obviously frantic at one point, trying to make an exit."

The fire was the deadliest in the continental United States since a May 28, 1977, blaze that consumed the Beverly Hills Supper Club in Southgate, Ky., killing 164 people. A Dec. 31, 1986, fire at a hotel in San Juan, Puerto Rico, a U.S. commonwealth, killed 96 people.

The tragedy occurred in East Tremont, a section of the Bronx borough. Deputy Mayor Bill Lynch described it as an "economically disadvantaged, working-class, Latino neighborhood."

The building housed a group that organized children's baseball as well as adult social events, said Lillian Rivera, a neighbor.

A makeshift morgue was set up at a hall next door. Authorities took Polaroid pictures of the bodies and showed them to 200 friends and relatives at a school across the street where the cries and wails of relatives could be heard outside. Then, the bodies were moved to a hospital morgue.

It wasn't immediately clear what caused the fire.

Two neighborhood residents said three gunshots were heard just before the fire. Robert Unger, deputy fire commissioner, said he could not confirm another report that cans of accelerant were found.

Lt. Raymond O'Donnell, a police spokesman, said the two-story club was shut down in December by the Buildings Department. It had no liquor or cabaret license, he said.

So-called "social clubs" proliferate in New York City's poor neighborhoods, and despite their name, many of them admit virtually anyone who wants to enter, functioning essentially as unlicensed taverns or dance clubs.

People were screaming; they were all burned," said Rosemary Green, who found the club on fire when she arrived to meet her sister-in-law and cousin. "Once you got in the entrance there was no way to get out."

SPORTS MONDAY

Golfers to open at UCSB

Staff and Wire Reports

GOLETA, Calif. — The K-State's men's golf team opens the spring portion of its 1989-90 season today at the 16th Annual Hammond-Bell Pacific Coast Intercollegiate Golf Championship.

The tournament's host is Cal-Santa Barbara, it and will be at the 18-hole, par-72 Sand Piper Golf Course. The course has been given a difficult course rating of 74.2 and covers 7,106 yards.

The 19-team tournament field includes 18 NCAA Division I schools, seven of which are ranked in the top 20 nationally.

"A good placing at this tournament would score some points with the NCAA District 5 selection committee," said K-State coach Russ Bunker.

To do that, however, the 'Cats will have to get by some big names in collegiate golf. Schools like Cal State-Northridge, UCLA, San Diego State, Pacific, Washington, California and the host Gauchos will be represented.

Qualifying in the top spot for K-State was freshman transfer Richard Laing of Bonner Springs, who came to K-State from Cal-Santa Barbara. Following Laing in order were senior Jeff Sedorek of Kansas City, Kan.; sophomore Brett Vuillemin of Prairie Village; sophomore transfer Chris Thompson of Stillwell and junior transfer Bobby Donnellan of Leavenworth.

"This spring is very important to our program in recruiting and in gaining respect in the Big Eight Conference," Bunker said. "We have to earn the respect that K-State hasn't had in the past. This is a group of guys that are very dedicated and talented."

In order for the Wildcats to make their first-ever appearance at the NCAA Regional they have to be ranked in the top six of the District 5 teams.

And then there were 4
Duke, Arkansas, UNLV, Georgia Tech set for showdown

By The Associated Press

UNLV, Georgia Tech, Duke, Arkansas: They are the Final Four.

"On to Denver," read a sign held up by UNLV's Moses Scurry as the Runnin' Rebels polished off Loyola Marymount 131-101, ending the Lions' emotional ride.

On Sunday, UNLV captured the West Regional at Oakland, Calif., and Georgia Tech was a 93-91 winner over Minnesota for the Southeast Regional title at New Orleans. Duke and Arkansas advanced on Saturday.

With Georgia Tech and Duke both winning, the Atlantic Coast Conference has two teams in the Final Four for the first time since 1981. That year, North Carolina and Virginia advanced, with the Tar Heels losing the national title to Indiana.

Six times in the '80s there was more than one team from a conference in the Final Four, including 1985 when the Big East had three.

On Saturday, Duke beat Connecticut 79-78 in overtime to win the East Regional at East Rutherford, N.J., and Arkansas defeated Texas 88-85 for the Midwest Regional crown at Dallas.

Duke (28-8) meets Arkansas (30-4) and Georgia Tech (28-6) plays UNLV (33-5) in next Saturday's Final Four semifinals in Denver, with the national title to be settled next Monday night.

WEST

UNLV 131, LMU 101

UNLV is going to the Final Four for the third time. Loyola-Marymount goes home after losing on the court but winning its mission in the memory of fallen teammate Hank Gathers.

Stacey Augmon scored 25 of his 33 points in the first half as UNLV reached a season-high in points while holding the nation's highest scoring team well under its 125-point average. UNLV put it away with a run of 13 straight points late in the first half.

UNLV lost in the semifinals in its previous two Final Four trips, to North Carolina in 1977 and Indiana in '87.

Loyola's emotional trip, meanwhile, ended after three victories and its deepest march ever into the NCAA tournament. It was all dedicated to Gathers, a star for the Lions who collapsed in a game and died on March 4 of heart disease.

Bo Kimble, a close friend of Gathers' as well as a teammate, scored 42 points, seven above his nation-leading average, including eight three-pointers. But his teammates shot just 34 percent against UNLV's harrying defense.

SATURDAY

Duke vs. Arkansas, 4:30 p.m.
UNLV vs. Georgia Tech, 30 minutes following MONDAY
Championship game, 8 p.m.

"Going out with class, that was the most important thing," Kimble said. "I told our team I was proud of them." Coach Paul Westhead said. "It was a good long run for us. We ran our fast break. The pace was perfect. We just didn't make enough key baskets and they got a bunch inside that really hurt. Las Vegas was just a better team today. Jerry had been ready for the run."

"There were three things we had to do," UNLV coach Jerry Tarkanian said. "We had to beat the press, we had to score when we had the numbers and we had to get back and stop the transition. We did all three."

SOUTHEAST

Georgia Tech 93, Minnesota 91

Dennis Scott, Kenny Anderson and Brian Oliver scored all but four of Georgia Tech's points as the Yellow Jackets earned their first trip to the Final Four.

"Believe it or not, that's not that unusual with this team," Georgia Tech coach Bobby Cremins said. "We had that happen several times this season."

"Them doing all the scoring is not designated. It's something that happens and just comes naturally."

Scott scored 40 points, Anderson 30 and Oliver 19.

Minnesota (23-9), making the round of eight for the first time, was the last of a record seven Big Ten teams in the field of 64.

The game was the 23rd so far in the tournament to be decided by three points or less. Minnesota had a chance to win, but Kevin Lynch's three-point attempt from the side missed at the buzzer.

EAST

Duke 79, Connecticut 78

The Blue Devils are in their third straight Final Four and seventh since 1963, although they have never won the national championship. They lost in the championship game in 1964,

'78 and '86.

Duke beat Connecticut (31-5) on Christian Laettner's 15-foot jumper at the buzzer, becoming the first school since Houston in 1982-83-84 to make three straight Final Four trips.

The play that put the ball in Laettner's hands for the final shot was called from the sidelines by Duke coach Mike Krzyzewski with 2.6 seconds to play. Laettner inbounded to Brian Davis, took a return pass and hit his shot.

MIDWEST

Arkansas 88, Texas 85

The regional championship not only sent Arkansas to the Final Four but gave the Razorbacks their first 30-win season since 1978. Lenzie Howell was the regional MVP, scoring 25 points against North Carolina and 21 against Texas (24-9).

"Lenzie Howell has come to his hometown time and time again and proven he is probably one of the best players in the country," Arkansas coach Nolan Richardson said. "Not in the Southwest Conference — in the country."

Arkansas beat Southwest Conference rival Texas three times this season, although Texas cut the Razorbacks' lead to 82-78 with 1:37 left on a pair of free throws by Joey Wright.

'Other' Final Four to open tonight in New York

David Svoboda

OFF THE BENCH

While most of the men's college basketball world gets swept away by "Mountain Madness" in preparation for the NCAA Final Four this weekend in Denver, fans of four other Division I programs have a New York state of mind.

For St. Louis, New Mexico, Penn State and Vanderbilt, the Final Four begins tonight in New York City's Madison Square Garden.

Their Final Four is the NIT Final Four, but you'd be hard pressed to convince the coaches of the quartet of teams that it's any less important to their players than playing in the big dance.

This is still a chance to be a champion, a chance to be one of only two Division I schools in tournament play that won't end its season with a defeat.

The NIT Final Four could be of particular interest to fans in the Midwest for several reasons.

First is the participation of St. Louis. The Billikens of Coach Rich Grawer are currently 20-11. They advanced to the NIT title game one year ago, where they lost to St. John's.

Forward Anthony Bonner, owner of school records for career points, rebounds and steals, leads the Billikens.

Facing St. Louis for the second straight year will be New Mexico, 20-12. The Lobos led the Billikens by 20 points at the half in last year's third-round game before dropping a 66-65 heartbreaker.

"That game has become part of the St. Louis lore," Grawer said. "No matter what we're down by, I always say, 'Remember New Mexico.' It's kind of like 'remember the Alamo.'"

Here's the second tie to the Midwest: the Lobos are coached by former Oklahoma head man Dave Bliss. You remember Bliss, don't you? He was the good guy at OU before the "man in black" — Billy Tubbs — took the Sooners helm and all the credit for building the program from scratch.

Seems to me Bliss left Tubbs a few key ingredients to work with.

And Bliss' team was very similar to K-State's in many respects this season. Does this sound at all familiar?

"About the middle of January, we were struggling along, and we weren't so sure we'd even be able to make the NIT," Bliss said. "But then, instead of losing those one-point games, we started winning them, and here we are."

I think I heard Lon Kruger say something similar to that not too long ago.

A third tie, you ask? How about Vanderbilt coach Eddie Fogler? Fogler was the man largely responsible for the resurgence of the Wichita State program.

Fogler left Wichita last year to take over the Commodore program after C.M. Newton left to become Kentucky's athletic director. Fogler's done nothing but get Vandy into its first postseason Final Four of any kind. That ain't much.

While Roy Williams, Dean Smith and Larry Brown are the University of North Carolina products that have gotten all the ink this year, Fogler is the only one (Brown and his chances at an NBA title excluded) with a team on destiny's doorstep.

Vanderbilt, which knocked off K-State earlier this year, is 19-14. Its opponent, 24-8 Penn State, was blasted in the national press as being "inferior" in basketball during the hoopla surrounding Penn State's announcement that it would be joining the Big Ten.

Yes, Linebacker U is a football school primarily, but the Nittany Lion basketball squad will make a strong showing when it joins the big boys, if this season is any indication.

No real tie to our region of the country here, but the other ties were kind of stretches, anyway.

Regardless of the appeal to fans in our area, Wednesday night will end in the Garden with the crowning of the first champion of the postseason in Division I.

Coach

"We were surprised, because we thought she'd get it," Matteucci said of Griffin. "I think (the underclassmen) will accept it eventually, but it's kind of hard right now because of everything that just happened, but I think they'll accept the change and adapt."

Moylan and Miller were joined on the selection committee by Steve Bietau, tennis coach; Gunile Devault, assistant registrar; Jim Epps, associate athletic director; Kathy Green, athletic department academic counselor; Veryl Switzer, Associate Athletic Director; and Mary Molt, chairperson of the intercollegiate athletic council.

"We weren't that involved (in the decision), but, at the same time, I think it's a decision to be made by the administration," Matteucci said. "They went through the interviewing process and everything, and they felt they made a decision that will help Kansas State women's basketball in the future."

Yow, who will be the fourth coach in the 22 years of Lady Cat basketball, has been the head coach at Drake for four years, compiling a 51-58 record. Drake was 10-16 this year.

Previously, Yow had the head job at East Tennessee State where she was 118-101 in eight seasons.

During her playing days, Yow was named to the Kodak All-America team as a junior at Elon College in North Carolina. She then transferred to play for her sister Kay Yow at North Carolina State her senior year, where she was also named all-American.

Susan Yow comes from a family of women's basketball coaches. Kay Yow's North Carolina State squad was still alive in the NCAA tournament last week before losing to Texas in the women's Sweet 16.

Kay Yow was also the coach of the 1988 women's Olympic team which won the gold medal at Seoul, South Korea, and she had Susan Yow on her Olympic staff, as well as on her staff at North Carolina State for two years.

Deb Yow coached at Kentucky.

Interim coach Gaye Griffin will begin planning her next career move. Drake's Susan Yow will be named Lady Cats coach Tuesday.

Chambers nets 60 points, sets Phoenix scoring mark

By The Associated Press

PHOENIX — Tom Chambers was listed as probable for Saturday's game against Seattle with a sore hamstring. Chambers played 42 minutes and scored a club-record 60 points, leading the Phoenix Suns to a 121-95 victory over the SuperSonics.

"I got hot and it was a lot of fun," Chambers said with a shrug. "My leg was feeling a lot better and I felt real strong. Whenever I get the outside shot going, it opens up everything else for me. I felt like I could make pretty much anything. Once it gets like that, it's a simple game."

Chambers, who had an arena-record 35 first-half points, is only the 14th player in NBA history to reach the 60-point plateau. Forward Karl Malone of the Utah Jazz did it earlier this season, scoring 61 against Milwaukee on Jan. 27 at Salt Lake City.

Chambers, who previously had a career-high and club-record 56 points on Feb. 18 at Golden State, broke both marks on two free throws with 6:58 to play.

"The points didn't come as quickly as they did at Oakland, but I got in the flow and didn't get as tired," said Chambers, who had 40 first-half points in that game. "Seattle didn't start putting people on me until later on. My teammates were trying like crazy to get me the ball."

He reached 60 points on a 17-footer with 3:08 left for a 108-86 lead and was then taken out of the game to a standing ovation from the sellout crowd of 14,487 at the Arizona Veterans Memorial Coliseum.

"An unbelievable offensive show," Suns coach Cotton Fitzsimmons said. "He is a monster."

A ninth-year pro, Chambers finished with a career-high and club-record 22 field goals in 32 tries along with 16-of-18 free throws.

The 6-foot-10, 230-pound Chambers hurt his right hamstring after scoring 36 points in 30 minutes here March 16 against Miami. He missed his first game of the season Monday night as San Antonio won 113-102 to end Phoenix's 19-game home winning streak.

Chambers donned a black elastic brace and scored 36 points in a 115-114 overtime loss Wednesday night to Charlotte before his record-setting performance Saturday night.

The previous Coliseum record for points in a half was 34 by Kevin Johnson against Portland on March 17, 1989, while Charlie Scott hit 14 first-half field goals against Boston on Dec. 15, 1973.

Chambers also shattered the Coliseum single-game record of 51 points — set by New Orleans' Pete Maravich on March 18, 1977 and tied by San Diego's Freeman Williams on Jan. 19, 1980.

Freeman set a Coliseum-record 22 field goals in that game, which Chambers tied. The previous Suns record for field goals in a game was 20 — set by Dick Van Arsdale on Feb. 15, 1975 at Seattle and tied by Paul Westphal on Nov. 27, 1977.

Cards' Guerrero finally reports

By The Associated Press

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — You won't hear Pedro Guerrero complaining about lost practice time.

"I'm here because I have to be," said the St. Louis Cardinals first baseman in a grumpy voice. "Otherwise, I'd show up the first day of the season."

For the second straight season, Guerrero was the last player to show at the Cardinals' training camp. He waltzed in on Friday, two days after almost everybody else, and strutted around the clubhouse smoking cigarettes.

But lest you think he's got a bit of a bad attitude, think again. What Manager Whitey Herzog is most impressed with is production, not work habits.

"He'll always give us all he's got," Herzog said. "I'd like to have him hitting third, fourth and fifth."

The numbers say Herzog would be in heaven, or at least first place in the NL East, under that scenario. Guerrero is coming off his best season, highlighted by a .311 average, 117 RBIs and a .406 average with runners in scoring position. He finished third in the NL MVP voting and often carried the Cardinals' single-rich, run-poor offense on his back.

Guerrero's compact but powerful swing is a model of efficiency for new batting coach Steve Braun, who knows he's overmatched with at least one Cardinals player.

"I think I'm just going to shake Pedro's hand," Braun said. "Maybe I'll shake it again in October."

So what if he limited his off-season activity to a couple of charity baseball games? Asked what he did before reporting to spring training, Guerrero said, "In the off season I don't even want to think about baseball. That's why they call it the off season."

So what if he's not happy about spending three weeks in sunny Florida?

"I don't like spring training," he said. "I just don't like it."

So what if he shoos off any mention of being a team leader?

"I'm not," he said. "I'm just one of the 24 players. I'm just one of the teammates trying to do the best I can."

Herzog doesn't care about any of those things. Guerrero takes care of the bottom line, and he's such a valuable commodity that the manager doesn't mind if he decides not to slide.

That's understandable, because the 33-year-old Guerrero has a history of injuries. Playing it safe on the bases helped him to play 162 games last season.

Objectives for Lithuania unclear

Lecturer: West must realize differences of peace, freedom

By Jan Puls
Collegian Reporter

The Western world must be clear about what objective it will defend concerning Lithuania, said James Sherr, a Soviet expert and lecturer in international relations at Lincoln College, Oxford University, England.

"Do we want to defend them in their quest for freedom, or do we want whatever end Lithuania faces to simply be a peaceful one?" Sherr said Monday.

Soviet leaders are saying that the Lithuanian people have only themselves to blame for the presence of Soviet troops within the country, which declared independence from the Soviet Union March 11, Sherr said. Soviets argue that if Lithuania had negotiated terms of independence with the Soviet Union, it would be better off now.

But he said Lithuanians are leery of negotiations because they fear that if the country entered long-term negotiations, the Soviets would drag out the process and try to regain possession of the country.

The Lithuanians may have been foolish in underestimating the ways the Soviets may use force, Sherr said, because the Soviet Union has a history of using force in unexpected ways.

"We now see a situation of force in Lithuania without violence," Sherr said.

The West has drawn the wrong conclusions about what Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev stands for and represents, he said.

Gorbachev is an impressive leader, having brought to the presidency perspective, objectivity and courage. Despite that, Sherr said, Gorbachev is wearing serious blinders.

It was never Gorbachev's intention to abolish the alliance system of the Soviet Union, he said. Rather, his failures in strategy concerning the Soviet republics has allowed the opportunities for change in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union.

Soviet citizens want reassurance that basic personal needs for them and their children will be met. They have not adopted mainstream, liberal values, and they have decided that military power doesn't matter, he said.

But they have not concluded that Western societies are better than their own in producing and advancing a "good way" of life, Sherr said. Rather, Soviet citizens have decided they can achieve these same advancements relatively painlessly in the present Soviet system and still provide for defense and security, he said.

The irony, Sherr said, is that the Soviet system is failing. A system founded on security, it has only impoverished its citizens' way of life and has not provided for any security.

The West should look at what is going on in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union with mixed feelings, Sherr said. Soviet citizens are always hearing about reform, but reform to them means conditions are going to get much worse.

"It has gotten to the point that

Moss' trial date set for late May

By The Collegian Staff

Riley County District Court Judge Paul Miller set a trial date and approved a change of lawyers for John L. Moss Monday.

Moss is charged with second degree murder in connection with the beating death of Shane L. Harrison, freshman in engineering. Harrison's body was found Feb. 20 in the alley at 816 N. Juliette Ave.

Moss is also charged with misdemeanor robbery for being in possession of Harrison's wallet.

Public defender Ken Smith, Moss' lawyer, asked the judge to appoint another attorney to the case because he had a conflict of interest. Smith said he had represented Curtis Jack-

Man arraigned in Bronx fire

By The Associated Press

The man accused of setting fire to the Happy Land social club was arraigned Monday on charges of murdering 87 people, and police said he told them "the devil got into me."

The case was turned over to a grand jury, and Gonzalez will not be asked to enter a plea unless an indictment is issued. He was held under a suicide watch at the Rikers Island jail and later admitted to Kings County Hospital Psychiatric Ward, where he will be held indefinitely, said Ruby Ryles, a city jails spokeswoman.

Authorities began shutting other illegal clubs in response to New York City's worst fire in 79 years.

The families of the 87 victims, most of whom were Honduran or Dominican immigrants, sought solace in their grief, and a government task force was set up to counsel them and help make funeral arrangements.

Julio Gonzalez, 36, was accused of setting the fire early Sunday with $1 worth of gasoline after arguing with a former girlfriend who worked at the illegal club. He is said to have threatened to "shut this place down."

"I got angry, the devil got into me, and I set the place on fire," Gonzalez told authorities, according to a police source who spoke to The Associated Press on condition of anonymity.

During a hearing at Bronx County Criminal Court, Gonzalez was charged with 87 counts of mur-

Space for Native Americans shrinking

By Julie Andsager
Features Editor

"Listen—the truth is, the great body of the Creek chiefs and warriors did not respect the power of the United States—they thought we were an insignificant nation—that we would be overpowered by the British...They were fat with eating beef—they wanted flogging...We bleed our enemies in such cases to give them their senses." Gen. Andrew Jackson, 1814.

When white people began to settle North America, they decided the Native Americans already inhabiting the continent were an obstacle to progress.

In 1820, 120,000 Native Americans lived east of the Mississippi River. Fewer than 30,000 were left by 1844. Tribe by tribe, Native Americans were pushed westward and separated on reservations under an Indian removal act passed in 1829.

Kansas has four federal Indian reservations, all located in the northeastern corner of the state, according to the Bureau of Indian Affairs. The reservations are home to about 2,300 members of the Potawatomi, Kickapoo, Iowa, Sac and Fox tribes.

About 400 members of the Kick-apoo tribe live on the reservation five miles west of Horton. The tribe is governed by a seven-member elected council. It receives some federal money and has an income from its bingo nights, farm, convenience store and gas station, said Merle J. Cisneros, a retired member of the tribe.

"The only funding the tribe gets is for different programs they can apply and administered positions," said Mike Mattwaoshshe, 35, manager of the Kickapoo Trading Post convenience store. "Before (President Ronald) Reagan took over, things were bad, but they steadily

Library in Crisis

Students Helping Enhance Library Funding plans to continue its effort to publicize the need for improvements in Farrell Library.

Ray Kowalczewski, chairman of SHELF, said that since the sit-in and petition drive in January, the organization has grown from four members to 12.

"The new members are interested people who the four original members talked to about joining," Kowalczewski said. The members are planning a membership drive scheduled for fall 1990.

"We have met about once every two weeks since the sit-in," Kowalczewski said. "We're thinking of ways to raise money and increase membership for next year. Next fall, we want to launch a big awareness campaign for legislators and alumni."

Student Body President Todd Johnson and J.D. Llewellyn, former Chancellor of the Tribunal, founded SHELF in fall 1988. They registered

Elections led by conservatives

BUDAPEST, Hungary (AP) — A conservative party and a center-left rival emerged Monday as the front-runners in Hungary's first democratic parliamentary elections in 43 years.

The Socialist party, which ruled as the Communist Party until it changed its name last year, initiated the dramatic reforms that led to Sunday's balloting but got little credit from voters. It trailed in fourth place.

As election results trickled in Monday, the conservative Hungarian Democratic Forum had an edge over the center-left League of Free Democrats.

But neither garnered anything close to the absolute majority needed for decisive victory, making a coalition government likely after runoff elections are held next month.

Election officials said only five of the 394 parliamentary seats had been decided by Monday, and three were Hungarian Democratic Forum winners.

More than 70 percent of Hungary's 7.85 million eligible voters cast ballots.

Court reviews Milwaukee case

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court said Monday it will study the power of employers to exclude females of child-bearing age from hazardous jobs, a case that could affect millions of working women.

The court agreed to review a ruling that let a Milwaukee-based manufacturer of automobile batteries ban women who cannot prove they are infertile from jobs that expose them to lead.

The fetal protection policy is being challenged as a form of illegal sex discrimination because it bans women from high-paying, if hazardous, jobs.

Exposure to lead, the principal material used in making batteries, can be a health risk to workers and to the fetuses of pregnant workers.

But one judge, who dissented from an appeals court decision last year that upheld the fetal protection policy, said the ruling also could be applied to a broad range of employment, including "traditional office jobs."

The high court's decision is expected sometime in 1991.

Man sentenced to 131 years

TACOMA, Wash. (AP) — A judge imposed a 131½-year prison sentence on a man convicted of raping, sexually mutilating and trying to kill a 7-year-old boy, a crime that triggered a statewide uproar over sex predators.

Pierce County Superior Court Judge Thomas R. Sauriol gave Earl Shriner, 40, three times the maximum standard term for the crime under state law.

The judge said Shriner, who has a 25-year record of violence against young people, should remain locked up until he dies. He said that if Shriner won time off for good behavior, he would still have to serve more than 88 years. There is no possibility of parole.

Sauriol said the case left him more outraged and troubled than any in his 37-year legal career.

Shriner was convicted Feb. 7 of first-degree attempted murder, first-degree assault and two counts of first-degree rape in the May 20 attack in woods near his and the boy's homes.

The boy was raped and choked, and his penis was cut off. Neighbors found the youngster naked, bloody, covered with mud and practically incoherent.

Following sentencing, defense attorney Dino Sepe gave notice he would appeal the penalty and the verdict.

Ivana Trump wants half

NEW YORK (AP) — Lawyers for Ivana Trump filed papers Monday demanding that their client receive half of her estranged husband's fortune, which they estimated at $5 billion.

The lawyers said they had filed papers in state court in Manhattan in which they said Ivana Trump had no intention of seeking a divorce and had never waived the right to an "equitable share" of the money Trump made during their 13-year marriage.

"Marital property is property gained by the husband and wife during marriage regardless of in whose name it is held," said Michael Kennedy, lawyer for Ivana Trump.

Trump did not have any immediate response.

Salina nursing home fined

TOPEKA (AP) — A Salina nursing home has been fined for violations of state regulations, according to a news release from the Kansas Department of Health and Environment.

KDHE fined College Park Village $1,200, following up its earlier ban on admissions to the facility, which still is in effect.

The state agency told the home to correct the deficiencies in February but it had not done so when agency officials returned, the release said.

A KDHE report said, for example, that three residents were restrained more than 2½ hours without exercise or toilet breaks.

The report also said that medication that was documented as being given never was.

State reduces child support

TOPEKA (AP) — The state Supreme Court made public Monday amendments to its statewide guidelines that determine how child support payments are to be calculated in divorce cases.

The changes, which take effect April 1, alter the child support schedules that have been in effect since October 1987, generally reducing them by 5 percent.

A court statement said the amended guidelines also instruct judges to take into account children from later marriages in which a non-custodial parent may be supporting children from more than one marriage.

The purpose of the guidelines is to standardize in all judicial districts the amount of child support that must be paid by parents who do not get custody of their children in divorce actions, most generally the father.

More charges filed to Grissom

OLATHE (AP) — Murder suspect Richard Grissom Jr. was bound over for trial Monday on three more counts of fraud involving checks he wrote at two Olathe grocery stores about the time three Johnson County women disappeared.

Judge Robert Jones ordered Grissom, 29, to appear in court April 11 to enter pleas to three felony counts of fraud and three counts of misdemeanor theft in connection with the checks.

The three checks were written on an account with American Bank, Kansas City. Grissom had an account with the bank but it was closed in late April when he failed to maintain enough money in his checking account, a bank official said Tuesday.

Grissom is awaiting trial in the disappearances and deaths of three women.

Joan M. Butler, 24, Overland Park, was last seen by friends and family June 18. Theresa Brown, 22, and her roommate Christine Rusch, 22, both of Lenexa, were last seen by friends and family June 26.

got worse."

The people of the Kickapoo tribe have learned to expect little from the federal government. Mattwaoshshe said the land allotted for the reservation now is a section measuring 5 miles by 6 miles, a fraction of its original size.

In 1854, the Kickapoo people were put in northeast Kansas, Mattwaoshshe said. At that time, the reservation stretched west to Sabetha, 40 miles east to Leavenworth and north for several miles into Nebraska, 40 miles from the current reservation.

"For one thing, (the federal government) just put the Kickapoo people here, and they said, 'Survive,'" Mattwaoshshe said. "I imagine it was probably 20 or 30 years before it shrunk down, but I imagine it was probably 75 years before it got down to this size."

The reservation land was gradually repossessed by the government, Mattwaoshshe said.

"This K-20 Highway (running through the reservation) — they more or less just stole it away from people who owned the land around it," Mattwaoshshe said. "It was the same way when the Rock Island Railroad came through. It was more or less a 'Here's a jug of wine and $100 for it' kind of thing."

Most of the progress on the reservation must come from the initiative of the tribal council. In the last six years, a water plant, gas station and senior citizens' center have been built, Cisneros said.

While members of the reservation who have not lived there all their lives strive for such progress,

"When I used to live in K.C. and grew up there, I was just the same as everybody else. Out here, they treated me like shit. The closer you get to a city by a reservation, the worse it gets."

—Lisa Finch cashier
Kickapoo Trading Post

Cisneros said older members or people who have always lived on the reservation fight change.

"They're trying to keep their little world — which I don't blame them — but you know, you can't do that 24 hours a day," Cisneros said. "When they have their powwows and put on their costumes, that's what I call doing their thing. But the rest of the time, you gotta drive these cars, you gotta go to work. They just don't want to accept it. They want to have things the way they were."

In 1988, the U.S. Department of the Interior listed the unemployment rate among Native Americans in Kansas as 17 percent. While the median Native American unemployment rate among states was 40 percent, the national unemployment rate for all Americans was 5.5 percent.

Different ways of thinking account for a large part of Native Americans' unemployment problem, Mattwaoshshe said. Attitudes developed on the reservation may make it difficult to fit into "white man's world."

"There's two different ways of life: on the reservation and off the reservation," Mattwaoshshe said. "When you're off the reservation, it's more competitive. You gotta have more desire, more drive to get anywhere. On the reservation, it's more of a casual life where you don't have to have that desire, that aggressiveness, that you need off the reservation."

The increased competition often makes Native Americans decide to go back to the reservation. For some, though, discrimination plays a part in that decision.

Lisa Finch, 24, Trading Post cashier, went to high school in Horton. She said she went to Kansas City, Mo., where she grew up, and Dallas to find work because of discrimination in the towns around the reservation. Finch returned to northeast Kansas when her husband got a job at a Hiawatha factory.

"I don't think if I didn't have work experience in Kansas City and Dallas that I would have had work experience when I came back here," Finch said.

"The stereotype is of lazy, drunken Indians," Mattwaoshshe said. "We have our share, like white people and black people, but we're all in the same boat. It's just that Indian people just aren't as aggressive as white people are."

Discrimination isn't limited to hiring, Finch said. The area around the reservation treats Native Americans differently than white people, she said.

"When I used to live in K.C. and grew up there, I was just the same as everybody else," Finch said. "Out here, they treated me like shit. The closer you get to a city by a reservation, the worse it gets."

Mattwaoshshe said in area grocery stores, for example, clerks would follow Native Americans around.

"They'll come and watch the Indian and make sure he doesn't fill his pockets," Mattwaoshshe said.

Although Mattwaoshshe said white people seem to treat him better than they did 15 or 20 years ago, the stereotypes are still strong. He expects them to die out with new generations, though, possibly even to the point where Native Americans are elected to government.

"I think it will happen, but I don't expect to see it in my lifetime," Mattwaoshshe said. "But then, we almost had a black president, so you never know."

Self-confidence beats blindness

Nemmers credits her father for guidance and attitude

By Angela Tholstrup
Collegian Reporter

The auburn-haired student with big brown eyes and a ready laugh never lets her blindness be a handicap.

"There are a lot of different blind people like there are a lot of different sighted people," said Sylvia Nemmers, graduate student in biochemistry. "The ones not doing really well may not have the self-confidence or believe in themselves."

Nemmers is legally blind. She can see light, shapes and movement, but cannot distinguish faces or objects unless they are about six inches from her eyes.

Nemmers' father and one brother are also blind. Her father empathized with her blindness, but he didn't believe in sympathy.

"(My father's attitude) was my godsend, because kids are cruel," Nemmers said. "I wore thick glasses and was kind of dorky-looking."

Nemmers started her education at a school for the blind, which she attended for a couple years. At a young age, children can't read eye charts so it's hard to determine how bad the vision is, she said.

Then Nemmers transferred to the same school as her siblings. She was teased by the other kids because she had picked up some strange behaviors from the school for the blind.

Nemmers said she learned that no child except one who is multi-handicapped should go to a school for the handicapped.

"If strictly blind, the student should go to a training center to learn braille, to learn mobility skills and some basics," Nemmers said. "The best thing is to put the child in a public school to learn to deal with the real world."

The student may someday want to go to college, and the transition would be easier if the student went to a public school, Nemmers said.

After graduating from high school, Nemmers went to college to major in biology because she liked the sciences and a challenge.

Nemmers tried to ease herself up to a large university.

"I started at this really tiny one, then moved up to a medium one and made it to a larger one," Nemmers said.

She went to St. Ambrose College in Davenport, Iowa, for one year and studied for two years at Drake University in Des Moines. She graduated from K-State in May 1989 with a bachelor's degree in biochemistry.

Nemmers said the only time she thought her blindness was going to stop her from doing something was during her freshman year at college. She wanted to go on a desert biome study in the Big Bend National Park in Texas.

Nemmers' biology instructor said she couldn't go to Texas because he didn't want the responsibility. The chemistry instructor, the other sponsor, was willing to let her go.

"I told them to test me, and if I didn't pass, I wouldn't go," Nemmers said. She went with her instructors to a park, where she climbed rocks and walked all over.

The last question one of the instructors asked was, "What color is that sign way over there?"

"I said brown and gold," Nemmers said.

Nemmers got to go on the desert biome study even though she couldn't see the sign and had made a guess.

"I may have gotten a few more prickles in my legs than everyone else did, but I am willing to do it," Nemmers said.

The attitude that a challenge is made to be overcome helped Nemmers deal with doing laboratory work and homework.

She said she is slower at experiments than other students, and she had problems sucking up chemicals in a pipette. She and her professor made syringes function as pipettes.

Nemmers can read if the print is large, but not for very long. She asks her fellow students in classes to take notes for her, which she then has enlarged.

Because Nemmers has difficulty reading, she has readers read the assigned chapters for the course aloud and record them on a tape recorder.

Nemmers is the national president of the National Alliance of Blind Students. It is a sub-unit of the American Council of the Blind.

The NABS holds seminars every summer to help blind students.

Abortion wrong in any circumstance

Abortion is the most important and controversial topic in the world today. The seriousness of this issue is so misunderstood by the general public that the recent uproar between the two sides, pro-choice and pro-life, due to the Supreme Court's recent ruling on abortion, has released a flood of feelings in the United States.

I have been watching the press releases, TV news and some of the talk shows where abortion is the issue. It's really too bad that the two sides cannot communicate. They have made no progress in their arguments due to misrepresentation and the asking of the wrong questions.

The pro-lifers' problem is that they haven't asked or stressed the right questions. The pro-choicers' problem is they base their beliefs on opinions and ill-guided assumptions.

Here is the scenario: Pro-lifers release supporting scientific facts to the public, which is very important and was the only way to set their basis of the pro-life stance. We have seen this is not enough. They can't just show the facts and figures. They need to probe a little deeper into the pro-choicers' feelings and see where the root of the feelings come from. I do feel the pro-lifers have won in the area of facts on abortion. Due to the fact that Kansas is one of the top three abortion states in America, according to the Bureau of Statistics, many people did not know that life before birth has been proven.

A.W. Liley, world-renowned research professor in perinatal physiology, has said, "Biologically, at no stage of development can we subscribe to the view that the unborn child is a mere appendage of the mother. Genetically, the mother and baby are separate individuals from conception."

Many people do not realize that at the moment of conception our hair color, eye color, etc., is determined. Most pregnancies are not detected until the sixth week. By then, the baby's heart has been beating for three weeks, brain waves are detectable and the nervous system has been intact for two weeks. By the eighth week, the baby's skeleton, arms, legs, fingerprints, toes and circulatory system are complete. The baby even sucks its thumb. The evidence is mounting. It's only a matter of years now before the new generation has all the facts and abortion laws will be abolished.

For those who still deny this is proof, apply the concept of substantiating the existence of the sun and the person next to you. Do we know the sun exists? The sun itself is a self-evident fact. To answer such a question, we rely on facts and figures. To deny that a pre-born baby is a human would be like denying the existence of the sun. Pro-choicers see this scientific evidence but refuse to listen. Their factual evidence "propaganda" was to pour a scrambled abortion on to a petri dish and tell us it was not a human being. To me this seems like the concept of "I see only what I want to see." As I said before, facts are not enough.

Matthew L. Wasko

GUEST COLUMNIST

To help the two sides communicate, we must try to understand why the pro-choicers feel the way they do. One of their biggest arguments is if the laws are overturned, back-alley abortions will still continue. Considering this fact, this is the woman's choice, not the baby's. The unborn child had no say in determining its future. Other so-called powerful arguments that can be answered with one statement are: "Who is going to take care of this child?" And "What about the poor?" Now that we know the child is a human being, do we still consider such questions of little relevance compared to a child's life? The question of the baby's care is not impossible to resolve. How to redeem a murder is.

The one phrase I hear the most is "It's my body, so it's my choice." Yes, it is your body, but it is so hard to accept that their is another human life within you? During pregnancy there is a totally new and separate human being. To destroy this child before birth — is this discrimination due to place of residence? Actually what right are we taking away from the woman, the chance to give birth to human life or the popular opinion?

The one thing I'll credit the pro-choicers for doing well is hiding behind phrases that cannot be backed by pure logic. They hold opinions, not beliefs. An opinion is an "I-just-think-that" statement. A belief is an analytically studied and reasoned decision. A decision where the quality of life itself outweighs the decision of life.

The root of the problem lies within pro-choicers. For them to defer from what has been considered the norm is unacceptable and interfering. Accepting abortion as murder would unsettle pro-choicers' feelings. People today do not like to admit they made a mistake. This is the problem with today's society. At this very moment, we are on the rebound of a mistake we made in 1973. America is not ready yet to admit to its mistake. It's just now getting to the point where people are finally standing up and saying something.

The pro-lifers increase the unfriendly feelings by yelling and screaming "murderer" and "you're a killer" at the pro-choicers. This does not help the situation but hurts it. Yelling and screaming has never solved anything. People do not listen, they get defensive.

In this "me" society these tragedies all extend from the concept that so many live by today — selfishness. So along with selfishness comes murder, rape, drugs, etc., but the worst of all is our legalized abortion rights. We are people that have been brought up in a stubborn and selfish period. As I said before, people only hear what they want to hear. I'm sure that someone will find something wrong with this article and bag on it while forgetting what I'm trying to say altogether.

It just breaks down to this: pro-choicers are afraid to examine the real issue and facts. A man or woman with little knowledge is a dangerous person. To take action on such knowledge is a catastrophe. That is what pro-choice is all about.

Due to people acting upon this knowledge, there have been more deaths due to abortion since 1973 (more than 20 million), than in all the American wars combined (1,160,558). Within 50 to 100 years, the abortion era will be looked upon as the greatest tragedy in the history of mankind.

My statements are not opinion, but a fact of what's right and wrong. To believe in each other's opinion is fine. The real tragedy today is when you extend that philosophy into the concept of life and death. Abortion is blatantly wrong. There are no situations or circumstances that make it OK. Human life should not be based on opinion.

If you really care or are serious about abortion, look into it for yourself. Get information on both sides of the issue, and remain completely open minded to make your personal decision. To look into the issue and see the facts with a biased opinion is a sign of confirmed ignorance.

Local landlords should take note of tragedy

For a lot of people, fire and safety codes are a waste of time and a bureaucratic mess. Tell that to the 87 people who died Saturday night in a fire in New York's Happy Land social club.

The Bronx drinking establishment had been closed down and given warnings several times by the city because it failed to meet fire codes. The club was operating illegally when the fire trapped nearly everyone inside.

Bodies were found stacked up at the exits, which were blocked by the fire. Many other bodies were found on the second floor where they couldn't escape the toxic smoke. Even though firefighters responded to the fire in only three minutes, the people inside didn't have a chance.

It doesn't matter if you live in the Big Apple or the Little Apple. Fire codes are not just needless garbage made up by bureaucrats with nothing better to do. Those 87 people died needlessly. Some people who are attempting to fight positive steps to make buildings safe, like the rental inspection program, should take notice.

The tragedy in New York escalated because the owners of the property cared more about money than safety, and the city failed in its enforcement of the codes. That sounds suspiciously like the situation here in Manhattan, with some landlords yelling about the cost of a rental inspection program and attempting to water it down. Maybe they should learn a lesson from this tragedy before it strikes closer to home.

Griffin eased strain of coaching transition

Thank you, Gaye Griffin.

After the resignation of Matilda Mossman as head women's basketball coach Dec. 5, Griffin took over the Lady Cat program as interim head coach.

She was offered no assurances by athletic director Steve Miller that her term of employment as head coach would last any longer than the season, but Griffin helped ease the transition for all involved and went about her job like the professional she is.

With Griffin, who came to K-State as an assistant to Mossman two years ago, the Lady Cats ripped off an impressive string of victories to open Big Eight Conference play.

Though the team slumped down the stretch and lost its chance at a conference regular season championship, Griffin was able to help her team bounce back and make a run at the postseason tournament title.

In the postseason tourney, the Lady Cats again found themselves in second place when the dust had cleared. But that they were there at all is nothing short of miraculous.

True, Griffin did inherit a team with several talented players who had played together previously.

True, she wasn't an outsider coming into a situation where she knew virtually no one.

And true, as the title "interim" would indicate, she should have expected that she might get passed over for the head coaching position when Miller moved to fill it permanently.

But it is also true that Griffin put her personal interests aside in an attempt to help her players succeed now and in an effort to help the program maintain the status it had previously achieved. She succeeded on both counts.

Such unselfishness is rare in today's dog-eat-dog world of college and professional athletes, but if there's a word that would best describe Griffin, it's "unselfish."

That's a tribute to her.

Thanks, coach, for making a possibly unbearable year a bit more bearable for all involved.

Namibia finally free

The people of Namibia and the world at large, had been patiently looking forward with optimism to March 21. Midnight Wednesday marked an end to 75 years of colonial rule by apartheid South Africa. The South African flag was lowered for the last time in Windhoek, the capital of the Republic of Namibia.

The South African flag was replaced by a variant Southwest Africa People's Organization flag of blue, red and green horizontal stripes, as the first President of the new Republic of Namibia, Dr. Sam Nujoma, was sworn in by the United Nations Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar.

Nujoma led a long protracted guerrilla war against the South African occupation. The Namibian independence process followed the UN supervised elections held in Namibia last November, from which SWAPO emerged as a victorious party, winning 41 out of 72 seats. The United States played a major role as a peace broker during the negotiated settlement that led to the Namibian independence.

Of course, the SWAPO victory didn't come as a surprise. The Namibian, one of the daily papers in Namibia, stated on Sept. 25, 1989 that "It was SWAPO which had consistently carried the banner of the Namibian people's struggle against colonialism." Therefore, as the new President put it in his political campaign speech in September 1989, "it is no exaggeration that for the past 30 years of its existence, SWAPO has stood firm where others have wavered, and has sacrificed much for the cause of Namibia's liberation where others have compromised."

Indeed, March 21 will be remembered as a special day in the history of Namibia, Africa and the world in general in that it will be remembered for the same reasons we all hoped for. Thanks to SWAPO's liberation struggle and the international community which forced South Africa to the negotiating table, the independence of Namibia, with its gross freedoms and fundamental rights, was born.

Angula L. Martin

Namibia boasts one of the most moderate and democratic constitutions in the African continent. Among other things, as stated in The Namibian of Jan. 9, the constitution provides for "abolition of the death sentence; conscientious objection to compulsory military service will be permitted; citizenship after five years residence; a Bill of Fundamental Human Rights enforceable by the courts; prohibition of child labor; everyone entitled to a fair and public trial; compulsory schooling until 16 years of age; racial discrimination and apartheid shall be prohibited by an act of parliament; provisions for state of emergency in time of war," and so on.

The Namibian people had suffered for more than 100 years under colonial oppression, and had waited for too long for those freedoms and liberties.

Namibia is a large country, about the size of Texas and Oklahoma combined — 318,000 square miles — with a small population — about 2 million. The country boasts some of the most abundant natural resources in the world — diamonds, uranium, gold, copper, lead, zinc, silver, salt, gas, oil, arsenic oxide, as well as cattle, sheep and fish.

However, independence doesn't mean an end to social and economic problems left behind by South Africa. Namibians will work hard, according to Nujoma, "to heal the deep wounds which have been inflicted in the past." As speculated by Colleen L. Morna in the recent African Report of March-April 1990, the new government may inherit about "800 million rands — (about 400 million dollars) — debt, incurred on its behalf by South Africa." Namibia has no central bank and currency of its own as yet. That means Namibians will not have enough financial or technical know-how and managerial skills to cater to immediate problems. Therefore, Namibia may require some selective assistance from outside.

Initially, Namibia "will seek joint ventures and undertake social reforms using more effective tax control of mining, fishing and agriculture," according to Brian Wood, in Africa Events magazine, March 1989. These reforms will be an attempt to heal the economy, to redistribute unused farmlands to impoverished Namibians and extend technical assistance to them. One advantage is that the new state has adopted greater free-enterprise, mixed-economy policies which will attract foreign investors and donors to do business with Namibia in good faith. However, Namibia will have many friends to do business with because of its future potential as a reliable trading partner.

Lecturer says U.S.S.R. poses threat

By David Frese
Collegian Reporter

At a time when many would say it's time to bring the troops in from the Cold War, Soviet specialist James Sherr said the socialist monolith is hardly on its deathbed.

Many perceive Gorbachev as a unique reformer, but Sherr, lecturer in international relations at Lincoln College, Oxford University, England, told faculty members and students Monday that Gorbachev is not the first Soviet leader with revolutionary ideas.

"Gorbachev is the most accomplished Leninist since Lenin himself," Sherr said. "He is very much a part of the system. He is not the first Soviet leader seen as very radical. All Soviet leaders have been radical."

If the Soviet Union does not radically change its course, it will stagnate and eventually be eliminated as a superpower, he said.

Three separate military revolutions have occurred in which the basic tenets of war have been changed. In each, Sherr said, the Soviets have been forced to play catch-up with the other military powers.

The first was during the 1920s and '30s, when the race was for mass production of tank and aircraft. Josef Stalin oriented his five-year economic plans toward establishing an infrastructure that would support the means of doing so.

During the 1950s and '60s, the Soviets raced for nuclear and guided missile superiority, and Nikita Khrushchev aimed his defense policies of peaceful coexistence at achieving those objectives.

"Once you are in a period of revolutionary and technological development, you have no alternative but to clear that particular hurdle, master those technologies. Otherwise, you lose the capacity to remain a first-class military power," Sherr said.

Now in the age of the micro-processor, Stealth technology and the laser, the principles of war have changed even more.

"In Soviet eyes, what is particularly ominous about this technological revolution is that it means, in principle — and I have to stress in principle — it will be possible to do with conventional weapons what we are now able to do with nuclear weapons," he said.

Weapons will be able to destroy a target without the wholesale destruction of nuclear Armageddon, Sherr said.

"In the future there will be no such inefficiency," he said.

Soviets consider these new conventional weapons as equal to nuclear weapons, not because they are able to destroy a target and everything else in a given area, but because they are able to strike and destroy the target with pinpoint accuracy "without even sprinkling glass across the road," Sherr said.

After 15 years of devising a strategy in which to defeat NATO in Europe by all conventional means, one could imagine how frustrating it is for Soviets to have to start over devising a whole new offensive strategy, he said.

According to old battle strategies, the Soviets think they need a 4-to-1 advantage when attacking, Sherr said. With such thinking, it is clearly impossible for them to compete in a whole new war game.

"The official Warsaw Pact communiqué said ... 'under present conditions the use of armed force in all political disputes is impermissible,'" Sherr said.

Gorbachev did not come to power thinking the Warsaw Pact was expendable, but he knows its present form is not working, he said. Instead of abandoning the Pact, however, Gorbachev is insistent on making it work.

Also militarily thinking, Gorbachev understands that NATO is held together by a common enemy — the Soviet Union.

"Unfortunately, Gorbachev did not understand until recently the Warsaw Pact was held together by a common enemy, also the Soviet Union," Sherr said.

Sherr

Gorbachev is cordially hated in the Soviet Union," he said.

Gorbachev gets what he wants because the party members still vote the way they are told, Sherr said. Party members also don't want to make life difficult for Gorbachev because they are afraid the next leader could be worse. Some citizens think things are so bad that they can't get much worse, he said.

"The Soviet people are in a state of shock," Sherr said.

Speaker: Soviet political obstacles may be overcome

Bureaucracy blocks economic growth

By Lori Mikesell
Staff Reporter

Although the obstacles facing President Mikhail Gorbachev are large, his economic and political problems can be overcome, said Sir Bryan Cartledge, British ambassador to the Soviet Union from 1985 to 1988.

Cartledge, the principal of Linacre, a branch of Oxford University, spoke to the Manhattan chapter of the National English Speaking Union Monday.

"If a Russian peasant sees a neighbor with two cows and he has only one, rather than working harder to earn an extra cow, he tries to convince the party leadership to slaughter his neighbor's second cow," Cartledge said.

It's this mentality that has kept new Soviet reform laws from being implemented, he said.

"The reforms have not been put into effect because the existing bureaucratic leadership wants to keep its jobs, and the Russian people would rather settle for a lower standard of living than work hard," Cartledge said.

In addition, he said, attempts at economic reform have created new problems.

"Many Soviets couldn't adapt to new attitudes. They couldn't make decisions on their own. For too many years, the state had dictated too much to them," Cartledge said.

The result of this inability to change, he said, has been shortages in everything. In most cities, basic necessities such as soap and bread are rationed.

At the same time, the Soviet economy has ceased to grow, and wage inflation has reached 15 percent without an accompanying increase in production, Cartledge said.

All this has led to deepening disillusionment of the Soviet people toward reforms. Though extremely popular in the West, Gorbachev is unpopular among the Soviet people. Cartledge said this is because, to the people of the Soviet Union, Gorbachev hasn't delivered the prosperity he promised.

Gorbachev faces an election in five years, and Cartledge said if he is to remain in power, Gorbachev must improve the average Soviet citizen's daily life.

He said it will take a generation for the Soviet economy to be transformed, but providing more food in the short term could make the Soviet people believe that things are better.

"The Russian people are endlessly patient. All they want is some tangible sign that there is light at the end of the tunnel," he said.

To provide that light, Cartledge said Gorbachev has begun to reform the political system. In 1988 Gorbachev unveiled a new political process — a Supreme Soviet elected by the people, he said.

"The Soviet people took to the general elections like ducks to water," Cartledge said. "They voted in massive numbers, and not like the Communist party leadership wanted."

This newly elected political body has been uninhibited in its debate, Cartledge said.

"With the sanction of fear lifted, people found they could say and do things which before would have landed them in jail or Siberia," he said. "They have attacked party leadership, the KGB and even Lenin, the last great taboo."

With these new liberties, however, Cartledge said the Soviets feel free to voice their discontent and revive their old grievances between religions and nationalities. The reforms have caused some of the problems in the Baltic states, he said.

Although the obstacles seem insurmountable, and the odds are against Gorbachev, he's a man of great vision, Cartledge said.

"He wants to see the Soviet Union become a genuine superpower with a strong economy and strong military. He wants the country to become a power which treats its people as it should," he said.

IT'S JUST MADNESS

We need people more like Griffin

Gaye Griffin could let her emotions run rampant. She could dispel all of her bitterness upon the public. She also could have skipped town and deserted everyone when she was told the news last Thursday that she would not be offered the job as the next Lady Cats coach.

That's how some coaches would have preferred to deal with what happened to Griffin last week. But that's not Gaye Griffin.

No, the personable 27-year-old from Arkansas decided not to dodge reality, and was even willing to answer almost any questions the press may have had after the news reached the public that she would not be returning to K-State.

Griffin was even a sight of optimism and relief as she and several friends helped her pack up her belongings from her Manhattan apartment Monday afternoon.

Since Dec. 5, when then-head coach Matilda Mossman stepped down from the Lady Cats helm for "personal reasons," Griffin, who took over as interim coach, never knew what the future would hold for her at K-State.

In an eerie sort of way, it's a bit ironic how she was thrown into a job that she obviously wanted to keep, only to be booted out after taking the team to a 20-10 record this season.

"It was kind of like a roller coaster, I guess — ups and downs," Griffin said. "There's no way I'll ever forget this year. I hope it never happens to (the players) again. Not only them, I hope it happens to nobody. I don't want it to happen to anybody."

"Nobody deserves the emotion and all that ... just over a game."

At times Monday, Griffin would begin to show a little of the emotion that she's gone through. Especially when she tried to explain what happened Thursday night when associate athletic director Jim Epps called her to tell her that Drake's Susan Yow would be taking the Lady Cats position.

Griffin even shrugged off that Epps was the caller Thursday, and not Athletic Director Steve Miller.

"It's another expected. You don't really worry about it. You just go on," she said.

"All week, I think I felt I really wasn't going to get (the job)," Griffin said. "And then, after I heard that Susan (Yow) had been hired her whole staff down ... that's pretty realistic, right there."

"Then, Jim Epps called, and he said, 'You didn't get the job. We've offered it to —' that's where Griffin's emotions started to show, but she fought through it and was able to finish."

"We've offered it to Susan," she said.

That's exactly what Gaye Griffin has done all season — fought through the emotions and the adversity. The emotional roller coaster would have been too much to ask of anyone, but she was the one in charge. Back in December, she was the one who had to lead her newly-acquired team, no matter how emotionally drained she was.

Then came probably the hardest part of the year. Friday, Griffin called her squad in and told them the news.

"They were very emotional, shocked, upset, mad ... just typical feelings you're gonna have," Griffin said. "I tried to explain that 'You can be mad at Steve Miller, and you can be mad at Jim Epps, and you can be mad at Gaye Griffin or whatever, but you can't be mad at Susan Yow. She didn't have anything to do with it.'"

But the players' emotions ran

Golfers tied for seventh

From Staff and Wire Reports

GOLETA, Calif. — After the first two rounds of the 19-team Pacific Coast Intercollegiate Golf Championship Monday, the K-State men are in a three-way tie for seventh place.

K-State, New Mexico State and Cal State-Northridge each shot two-round totals of 593 at the Sand Piper Golf Course.

Nevada-Reno jumped out in front in the team race with 575. UCLA was second at 579 and California third at 580.

Individually, Reno's Kevin Miscimins was atop the leader board after day one with a score of 139.

K-State was led individually by senior Jeff Sedorek, who carded an even-par 144 after the second round Monday. Sedorek is in 10th place overall.

He was followed by Brett Vuillemin, who is in 38th place at 149; Richard Laing, 51st at 151; Chris Thompson, 68th at 153; and Bobby Donnellan, 81st at 155.

Final-round play at the Pacific Coast Intercollegiate will be completed today.

The women's golf team will finally get its season into full swing when it travels to Norman, Okla., for the Sue Berning Invitational this weekend.

Exhibition baseball season finally opens

By The Associated Press

PHOENIX — Finally, baseball. Ryne Sandberg hit a home run. Gary Carter became a hero. Oakland rallied to win in the ninth.

All in all, not a bad opening day for such a skewed spring. There was even an argument and some strategy Monday.

A few bumps, of course. More errors than managers wanted and minor league umpires in place of major league ones.

Even before the games began, some things seemed different. A lot of players spent a lot of time signing autographs.

"Maybe a little more so this time," San Francisco's Robby Thompson said, obliging a bunch of kids. "Maybe it's a way of saying, 'We're back and we're glad you're back, too.'"

But, the Giants-Cleveland game wasn't a sellout. There were more empty seats than usual at low-slung Scottsdale Stadium and some of the fans were impatient to get back what many felt had been rudely taken away by the month-long lockout.

When Mitch Webster stepped in to lead off for Cleveland, the umpire told him to step out because ESPN, televising its first exhibition game, needed a few more seconds to get ready.

Webster stood around the plate briefly, and the crowd began shouting.

"Get on with it!" one fan yelled. "We've waited long enough."

By the first few innings, Brook Jacoby, Felix Fermin and Matt Williams already had made errors. By the end of the game, most fans were happy.

Carter, signed as a free agent in the off-season, won it for San Francisco with a double in the ninth inning. That ended a long day for someone else who couldn't wait to get started, rookie ESPN announcer Norm Hitzges.

"I was up at 4 a.m. this morning to do a three-hour talk show back home," said Hitzges, a broadcaster for five years with the Texas Rangers. "I just stayed up, I was so anxious."

Ten minutes away at Phoenix Stadium, a packed house watched the World Series champion Athletics play the area's favorite team, the Chicago Cubs.

Sandberg went 3-for-3 with a home run and double as the Cubs, behind Rick Sutcliffe's three shutout innings, took a 5-1 lead into the eighth. The Athletics scored three times and then in the ninth loaded the bases with two outs.

Up stepped Steve Howard, a power-and-speed prospect who is still a few years away.

"Everybody was getting into the game and playing except me," he said. "I was wondering when it would be my turn."

With a 1-1 count, Cubs manager Don Zimmer went to the mound to talk strategy with Paul Assenmacher. Howard hit the next pitch up the middle for a game-winning two-run single.

"That's the situation you always play with your friends, isn't it?" he smiled later. "Two outs, bases loaded, bottom of the ninth. But when you pretend, you always go deep, grand slam. Here, I just wanted a hit."

With major league umpires still upset that they weren't consulted when baseball revised its regular season schedule, minor league umpers are filling in. They're doing it with the OK of the umpires' union, and are getting a chance to show their stuff.

"I'm just like one of the young rookies in big league camp," Hank Schwarz, a three-year veteran of the Texas League, said. "I know I won't be in the majors for several years, but it's nice to be here and see what it's like."

Dan Wickham got razzed by fans when he called the first pitch of the season a ball, and got some words from San Francisco manager Roger Craig after calling a balk. Craig even felt moved to leave his fold-out chair to walk out and talk to Wickham.

"I couldn't sleep last night, I wanted to get here so bad," Craig said. "This sure beats doing everything else we were doing."

Davis deals homer, KC loses

By The Associated Press

HAINES CITY, Fla. — Rookie Mickey Pina's eighth-inning home run off Mark Davis, last year's National League Cy Young winner, gave the Boston Red Sox a 2-1 victory over the Kansas City Royals Monday in the exhibition opener for both teams.

Pina's home run cleared the left-field bleachers and spoiled the Royals' debut of Davis, who signed as a free agent from the San Diego Padres for $13 million for four years.

Daryl Irvine got the victory, while Lee Smith retired all six batters he faced to earn a save.

Right-hander Storm Davis, another free agent acquisition making his Royals' debut, allowed one unearned run in three innings.

A fielding error by shortstop Kurt Stillwell allowed Wade Boggs to reach first leading off the game. After advancing to third on infield outs, Boggs scored on Dwight Evans' fielder's choice grounder to Stillwell. The Royals tied the score in the fifth. Bo Jackson led off the inning with a triple to right and scored on Jim Eisenreich's single.

Red Sox starter Mike Boddicker allowed only two singles, both in the first inning, and no runs in his four innings.

This March may be maddest ever

By The Associated Press

Has there ever been an NCAA tournament with more buzzer-beaters, fantastic finishes, colossal comebacks, sensational shots and eerie endings?

So far 60 games have been played, and almost half (28) have been decided by four points or less, including seven 1-pointers and 10 2-pointers.

Five games have gone to overtime, and more than a dozen have gone down to the last shot.

There's simply never been a tighter tournament. According to the NCAA, only the 1975 tournament had more overtimes (six) and none have had more 1-point games.

"It's the most exciting tournament I can remember," CBS commentator Billy Packer said Monday. "It seems like almost every game has been decided in the final minute."

On Thursday night in East Rutherford, N.J., Connecticut's Tate George caught a length-of-the-court pass and swished a 17-foot jumper at the buzzer to beat Clemson 71-70 at the East Regional.

The following night in New Orleans, Kenny Anderson sank a disputed, game-tying jumper as regulation ended and Dennis Scott scored with eight seconds remaining in overtime to give Georgia Tech an 81-80 victory over Michigan State at the Southeast Regional. Replays showed the horn sounded before Anderson released his shot, but officials said the basket counted.

On Saturday afternoon, Duke's Christian Laettner created a second Meadowlands Miracle by hitting a double-pumping, 15-footer at the buzzer to beat UConn 79-78 in overtime and send the Blue Devils to the Final Four.

"I'm surprised by all the buzzer-beaters because there's some luck involved," Packer said, "but I'm not surprised by all the close games."

Packer said the 3-point rule, shot clock, freshman eligibility and increased television exposure have made college basketball more competitive than ever.

"You don't have dominant teams anymore," he said. "Just look at what happened this year in the Big East, the ACC and the Big Ten. Nobody expected Connecticut, Clemson and Michigan State to win their conferences, but they did."

In the opening round, Ball State stunned No. 22 Oregon State 54-53 when Paris McCurdy hit a baseline jumper at the buzzer, was fouled and made the winning free throw with no time remaining and no other players on the court.

That night, Ohio State overcame a 12-point deficit against Providence in the final seven minutes, tied it on Alex Davis' 3-pointer with three seconds left in regulation and prevailed 84-83 in overtime.

The following day, Northern Iowa shocked No. 11 Missouri 74-71 on Maurice Newby's 3-pointer with one second left. In the next round, North Carolina pulled out a 79-77 victory over Oklahoma on Rick Fox's short bank shot with one second left.

Syracuse and Texas each survived the second round because of last-second rejections by their big men. Derrick Coleman blocked Bryant Stith's inside attempt to preserve the Orangemen's 63-61 victory over Virginia and Guillermo Myers swatted away Tony Jones' layup to give the Longhorns a 73-72 upset of Purdue.

The Tigers scored the game's final nine points to beat Brigham Young 49-47 in the opening round, then rallied from 19 points down to defeat La Salle 79-75. Clemson overcame another 19-point deficit against UConn before George hit his buzzer-beater.

Marty Haws of Brigham Young had a chance to tie Clemson with eight seconds left, but blew a wide-open layup off a lob pass. Ball State used a similar pass on its final play against UNLV, but David Butler intercepted it to preserve a 69-67 victory for the Runnin' Rebels.

Several teams got off desperation shots that could have tied or won games, but Kansas' Rick Calloway, LSU's Maurice Williamson, Michigan State's Ken Redfield and Minnesota's Kevin Lynch were off the mark.

NIT finals set with Vanderbilt, St. Louis

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — The stage is set for the NCAA's first basketball final of the season as Vanderbilt and St. Louis University prepare to do battle tonight at Madison Square Garden in the NIT title game.

Vanderbilt 75, Penn State 62
In the first semifinal game Monday night, Vanderbilt broke open a close game with a 14-0 second-half surge and Scott Draud scored 20 points as the Commodores beat Penn State 75-62 to advance.

The Commodores (20-14) will be playing in a national championship game for the first time.

Vanderbilt, which finished in a tie for eighth place in the Southeastern Conference, controlled the game virtually throughout, trailing only once against the Atlantic 10 Conference runner-up.

Bench strength played a vital part in the game as Vanderbilt reserves outscored the Penn State subs 29-9, with Morgan Wheat contributing 13 points, Todd Milholland 11 and Charles Mayes getting five off the bench.

Penn State, playing in its first NIT semifinal game since 1954, is 24-9. Freddie Barnes led the Nittany Lions with 18 points while James Barnes had 12.

After Penn State had closed an 11-point deficit to 48-43 with 5½ minutes gone in the second half, the Commodores made their decisive run.

St. Louis 80, New Mexico 73

In Monday's second semifinal Anthony Bonner had 24 points and 19 rebounds and Jeff Luechtefeld scored a career-high 19 points, leading St. Louis into the final of the NIT for the second consecutive year with an 80-73 victory over New Mexico.

Luechtefeld, averaging only 6.5 points for the season but 14.8 in four NIT games, and Bonner carried the Billikens into tonight's championship game.

Bonner, the nation's leading rebounder with 13.7 per game, scored eight points in the final six minutes for St. Louis (21-11), which lost to St. John's in last year's championship game.

The Billikens, making their 15th

NIT appearance, won the event in 1948 and lost in the final in 1961 and 1989.

New Mexico (20-13), making a record seventh consecutive appearance in the NIT but its first trip to the semifinals since 1964, was led by Darrell McGee with 23 points, 18 in the second half.

Luc Longley, the Lobos' 7-foot-2 junior center averaging 18.5 points and 9.5 rebounds, finished with 12 points and 18 rebounds.

The Billikens led 53-49 with 10 minutes left after a three-pointer by McGee before Charles Newberry, who scored 15 points, hit consecutive three-pointers for a 10-point St. Louis advantage.

Finance Club to travel to Europe for study

Adviser: Recent foreign developments provide students excellent opportunity

By Samantha Farr
Collegian Reporter

Members of the K-State Finance Club will travel to London May 21 through 28 for independent study of Europe 1992.

Europe 1992 is the plan to eliminate all of the national barriers to travel, employment, investment and trade among 12 West European nations. The 12 members of the European Community will merge into a single trading block in 1992.

Ali Fatemi, associate professor of finance and the club's faculty adviser, said 19 individuals, including himself, will go to London. He said 75 percent of the funding for the trip will come from the students themselves and the other 25 percent will come from a donation and fundraisers.

"Gene Bonnell, the former chief financial officer of Phillips Petroleum Company and an alumni of K-State, has contributed to the trip," Fatemi said.

The Finance Club is open to anyone interested in the area of finance, regardless of major or program of study.

"We've been sponsoring field trips to Chicago for three years, and I've always wanted us to go beyond that," Fatemi said. "The developments in Europe make this the perfect time to go observe what's going on."

Christine Wallace, president of the club and junior in finance, said the high-priority goal of the club is to try to bridge the gap between students and the business world.

"We try to get a feel for the professional world while we're still in school," she said. "The club helps give us a little more insight than just the classroom."

Wallace said the cost per individual for the trip is $950. The student will pay $750, and the additional $200 will come from the donation and club funds.

Fatemi said club funds are a combination of membership fees, fundraising activities and Student Government Association allocation.

"We've had a lot of support from everyone," Wallace said. "The dean has helped us arrange fund-raisers and given the club some extra support."

The itinerary for the trip focuses on scheduled tours and presentations at the London Stock Exchange, the Parliament and several other international investment banks and financial institutions, she said.

"The opportunity to go overseas and see so many industries that are part of my major will help in knowing the basics and getting a broader sense of finance," Wallace said.

Fatemi said students are being encouraged to study Europe 1992. After returning from the trip, students will write on their understanding of the study and their personal experiences.

Certain buildings accessible 24 hours

By Samantha Farr
Collegian Reporter

Although the KSU Police Department is responsible for locking a majority of the campus buildings at 6 p.m., students still have access to many classrooms and work areas.

"Most buildings with computer labs are open, if not all the time, at least the majority of the time," Lt. Richard Howard said. "There are always people at Seaton Hall."

Spur-of-the-moment access to campus buildings for individuals does not usually happen, Howard said.

"We won't let anybody into a closed building without a legitimate reason," he said. "Legitimate means something like a faculty member who forgot some papers or a similar situation."

Larry Garvin, director of the facilities planning office, said any group or organization can place a request to use a room after hours.

"They can go through the scheduling clerk in facilities management," Garvin said. "If needed, they can even request custodial help if there is going to be any food served."

Howard said a list informs

Gallery 6 features variety

By Angela Tholstrup
Collegian Reporter

The white walls of Gallery 6, displaying artwork by students or guest artists, can be seen from the sidewalk on the north side of the Art Building.

Gallery 6, the basement room with windows, is open to the public 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. The number of visitors is unknown because no guest book is kept.

The gallery displays work by a variety of artists using media such as sculpture, painting, design, drawing, printmaking and crafts. The displays run at least two weeks to a month at the longest, said James Munce, associate professor of art.

Munce is in charge of scheduling the shows for senior candidates in the Bachelor of Fine Arts program. The number of shows depends on the number of graduating seniors, Munce said.

"Generally, graduating students do not want to show their work too early in the semester," Munce said. "They want to show their latest works."

Rex Replogle, associate professor of art, schedules the other displays around the BFA candidates' shows.

"We might have an off-campus show from community artists, then a student show or a show from some of the classes," he said.

Because the gallery is primarily for students' shows, it is hard to make long-range plans for shows in advance, Replogle said. Prominent artists' shows must be scheduled in advance, and sometimes the shows must be booked years ahead of time.

Until the student fine arts fee was passed, the art department didn't have funds to obtain some of the exhibits it would have liked, Replogle said. The department hopes to use some of the funds from the fee for exhibits in galleries.

When the art department moved to the present building from Justin Hall, classes met in what is now Gallery 6. It wasn't an ideal classroom space, Replogle said, but it was used as a storage room after classrooms were secured in Bluemont Hall, said Duane Noble, associate professor of art.

Military women say Army fits them

By Amy Hadlock
Collegian Reporter

Women don't have to give up their femininity to join the military, said Capt. Carolyn Carroll, senior in social science.

"A lot of people think that if a woman joins the Army she is trying to be like a man," Carroll said. "I don't think that's true. A woman in the Army is just as feminine and just as good a mother and wife as any other woman can be. I'm the mother of six children and I'm just as feminine as any other mother."

"I joined the National Guard in 1975 because I needed a job," Carroll said. "I went to flight school six years ago and then continued in the test pilot course. I'm currently a helicopter maintenance test pilot."

Women in the Army believe they have the same opportunity for advancement as men, said Maj. Lynn Pepperd, assistant professor of military science.

"I don't feel that there are any separate benefits for the men or the women in the Army. The benefits are the same," Pepperd said. "Men and women compete at the same level. Both can have the same chances in their own branches."

About 10 to 20 percent of Army personnel are women, she said.

Pepperd, who has served in the Army Reserve for more than 18 years, is the only female member of the military on the University's ROTC staff.

"In the early '70s, there were separate branches for women," Pepperd said. "There was the Women's Army Corp and also a separate nurses' branch."

In 1978, the separate branches for men and women were abolished except for certain combat arms specialties.

Pepperd said the Army doesn't recruit women as vigorously as they recruit men because they get enough women volunteers.

"I joined the Army because it provided something different than the regular 9-to-5 job," said Capt. Susan Neumann, graduate student in mechanical engineering.

Neumann is a maintenance officer at Ft. Riley and a full-time student. She said after graduation she plans to do research and development work for the Army.

"I stay in the Army because I like what I'm doing," Neumann said. "I feel that leading soldiers is more important than making a profit."

Neumann said she didn't think her gender affected her career in the military.

"Being a woman in the Army hasn't hurt me at all," Neumann said. "The Army values your performance more than your sex. If you can do the job, then you can do it."

Soviet troops beat, hold deserters

By The Associated Press

VILNIUS, U.S.S.R. — Soviet paratroopers stormed a psychiatric hospital before dawn Tuesday and captured about two dozen Lithuanians who had sought refuge there after deserting the Soviet army upon Lithuania's declaration of independence.

Some of the young men were beaten bloody, witnesses said, and a trail of blood led down the steps and out the front door of the hospital.

It was the first report of violence in the confrontation between Lithuania and the Kremlin that began March 11 with Lithuania's attempt to secede from the union.

A nurse said 10 to 15 of the approximately 38 men who had been staying at the hospital escaped.

"They beat them with their fists," a duty nurse said of the Soviet soldiers who broke into the hospital about 3 a.m. She refused to give her name. "I was afraid they would shoot me too."

On Monday, Soviet troops occupied another Communist Party building in Lithuania and an army helicopter dropped leaflets in the republic's capital calling for an anti-secession demonstration.

Lithuanian leaders, began talks with the Soviet army about their standoff with Moscow since declaring independence two weeks ago. They disagreed over whether the meeting reduced tension.

Sen. Edward Kennedy said in Moscow that President Mikhail S. Gorbachev reiterated his pledge not to use force except to save lives in the Baltic republic, which declared independence March 11.

Lithuanian Deputy Premier Romualdas Ozolas, one of two officials who met two Soviet military officers Monday, told reporters: "After coming out of this meeting, I can say the mood has changed."

"It is evident the conflict will not be escalated," he said.

But Lithuanian President Vytautas Landsbergis was more skeptical after the talks. He said he had not received clear assurances that no more buildings would be occupied and that the talks would mainly function "to avoid conflict between the military and citizens."

the organization with the University Activities Board in January 1989.

Todd Heitschmidt, agriculture senator and Faculty Senate representative, said to register an organization with UAB, the organization must be a student group and it must have a faculty adviser.

SHELF complied with these requirements by asking Harry Marsh, professor of journalism and mass communications, to serve as adviser. Marsh was the president of Friends of the Library at the time SHELF was founded.

Johnson said time constraints prevented them from doing more than registering SHELF with UAB. Llewelyn was the only member of SHELF last year.

"After I was elected Chairman of Student Senate, I was unable to really direct the activities of SHELF," Johnson said. "J.D. did some things, but he was busy as well. It was difficult to get anything done until somebody made it his primary focus."

In October 1989, Llewelyn appointed Ray Kowalczewski, arts and sciences senator, chairman of SHELF.

"J.D. had other things he had to do, so he just appointed me the head of everything," Kowalczewski said.

Johnson is no longer a member of SHELF, but does make suggestions to the group about possible steps it could take.

"As president, I talk to alumni, foundation members and other people," Johnson said. "Sometimes, I come up with ideas that I think SHELF might be able to use to help point out the importance of the library to these groups."

Kowalczewski said he is the sole officer of SHELF because the group only has 12 members.

When membership increases, Kowalczewski said, the group will elect more officers.

Brice Hobrock, dean of libraries, said the addition will take about five years to build. The cost of the addition will depend on when it is built, he said. If the addition is built in the late 1990s, it will cost about $21 million.

SHELF has sponsored two activities to achieve its goals, Kowalczewski said.

During fee payment this semester, members of SHELF and SGA obtained about 7,500 signatures on a petition, Kowalczewski said. The petition stated that K-State students consider the library addition to be the most critical academic need of the University and asked the Board of Regents, the Legislature and alumni to solicit funding for the addition.

SHELF sponsored the sit-in at Farrell Library Jan. 25 to make members of the Kansas Board of Regents, state legislators, alumni and the general public aware of the needs of the library, Johnson said.

SHELF is also directing its attention to the Foundation's Essential Edge campaign. Farrell's portion of the $100 million campaign is $3 million. Johnson said the petition and the sit-in helped raise alumni awareness about the need for improvements at Farrell.

"The general awareness about the library has helped quite a bit in additional donations for the Essential Edge campaign," Johnson said. "We're hoping to have a major donor for the library. That's what it's going to take. We have a case statement that talks about a hypothetical donor giving $1 million to $5 million and having the addition named after him."

Johnson said he and SHELF are awaiting the results of a study of Farrell to be undertaken by a consulting firm. The Kansas Board of Regents approved a request by President Jon Wefald Thursday for $25,000 to hire a firm to study the library's deficiencies. The results should be available next September.

Funding for SHELF activities has come from its members and Johnson. Llewelyn purchased the stationery printed for SHELF last year. This year, Johnson and Kowalczewski paid for printing the petitions and the flyers for the sit-in.

SHELF has requested $914 from Student Senate for the 1990-91 school year.

"We didn't get funded for this year," Kowalczewski said. "We hope to get at least some of the money."

high during the weekend, and talk of some players transferring entered several conversations.

"Oh yeah. You heard it," Griffin said. "But I've told them, 'If you quit now, you're going to quit later in life.' But if they feel that's what they need to do, then fine. But I would really highly consider the circumstances."

"They need to stay here and do what they can for the program."

If Griffin were to express ill feelings about the way the athletic department handled the situation, it would be understandable.

She knows she's proved herself and has no doubts about her coaching ability, and the numbers back her up.

She's 17-8 as a head coach. She finished second in the Big Eight's regular season and postseason tournament. And, what might be the most impressive of her accomplishments, she was able to do all of the above with a team that seemed to be in a state of disarray and misdirection just five games into the season.

Griffin's main deterrent, however, may have been her age and her experience. One year at the Big Eight level and 27 years in life apparently weren't enough when matched against Yow's 12 years as a head coach, even though Yow has had some sub-par seasons during her eight years at Drake, including 10-16 this year.

Griffin has proved she can coach at the Big Eight level and do it successfully, but maybe it's just as well. Griffin won't be the next Lady Cats head coach.

No matter what she did last year, next year Griffin would have been expected to prove herself all over again, and after what she did this year, she shouldn't need to face those pressures.

As she put it, "I didn't die." Amen to that. The world could use a lot more Gaye Griffins.

As far as what the future holds, Griffin said she is just going to take some time off, which includes a trip to the women's Final Four in Knoxville, Tenn., this week. She will leave today for what she said she hoped would be a week of "fun."

Griffin said she might like to coach in the future, but that she wouldn't limit her options, and the former three-time Arkansas state prep golf champion added that she may even have to head for the links.

"Maybe pro golf is for me, I don't know," she said.

But she did know what she was going to be doing for the next two weeks.

"I'll be going like this," she said as she tried to simulate her best Jack Nicklaus swing, and then she put her hand to her head and looked off in the distance, as if she had her whole future ahead of her.

And that she does.

der committed during the course of arson; 87 counts of murder by depraved indifference to human life; one count of attempted murder; and two counts of arson.

He was held under a suicide watch at the Rikers Island jail, authorities said. The case was turned over to a grand jury, and Gonzalez will not be asked to enter a plea unless an indictment is issued.

The deaths were believed to be the most ever charged to a single suspect in the continental United States.

"He is a double animal," said Rene J. Mena, 63, whose son, Rene Jr., 30, died. "Here, they're going to have good food for him, a book, a movie. In Central America, we don't do it that way."

District Attorney Robert T. Johnson said he hoped that if Gonzalez is convicted, he would get consecutive prison sentences amounting to 2,000 years.

An equally angry Mayor David Dinkins ordered a sweep of other suspected unlicensed social clubs. Police and a special task force visited 241 clubs citywide from midnight to 7 a.m. Monday and posted vacate orders on 187.

Only 23 of the clubs were open — most are closed on Sunday nights. There were 52 safety violations and 30 summonses issued, said Sgt. Dick Vreeland, a police spokesman.

In the East Tremont section of the Bronx, families drifted in and out of Public School 67, across from the fire-blackened club. A task force of state, city and private agencies there helped them make funeral arrangements and offered counseling and financial assistance.

"It's orderly, but it's not emotionally orderly," said Ken Curtin, a local Red Cross disaster relief director. "It's highly charged. There are a lot of outbursts of grief."

In Honduras, a foreign ministry spokesman said the government "is deeply moved by the deaths of many countrymen in New York." The Honduran telephone company said it was swamped with calls from people seeking word about loved ones.

The fire broke out at 3:40 a.m. Sunday, and those inside the club suffocated, burned or were trampled to death in a matter of minutes.

They had to "choose between a wall of fire or retreating and dying of asphyxiation," Johnson said.

Police believe five people escaped from the fire: three patrons; Gonzalez's former girlfriend, Lydia Feliciano; and the club disc jockey.

The disc jockey, identified in published reports as Ruben Valladares, was listed as stable at Jacobi Hospital with burns over 30 percent of his body.

son, who was Moss' roommate at the time of Harrison's death, in an unrelated case. Jackson testified in the preliminary hearing against Moss.

Robert Littrell, Manhattan attorney, agreed to take the case, and the judge approved the change.

The trial is set to begin at 9 a.m. May 29 at the Riley County Courthouse and is expected to last four days, according to the lawyers in the trial. A 12-member jury will empaneled for the trial.

Miller kept Moss' bond at $50,000, and ordered that he remain in custody until after the trial. Moss is being held at the Riley County Jail.

security of the time to close each building. He said security takes care of the opening and closing of only the exterior doors to buildings on campus.

"Student security officers come in and lock up at night," Howard said. "Once the buildings are locked, they re-check and patrol them."

Howard said officers on patrol look for any doors ajar, fire and safety hazards and things that are unusual.

"They are our eyes and ears out there," he said. "If they see something that poses a threat, they call an officer in charge and keep an eye on things until we get there."

At 10 p.m., civil service employees relieve student security officers and continue the patrol until locked buildings are opened at 7 a.m.

Garvin said a variety of things, such as security and safety, are used as a basis for determining access policies.

"One other basis is conservation of energy," Garvin said. "In past years, we have tried to shut down the campus over holidays to conserve energy. We try very hard to meet the student needs."

Yow takes over Lady Cats job

Former Drake women's basketball coach Susan Yow speaks to area media in the Bramlage Coliseum Legends Room Tuesday after she was introduced by Athletic Director Steve Miller as the next coach of the Lady Cats. Yow should be in her office full time by Tuesday.

New coach excited about challenge ahead for staff

By Chris Hays
Sports Editor

The way Susan Yow reacted when she met the press for the first time Tuesday as the coach of the K-State women's basketball team, one may have thought she was a little girl at Christmas time.

"This is almost overwhelming to me. It's just exciting to be here," Yow said, after being introduced by Athletic Director Steve Miller as the successor to former Head Coach Matilda Mossman and Interim Coach Gaye Griffin.

"This job, to me, has just fallen out of the sky. It's like the Lord has picked me up, and he's taken me from Drake, and he's dropped me right here, and this is where I'm supposed to be."

Actually, most of the credit for doing the dropping should go to Miller, who first dropped the idea to Yow, after he and the K-State search committee decided that the list of 38 applicants they had received was not up to the standards the committee desired.

"Gaye was the leading candidate for a long time, and the pool that we amassed was good at the top end, but not a good pool totally," Miller said. "So we went out and contacted people, and Susan was one of those people."

After making some more contacts, Miller said the committee had pared the applicants to three finalists, Yow, Griffin and Danita

Davenport of Central Michigan, and Yow emerged as the person Miller said he thought could take the program to its next highest level.

Yow had not originally applied for the job, but after she was contacted by Miller, she began to juggle her options.

She had just completed her fourth year at Drake, in which the team went 10-16, and during her 12-year career, including eight years at East Tennessee State, she had applied for numerous jobs — the K-State job, however, had a certain appeal to it.

Yow had set expectations she needed to be met before she would take a job at another school, and two of her highest priorities laid within the K-State athletic department.

First of all, she wanted to be part of a program that had a competitive men's program.

"That was the No. 1 criteria," Yow said. "The men's program complements the women's basketball program. If a men's program is good, it can really elevate the women's program."

Then Yow wanted to coach at a place where the men's and women's teams both played in the same venue. The four years of playing at the 2,000-seat Drake Fieldhouse, had Yow reeling with envy when she first saw Bramlage Coliseum.

"I came to K-State and ... unbelievable facilities," she said. "I know I'm in the right place," Yow

Cuts leave UFM looking for 'miracle'

By Tomari Quinn
Staff Reporter

The Student Senate Finance Committee recommended Monday to not fund UFM with student fees.

The committee did recommend, however, to continue funding of the Lou Douglas Lecture Series, which is coordinated by UFM, at $500 a year.

Last fiscal year, UFM received $12,653.85 from Senate. For the coming fiscal year, UFM requested slightly more than $13,000.

"Their recommendation is a big zero," said Richard Friesen, executive director of UFM. "This is coming as a total surprise to the board. We're scrambling. Basically, we're all in shock."

Friesen said Senate is one of the key sources of funding for UFM.

"Without that great source of money, we're in real trouble," he said. "It is clear that some members of the finance committee do not fully understand the ramifications of their recommendation. If they do, then they don't care about the implications."

The committee's purpose was to recommend how to allocate student fee money in a manner that would benefit a majority of students, said Barry Beck, coordinator of finances for Senate.

Beck said Senate made the recommendation last year to phase UFM out of the senate budget.

"We decided it was better to make a clean cut now," Beck said. "We decided to reward the winners, rather than support the losers."

He said the vast majority of UFM participants have little or no connection with the University and are mostly Manhattan residents.

"There are a lot of classes like the 'care and appreciation of cats' and 'pine cone art' that are not conducive to higher education," Beck said.

Dave Stewart, chairman of the UFM Board, said the possible lack of financing could critically affect both UFM and the University.

Proposal studied

Group demands BOCA code modification

By Steve Franzen
Staff Reporter

The City Commission decided that a proposed city rental inspection program would not be instituted until the commissioners can modify the Building Officials' and Code Administrators' national standard codes to fit Manhattan.

In a meeting Tuesday at Headquarter Fire Station, city commissioners reviewed the current rental inspection proposal. More than 100 people attended the three-hour work session.

Mayor Kent Glasscock said that based on his conclusions from the session, work on the proposed inspection program would continue, but that work must also begin on modifying the current BOCA codes followed by the city.

The proposal presented at the meeting had two major changes from the previous version.

The first change was the addition of an educational process. The process requires landlords to include a preset statement notifying tenants of a minimum-standard ordinance and directions for any concerns about the ordinance in all written leases. If there is no written lease, the same information

Lafene's advisory board debates late shift closing

By David Frese
Collegian Reporter

The Student Health Advisory Board is expected to debate today the closing of Lafene's midnight to 8 a.m. shift, a recommendation designed to enhance other areas of the health center.

Lannie Zweimiller, director of Lafene, said to accommodate the changing needs of the center, the resources used to supply the overnight shift may have to be shifted to other programs.

He estimated the cost for maintaining the program was about $80,000 last year. The money saved by closing the shift would be spent enhancing other programs such as health education and general assistance for the clinic.

"We're not going to just take this money and go to the bank with it," Zweimiller said. "We're going to take it and try to enhance those programs where it will do more good. I'll be able to take those funds being spent on the overnight shift and put them into health education and general funds."

Zweimiller will be presenting data gathered through February 1990 in an open discussion today with the Student Health Advisory Committee.

"It's not just off the wall," he said. "This will be a well thought-out decision. We need

Software to better process

By The Collegian Staff

By fall 1993, the Registrar's Office expects to be automating the graduation checkout process with new computer software.

Currently, student progress toward graduation is checked by advisers and deans' assistants who manually compare degree requirements with students' actual courses of study, said Kathy Noble, associate registrar.

The new software, called On Course, will eliminate this tedious and time-consuming process, Noble said.

Registrar Don Foster said On Course will be installed in the existing IBM computers the University purchased in January. The software itself will be in the main computer in the basement of Farrell Library. Terminals throughout campus be able to access the information.

"We expect to have it in every dean's office and also in the admissions office so students considering transferring here can find out which courses they've already taken will go toward their degree," Foster said.

Noble said it would be important for American Indian Nations should be granted independence from the United States in the same way Lithuania is attempting to break away from the Soviet Union, said Russell Means, American Indian activist.

Means will give the keynote address, "Is America Becoming One Huge Indian Reservation: Is the Family Farmer the Next Indian in This Country?" at 10:30 a.m. today in Forum Hall of the K-State Union. Means and his wife, Gloria, are visiting K-State as part of the observance of Native American Month. Means said in an interview Tuesday that racism and actual genocide has been perpetrated against his people. He also spoke to a theater class.

"The institutional racism against the American Indian is so insidious, it promotes genocide to this very day," Means said. "It is happening today, and it's going to happen tomorrow, too."

Means used the example of what is happening to the children of the

Aleuts, Eskimos and other Indians in Alaska to explain his claims.

"Eighty-five percent of the children up there of these native groups have been inoculated with Hepatitis B vaccine," Means said. "Hepatitis B vaccine was outlawed by the World Health Organization under pressure by African nations because it induces AIDS. The only health organization in the entire world using Hepatitis B vaccine is the Indian Health Service of the United States of America."

Even though this issue has been brought up in committee hearings in the U.S. Senate, it has received little media attention, Means said.

"I was on a radio talk show in Anchorage, and the talk show host did not want me to talk about this," Means said. "I believe it's the result of a conspiracy to keep the Indians out of sight, out of mind, and the United States doesn't have to worry about the freedom that we seek."

Means said the press ignored his actions and the activities of other American Indians when 52 Americans were taken hostage in 1979 in Iran. The American Indians were the only people who could go in and out of the embassy in Tehran where the hostages were being held.

"We took back two military duffel bags of presents and mail, uncensored, back (from the United States) and delivered them to the hostages," Means said. "We did a second trip delivering mail from the hostages. Not a peep was heard about this worldwide."

The disinterest the press showed toward Means' causes was not shared by the federal government, which put him under close surveillance.

"Whenever I left on an airplane, for instance, they knew the flight, flight number and where I was going, and the police were alerted in that town wherever I landed that I was arriving," he said.

"They dramatically eased surveillance when they found out I was an anti-Marxist," Means said. "Then when I went down to Nicaragua and fought against the Sandi-

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — The Sandinista government and negotiators for President-elect Violeta Barrios de Chamorro reached a preliminary agreement Tuesday for a transfer of power on April 25.

The agreement calls demobilization of the U.S.-backed Contra rebels an essential element for handing over the government. It says the new government will have control of the army and police and that only these institutions should have combat weapons.

The document also says the conservative Chamorro government will respect the rights of thousands of people given confiscated land and homes during a decade of revolutionary Sandinista rule.

Castro jams TV Marti debut

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Bush administration began beaming American television to Cuba on Tuesday — MTV videos, a 1971 World Series tape and an old "Kate and Allie" — but the communist government jammed the transmissions and accused the United States of aggression.

"We regret that Cuba has refused to permit the free flow of information and ideas," State Department spokeswoman Margaret Tutwiler said.

Testing of the long-planned TV Marti began at 1:45 a.m. EST.

Two hours later the actual programs were aired.

While viewers in outlying areas of Havana had few problems during the five-hour test, residents of downtown Havana encountered the signal of a Cuban jamming transmitter after the first 23 minutes of the test pattern.

Fiance confesses to murder

PHOENIX (AP) — A former Kansas resident has pleaded guilty to second-degree murder in the death of his fiancée and has been promised no more than 15 years in prison as a result of the plea bargain.

Michael Scott Rangel, 26, entered the plea Monday before Maricopa County Superior Court Judge Gregory Martin. Martin will sentence Rangel on April 24, said Bill Fitzgerald, a spokesman for the County Attorney's Office.

Rangel was indicted last August on a first-degree murder charge in the fatal shooting of Kathleen Elizabeth Henderson, 25, whose body was found June 25 in a Phoenix alley.

Rangel and Henderson, high school sweethearts from Topeka, were to have been married last September.

More than a month after the shooting, Rangel confessed to the killing. According to police, Rangel shot the woman because he saw it as the only way out of the impending marriage.

Designer Halston dies of AIDS

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Halston, the designer who created the pillbox hat that Jacqueline Kennedy made chic and whose star-studded circle of friends included Andy Warhol and Liza Minnelli, has died of AIDS-related cancer. He was 57.

He died in his sleep at Pacific Presbyterian Medical Center Monday night. His brother, Robert Frowick, said Tuesday that Halston had suffered from AIDS for the last 18 months and died of a related cancer called Kaposi's sarcoma.

Known worldwide for his simple and sexy creations, Halston designed clothes for such celebrities as Lauren Bacall, Liza Minnelli and Bianca Jagger.

Mafia initiation on tape

BOSTON (AP) — Baptism traditionally promises the cleansing of sin. Not so for Carmen Tortora, whose alleged rebirth could mean 50 years in prison.

Authorities say the 43-year-old Tortora became a Mafia soldier during a secretly taped blood initiation that confirmed an underworld of solemn oaths and codes of silence so vivid in popular imagination.

"Carmen. ... You were baptized when you were a baby, your parents did it, but now this time we gonna baptize you," an alleged Mafia lieutenant told him during the induction detailed in a 113-count federal indictment unsealed Monday.

U.S. Attorney General Dick Thornburgh said the tape recordings of the secret, clandestine operation provides unprecedented proof that could help convict 21 accused mobsters, including the reputed boss of the Mafia in New England.

All but two of those indicted were in custody Tuesday, a day after the FBI launched a dragnet through Rhode Island, Massachusetts and Connecticut, authorities said.

They were held on charges including murder, racketeering, kidnapping, drug trafficking, gambling, obstruction of justice and witness intimidation.

Thornburgh said Monday that in his 20 years investigating organized crime, people often have asked whether the Mafia blood rite truly exists. The question was answered once and for all, he said, on Oct. 29 in an unremarkable house on a modest street in suburban Medford.

Authorities said that on that partly sunny autumn day, many leaders of New England's most powerful crime family came to Medford for the baptism of new members, one of whom was on a day's leave from prison.

Asbestos found in school

DE SOTO (AP) — An intermediate school with 270 students was closed Tuesday and Wednesday while school officials cleaned the building after asbestos was found to be present.

The Countryside School will re-open for classes on Thursday, said Harold Vestal, superintendent of schools.

The asbestos was discovered when authorities made repairs to a leaky water pipe, he said. Although tests done throughout the building showed there was no threat to people, Vestal said the cleaning was being done as a precautionary measure.

Woman charged with murder

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — A Blue Springs woman was charged with second-degree murder Monday in the death of a 3-year-old girl who had been staying at her home.

Jacqueline Delacruz, 33, the great aunt of Brandi Gonzalez of Kansas City, Kan., pleaded not guilty during her arraignment in Jackson County Circuit Court. Delacruz was released on $25,000 bond.

The girl had been at Delacruz's home for 10 days before coming home on Feb. 6. Brandi died the next day of brain injuries caused by repeated blows to the head, an autopsy showed.

"There is also evidence of multiple injuries inflicted to the head, chest, arms, back, buttocks, legs and feet," the report said. "The manner of death was homicide."

Brandi had lived with her mother, Morinda Gonzalez, 22, who declined comment Monday.

Court records indicate Delacruz told police that Brandi was slapped in the face hard enough to knock her to the ground after Brandi spit at Delacruz, and that the child was hit on the buttocks with a studded leather belt after accidentally hitting Delacruz with a toy.

Subcommittee adopts late-term abortion proposal

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Abortion rights forces denounced Sen. Norma Daniels, D-Valley Center, late Tuesday as an "anti-female female" after a subcommittee she serves on stiffened an abortion bill at her suggestion.

"I've never seen such an anti-female female in my entire life," said Belva Ott, a lobbyist for Planned Parenthood of Kansas.

Ott responded to comments Daniels made in a Senate Federal and State Affairs subcommittee meeting. The subcommittee adopted an amendment proposed by Sen. Ed Reilly, R-Leavenworth, but suggested by Daniels, to make it illegal to have a late-term abortion unless the pregnancy poses a serious risk to the life of the mother.

Previously, the bill allowed the abortion if it is necessary to preserve "health" of the mother, which Daniels said is too vague.

The bill now goes to the full committee, which may consider it Wednesday or Thursday.

Abortion rights activists also were shocked to find out the bill would make it a criminal offense for a woman to induce her own late-term abortion. They and other senators thought the bill would subject only the doctor performing the abortion to criminal prosecution.

"I'm concerned about the self-induced abortions being a crime," said Peggy Jarman, lobbyist for Women's Health Care Services in Wichita. "It is an overwhelming flaw in the whole process."

Jarman said she was appalled by what she saw as the subcommittee's lack of trust in women and its seeming desire to control them.

However, the final blow for her was when Daniels implied that women should be prosecuted if they self-induce abortions, she said.

Jarman was referring to an exchange between Sen. Ben Vidricksen, R-Salina, chairman of the subcommittee, and Daniels. Vidricksen said the self-induced abortion issue might have to be addressed another time.

However, Daniels said she was not sure it should be addressed at all. She said that refusing to outlaw self-induced abortions would encourage women to induce their own abortions.

Daniels was not pleased with the final version adopted by the subcommittee. She said she endorsed it in the spirit of compromise to get something for debate on the Senate floor. She is still unhappy with the loopholes the bill provides, she said.

"I believe life begins at conception, and this doesn't really reflect my feelings," she said.

Means vows to fight acquisition

By Mike Venso
Staff Photographer

American Indian Movement leader Russell Means vowed Tuesday evening to challenge the attempted acquisition of farmland near Fort Riley by the Army at an informal meeting with American Indian students.

The centerpiece of the discussion, which met at the International Student Center, was a packet of information from Preserve Rural America. Preserve Rural America is a local action group that is trying to block the proposed military land acquisition.

The packet included data and letters from area farmers and ranchers who oppose the expansion of Fort Riley for increased military maneuvering space. Included in the packet was a letter from a farmer's wife asking Means to help them fight the government's proposal.

Means, who describes himself as an "American Indian patriot," waved the packet and declared it "a historical document that should be placed in a white (people's) museum. It's unbelievable, the settlers are coming to the Indians for help."

"I will come back to Kansas for sure. I won't let them take their land away like they took my people's land."

"That's the reason we sent it to him. It's great to see people caring about each other," Jay Copeland, president of Preserve Rural America, said after learning of Means' intentions.

"I feel like they did. They were shoved off, probably by my ancestors, like we are now," Copeland said.

Copeland's group is trying to fight the military's attempt to acquire additional farmland surrounding Fort Riley. Indian burial grounds have been found on some of the land, Copeland said.

Preserve Rural America sent packets such as the one Means received to anyone who might be able to help its cause. The group is pleased to get the support of someone like Means, Copeland said.

Means will lecture at 10:30 a.m. today in Union Forum Hall. He said he will address, among other topics, his desire to help the farmers and ranchers of the Flint Hills in their struggle.

Soviets keep up pressure

By The Associated Press

VILNIUS, U.S.S.R. — Lithuania's leaders on Tuesday angrily accused Moscow of inexcusable aggression and of kidnapping its citizens after Soviet troops stormed two hospitals in a harsh roundup of army deserters.

Later, the Kremlin ordered all foreigners to leave the republic, which declared independence March 11. Soviet troops occupied a fifth Communist Party building in Vilnius, the capital.

Washington and other foreign governments urged restraint but avoided attacking Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev, who faces growing independence movements in several republics as he tries to institute reform.

The Bush administration, in declining to denounce Moscow, said it did not want to inflame the situation.

Soviet officials defended their actions and condemned the Lithuanians' aspirations as dangerous.

"Even Vice President Quayle admitted the other day there should be some discipline in the army," Sergei Chetverikov, minister-counselor at the Soviet Embassy, said at a news conference in Washington.

Quayle said Saturday the Soviets should not threaten Lithuania but added that "if the Soviet Union is applying disciplinary measures to people in their own military, that's a different situation."

In a furious letter to Gorbachev, Lithuania's president, Vytautas Landsbergis, and prime minister, Kazimiera Prunskiene, said their government demands the return of its kidnapped citizens. They also urged negotiations with Moscow in neutral territory.

Both Landsbergis and Prunskiene said Gorbachev had refused their calls.

Gubernatorial candidate exhibits lack of sense

Clayton Williams decided to throw a wing-ding over the weekend. Unfortunately, it rained on the rodeo and picnic he was conducting at his ranch in Texas.

Williams, who spent $6 million to win the Republican nomination for Texas governor a few weeks ago, talked about the cold, cloudy, wet weather with his guests, including reporters covering the event.

The bad weather Saturday was like rape, Williams said.

"If it's inevitable, just relax and enjoy it," he said.

This from a man who was able to earn enough money that he could spend $6 million seeking a job which pays an annual salary that is only a small fraction of his investment.

Also, Williams, like his would-be opponents on the Democratic side, campaigned on the law and order issue. At times it seemed the race was degenerating into a Texas-sized bragging match among the candidates with the state attorney general and a former governor trading tally sheets on the number of persons they had sent to the death chamber.

Williams appeared in his campaign commercials wearing a 10-gallon hat, superimposed in front of video tape showing chain gangs busting rocks. Williams said that's what he would do to drug dealers in Texas; send them to basic-training-style camps.

Perhaps Texas voters should send Williams back to basic candidate training for his stupidity and insensitivity. Sexual assault can never be an occasion for pleasure. To even jokingly suggest so is wrong and discounts the suffering of rape victims everywhere.

Williams must certainly have earned his millions through hard work. It is apparent from his remarks that intelligence had little to do with it.

Parenting valuable job

I got to play "Mommy" Sunday morning, and it was an exhausting experience. Three children were circling me as if I were a Maypole. After being in the company of dinosaurs, crayons, cartoons and cookie crumbs for four hours, I have to admit I was relieved to nestle down into the privacy of my own home, and to receive my earnings.

However, this exhaustion I will welcome someday.

The children and I were watching "The Land Before Time," when a mother dinosaur died and left her baby dinosaur to fend for himself. The children had me stop the video so we could figure out what they would do if their mommy or daddy died.

"We would have to be at the babysitter's all the time."

"Yeah, no one would be able to pick us up from the babysitter. We would have to stay there all day until daddy or mommy could get off work."

Child care was in the forefront of these children's minds. I didn't blame them. At their vulnerable age, their basic needs revolve around ensuring and receiving care, especially from their mom and dad.

Spending time with these children allowed me to question my priorities and hopes as a future parent. Having children will interrupt my career, perhaps my education. Having children will challenge me quite differently than academics, than the work world. But I want to be a mother, a mother in the traditional sense.

I have this choice. While women before this era were restricted to one role defined by their reproductive responsibilities, I have a wealth of possibilities, functions and roles. With an education, a social network, and the acknowledgment that I do have capabilities outside of the reproductive, being a housewife and mother, at least during the primary years of my children's development, is not a threat to me.

While the work world is accessible to women (but still not neutral, nor equitable), I worry that the role of the mother, the role of the parent, is being devalued, forgotten, even looked upon as a hindrance, a burden compared to the emancipating potential of the work environment.

This devaluation the parenting role has occurred historically for men. The personal sacrifices have been and still are immense

Jana Leep

COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

when men adhere to the social myth that requires them to protect, provide and compete for scarce resources for their family. Such expectations insist on more time and energy spent outside the home, inside the office. Men's agentic capabilities have been valued and not their socio-emotional potentialities.

One would think that now, with two-income families the norm, egalitarian role-sharing would be more the reality than it is the ideal. One would think that men, with less pressure to provide, could involve themselves more within the home, and women, with multiple roles, could focus more so on their careers. That a balance could be achieved between private and public lives.

But what I have observed occurring, especially among couples in the corporate and academics worlds, is that children come under the care of a nanny, a live-in babysitter, a grandmother and grandfather. That children, one component of "the good life," are born and raised outside of the home themselves. While this may not be harmful, for the child may be receiving consistent and adequate care-giving, I personally want to care for my own children.

For some, this is, of course, economically not feasible; child care is imperative, especially for single-parent families, women and men working, or educating themselves, not able to take a leave from the marketplace. But, what bothers me are those with this option, who claim children are a priority, but refuse to sacrifice a high standard of living, the comforts, the freedoms, the self-actualization that drive our society.

I am not calling for women to return to the home, giving up all their personal progress and economic resources. But if having children is a priority, I am asking men and women to be reasonable; one cannot give fully and adequately to children if 10-hour work days are required. I am asking men and women to value the role of parent once they make a choice to have children. To value children as a responsibility and a commitment not so different from a commitment to a social cause, to achieving a principal position within a company, to working for and earning a degree. All such endeavors take energy, time, patience and sacrifice.

Felice Schwartz, a New York management consultant, believes that individuals who plan to put children before a career for a period of time should recognize and verbalize this preference to their employers. Although the Civil Rights Act of 1964 prohibits employers from asking applicants about child-rearing plans, Schwartz believes that job-seekers should volunteer this information.

In response, some feminists warn that distinguishing between the career-primary and those women and men oriented to career and family could lead to discriminatory selection among job applicants. They insist that child-rearing plans have nothing to do with one's capabilities on the job. Perhaps this would be true if corporations and academics were more sensitive to the demands of parenting.

Rep. Patricia Schroeder cries out that, "(Schwartz's statement) is tragic, because it reinforces the idea, which is so strong in our country, that you can either have a family or a career, but not both, if you are a woman." Schroeder forgets that the forced choice of family vs. career is and has been a reality for most men. That this forced choice may be becoming a reality for ambitious women who want both worlds.

Perhaps having both worlds will occur only when men and women role-share, when the work world is flexible and perceptive in working with women and men as human beings with lives beyond the working environment.

Thus Schwartz is perceptive and accurate in her call for realizing and verbalizing the tremendous responsibility of parenting. Change cannot occur within the work world unless the injustices are verbalized; change cannot occur until men and women admit that parenting requires personal sacrifices that may impinge upon their career. Parenting is another of the many choices allowed us, but like many of our freedoms and possibilities, it can be taken for granted, even neglected as vital and integral to the well-being of our children, ourselves and our society.

Abortion not wrong

Editor,

In response to Tuesday's guest column, "Abortion wrong in any circumstance," the root of the abortion problem does not lie within the pro-choicers, nor does it lie within the anti-choicers.

Abortion is an extremely personal, private decision made by a woman about her body and should not fall under jurisdictions or restrictive guidelines made by legislators in our government.

Pro-choice people are very well informed on the abortion issue, that is why they are pro-choice. The laws legalizing abortion are simply giving millions of women the choice to do as they wish, not promoting and popularizing abortion.

Unwanted pregnancies, rape and incest are among our country's toughest problems to solve, and restricting abortion by illegalizing it will not solve any of them. Also, from a medical standpoint, pregnancy poses unforeseen risks in many circumstances, and the choice of the woman to continue her pregnancy should be her own — not the government's.

When a woman is pregnant, there is a fetus inside her, not another human being at that point in its development. It cannot survive outside of the womb, no matter what world-renowned research professor you ask. Only at nine months is it ready to come out of the womb and even at that point it can't fend for itself completely.

When Matthew Wasko claims his statements are not opinion, but what is right or wrong, I would appreciate knowing right or wrong according to whom. Is there some source that you have found called "The Definition of Life and the Final Word on Abortion" that will answer everyone's question on what life or death is? The world is full of different opinions and beliefs, and extending opinions into the philosophy of the concept of life or death is precisely part of what humanity is about. Are you saying it is OK to have opinions, as long as they don't concern living or dying? Abortion is not "blatantly wrong," and there are situations where carrying the fetus to full term or not is a question to be dealt with by the woman faced with this decision. The right to have an abortion is not murder, it is a right to choose.

Column on mark

Editor,

For a long time, I've been following the raging debate about homosexuality in the editorial pages of the Collegian. For almost as long, I have been nauseated by the equation of homosexuality and rape. I haven't written before because I couldn't find the right words to express how I feel. Jack Straton found them for me. His column in Monday's Collegian hit the nail on the head.

However, I disagree with him on one small point. I don't believe it is necessary to support homosexuality in order to stop rape, any more than we can stop armed robbery by actively supporting petty shoplifting. I don't have an obligation to approve of homosexuals' behavior, and I don't have any right to condemn or harass them for it. If people simply would leave one another respectfully alone, we would go a long way toward realizing the nonviolent, harmonious world that Jack Straton describes in his column.

Abortion an option

Editor,

In the September 1989 issue of Hippocrates there was a note that 1,400,000 women have abortions each year in Mexico, where abortion is still illegal. Of these, 144,000 die. In the United States, 1,600,000 abortions are legally performed annually, but only about 9 women die.

To return to the back-alley butchers of the '50s and '60s would truly be murder on a national scale — killing in the name of illogically defined life. Of all conceptions, 55 percent are spontaneously aborted. In short, regardless of the statutes governing abortion, nature, as well as logic, demands abortion be an option available to women.

If we suppose life alone is sufficient reason to abolish abortion, we must change other precepts as well. We could not justly sacrifice cattle or even any plants for food, because these are alive. But they aren't thinking people, you argue? True, though neither is a human embryo. In fact, the physiological actions of breathing, heartbeat and even brain activity do not indicate intelligent life: All living creatures exhibit these signs. Moreover, the development of characteristics such as fingerprints or reflexes such as thumb sucking, are not signals of awareness. That is, the human fetus, while alive is not living — it is not a thinking being until nearly the end of the second trimester.

Outlawing abortion, then, does not convey any right of life to an individual, but simply removes from women the freedom of choice this nation guarantees each citizen. The fact that abortion is legal does not mean women must have abortions. Morally, I would not want my fiancée to have an abortion if she were pregnant, but as a future physician and a believer in the freedom of choice of all people, I feel the option must be available. If politicians ignore the facts of this issue, the basic tenets of representative government, and insist on criminalizing choice, all women will suffer.

Considering the pro-life decisions made in the past year — an absolute failure of logic — when a judge ruled the frozen embryos of a divorced couple to be living beings, he ignored facts. Moreover, if his decision is to be consistent, the wife must carry each of the seven embryos to term, for aborting even one would be murder. Seem a little extreme?

Clearly, logically abortion is not wrong in all circumstances.

Letter "red scare"

Editor,

One must surely wonder what medication Dr. Munyan prescribed for himself that would so cloud one's perspective of the world. Speaking as a politically conservative individual, I found the good doctor to not only be out of touch with the recent worldwide movement toward democracy but more notably in total ignorance of the status of the Strategic Defense Initiative.

Dr. Munyan opened lots of wormy cans in his letter but to unqualifiably suggest that the removal of the Berlin Wall was a Soviet ploy to catch us napping is bordering on lunacy. If in fact that were the case, the millions of people from Eastern Europe to Nicaragua to South Africa to China who have placed their very lives on the line for a whiff of personal freedom are more gullible than could be imagined.

I rather suspect that Gorbys and many of the other sensible leaders in the Soviet Union recognize the inevitability of democracy and moreover the need to build the Russian economy on more than weapons. And speaking of treaties, Dr. Munyan would do well to research the U.S. record in adherence to SEATO or START. Treaties have traditionally put an end to hostilities, not created universal codes of conduct.

If SDI in all its glory were operational in a "matter of a few months," Congress would have approved it unanimously and the whole issue of world domination would be a memory. The bottom line is that SDI is in various stages of development and to think that as complex a system as this could be up and flying by Christmas is silly.

Dr. Munyan's response to military reductions, democratic overtures and his global perspective borders on "red scare" lunacy. No one really knows whether democracy will work for the rest of the civilized world but I for one am willing to give them the opportunity to try it on. If it fits and they like it, fine. If some other method is more to their liking, that's their choice. Someday when travel to the Soviet resorts on the Caspian Sea is as common as zipping off to St. Thomas and every Russian teenager sports at least two pairs of Levi's, we'll think about who came to who.

So relax, Doctor. It may all turn out swell. They'll stay on their side of the pond trying to figure out supply side economics and we'll sit over here worrying about what they're really doing with the Big Mac. You should pray that I'm right, I hear doctors make a lot less over there.

The Need for Speed

For Loren Swor, motorcycling is the answer in his quest for the excitement of life in the fast lane.

"Biking is a pure thrill," said Swor, senior in mechanical engineering. "I like the image, but that's not the reason I do it anymore. I just like kicking butt and pushing it to the edge, getting out and going as fast as I can."

Jim McIlree, former K-State student, said sport bikes, such as the Ninja, are gaining nationwide appeal because they are faster, easier to handle and tend to brake better than other bikes.

Sport bikes are an attention-getter, McIlree said.

"It's nice when people are always staring and stuff," he said. "Everybody has a car, but not everybody has a bike, especially not a sport bike."

"It's nice to have transportation that does more than just get you there," McIlree said. "(Transportation) will get you from point A to point B. Biking makes getting to point B a lot more fun."

Both Swor and McIlree would like to be able to race on a more professional basis. They are hoping to start on a Topeka race track. Motorsport is the team's first sponsor.

"We're trying to put together a road race team, but it takes a lot of work and a license," Swor said. "We have to get into the social groups and then get help in finding out which direction to go from there."

"I wish I could devote more time to practice," he said. "You need to be able to practice every day in order to be good."

McIlree said money is another attraction in the sport of racing.

"When you get a big name in racing, there's a lot of money available in sponsorships, above and beyond the winnings you receive," McIlree said.

Races out at the rocks at Tuttle Creek take the place of professional races for now, McIlree and Swor said.

"You always see people driving Corvettes and stuff around that never romp on them," McIlree said. "People aren't willing to spend $4,000 or $5,000 on a bike, above and beyond a car, unless they intend to use it. So there are impromptu speed contests, just about any time you want to arrange them."

"Bikes are much, much faster and cheaper (than cars)," McIlree said. "Everyone always talks fast cars like a Lamborghini, but my smallest bike would thrash a Lamborghini in a drag race."

Bike repairs and replacements can often be expensive.

"I bald my tires more than I should," Swor said. "I go through three sets of tires a year because I'm pretty abusive on them. They cost $175 a set."

Dewayne Hatcher, senior in electrical engineering, said biking gives him a sense of freedom and peace of mind.

"You can smell the air when you're driving along, especially in the spring and fall, and you hit the cold pockets in the country," Hatcher said. "There's not much distraction."

Hatcher got the nickname Doom after he was involved in a series of car accidents both as a passenger and a driver in high school.

Hatcher said one of the newest models can exceed 175 mph.

"That's a lot of bike," Hatcher said. "Unless you're a really good rider that can get (the rider) in trouble in a hurry."

One of the misconceptions bikers face is the belief of many car owners that motorcycles are a hazard on the highway.

"A bike is more dangerous than a car just because it's faster," Swor said, "but bikes will out-perform any car. The problem is the riders."

Hatcher said motorcycles can be less safe because of the lack of metal surrounding the rider.

"Bikes are harder to see," Hatcher said, "but you try to make yourself visible and stay out of blind spots. I've never felt insecure on a bike before, and I wear my helmet most of the time."

When ridden correctly, Hatcher said, bikes are safer than any car because of faster acceleration, quicker reactions and the ability to squeeze through places cars cannot.

"The only problem is that bikes are a lot more driver-oriented," McIlree said. "In a car, when you want to stop fast, you just put your foot to the floor. On a bike, stopping is a skill you have to practice all the time."

Many people don't know what they're doing on the bikes, McIlree said. Dealerships now often offer training to first-time bike owners.

"People who own sport bikes tend to cut up on them a bit more trying to show off," McIlree said. "You tend to crash more when you do that because you aren't paying attention."

"Inexperienced bikers give us a bad image because they really don't know how to handle the bikes and mistreat them," Swor said. "It makes it that much harder to be a motorcyclist."

Swor began biking as a 14-year-old on a cheap dirt bike, then advanced up the ranks of street bikes as he improved in skill.

He now owns three bikes: an Interceptor, a motorcross bike and a 1973 two-stroke.

"The two-stroke is a real sleeper," Swor said. "It looks like a Pee Wee Herman bike, but it's a real monster."

Swor said his mother was reluctant to allow him to buy his first dirt bike, but McIlree's parents opposed his purchase outright.

"My parents hate bikes with a passion," McIlree said. "They kind of disowned me when they found out I bought my Ninja. We get along now, but they're less than happy with it."

"They would rather see me in a car."

As a child, Hatcher received a dirt bike from his father. His father taught Hatcher to ride in the dirt before he went out into the traffic.

"I think it's good to be taught in the dirt first," Hatcher said. "Some guys that have never ridden before go out and buy high-powered motorcycles, and there is too much bike for them."

McIlree said he doesn't wear his helmet as often as he should. He said he believes each person should have the option of whether or not to wear a helmet. Survey data show a higher survival rate for riders wearing helmets, though, he said.

"As an example, imagine taking your head to a wall and going 'wham!' as hard as you could," McIlree said. "Then imagine doing it with the helmet on — it wouldn't even hurt. The paint might get scuffed a little, but that's it."

"Outside, if you crash at 70 mph, that's quite a bit different from just ramming your head into the wall."

LEFT: Sport bikes possess an incredible amount of power for quick acceleration coming out of turns and racing from a complete stop, but the power can also be used for wheelies. ABOVE: Although seemingly endless hours of practice are required for competition-level riding, the time is rewarded by the freedom and beauty of the countryside.

'Cats begin spring football drills

By Chris Hays
Sports Editor

Bill Snyder opened up the spring football practice schedule with a press conference Tuesday afternoon, but the second-year coach admitted that he didn't exactly feel that much more comfortable the second time around.

Snyder did say he was very pleased with the progress his players and staff made during the off-season conditioning program, as the team entered its first workout of the spring.

"I think our players and our coaches alike are ready to take the next step, to go into the next stage, to move from our out-of-season program to our spring program," Snyder said. "I've been pleased with the work that has taken place in the out-of-season program."

"Our kids have gone a long way toward addressing and achieving our goals ... to become a more physical football team, to become stronger, to become a little quicker. I think our youngsters have done that."

Snyder enters spring drills with two main concerns — the offensive line and the defensive secondary.

The Wildcats lost five potential starting linemen in Chad Faulkner, Will McCain, Eric Zabelin, Paul Ynguez and Shawn Fleming. The first four were seniors last year, while Fleming suffered a career-ending knee injury at Nebraska.

Besides Fleming, the rest of the offensive line also took its turn on the sidelines with injuries last season, which will turn out to be a bit of a plus for Snyder. Freshmen who may have redshirted last season, were forced into action when injuries depleted the Wildcats' front line.

So Snyder at least has some sophomores who have NCAA Division I experience. Doug Warren, a 270-pound guard, is the veteran of the bunch and is the lone lineman left of a group that used to call itself the heavies. But the junior may want to begin his own clan.

Sophomores Eric Herrick, a 265-pound guard, Toby Lawrence, a 260-pound tackle, and Mike Orr, a 235-pound tackle, all three saw valuable time as freshmen last season and they will be joined by redshirt freshman Quentin Neujahr, a 230-pound center.

"On occasion we had players that would gain a position by default," Snyder said. "A young player had an opportunity to line up and be a starter for you virtually because there is no degree of competition at that particular position."

"I don't think it's good for him, and I don't think it's good for our football team."

The 'Cats lost six defensive starters, and four of them were at each defensive back spot. Marcus Miller, Erick Harper, Tyreese Herds, and Dimitrie Scott were all lost to graduation, but Snyder does return four players who did see action last year.

Rogerick Green, Danny Needham, C.J. Masters and William Price will provide a solid nucleus in the K-State defensive backfield, but only Needham has the experience of having played three years.

The returning marquee player on the defensive side will be the Big Eight defensive newcomer of the year linebacker Brooks Barta, while Chris Patterson should also provide strength in the middle, and Elijah Alexander returns for his third year at defensive end.

Offensively, all-Big Eight wide receiver Michael Smith leads the returnees. He, along with fellow wide out Frank Hernandez and tight end Al Jones, give Snyder a receiving corps that started most of last season.

Back for another battle of the quarterbacks are Carl Straw, Paul Watson, Chris Cobb and Matt Garber, while redshirt freshman Jason Smargiasso will also join the hunt.

Patrick Jackson and Eric Gallon return at tailback and fullback.

Also joining the 'Cats on the football field this season will be two members of Lon Kruger's basketball squad. Reggie Britt and Billy Ray Smith were both suited up for the first work out Tuesday. Britt is getting a look at tight end, while Smith will be working with the defensive

Golfers drop to 15th

Staff and Wire Reports

GOLETA, Calif. — The K-State men's golf team finished in 15th place at the Pacific Coast Collegiate Golf Championship.

The 'Cats posted a disappointing 318 for their third and final round and slipped eight places in the 19-team tournament field, after finishing the first two rounds in seventh place.

San Jose State won the team title over Fresno State in a tie-breaker. Each team posted a 54-hole total of 875. California finished just one shot behind the tournament leaders with an 876 total.

"It was a very disappointing day," said K-State coach Russ Bunker. "We were in a real good position after the first 36-holes to have a good finish, and we just didn't play very well."

The individual winner on a 4-hole sudden death playoff, was Kevin Miskimins from Nevada-Reno. Miskimins shot a 73 on the last 18 and totaled a 212. Ben Furth of California and Mike Foster of San Jose State both fired in third round scores of 70 to finish at 212, but were defeated in the sudden death playoff.

K-State was led by Jeff Sedorek, who finished in 36th place with a 54-hole total of 225. Richard Laing was 44th with a 227, Brett Vuillemin was 60th at 230, Chris Thompson was 78th at 233, and Bobby Donnellan was 92nd at 240.

"We're a young team, and there were a lot of positives to come out of the tournament," Bunker said. "The kids were exposed to a very tough tournament field."

Netters to play Kansas

By Dan Wicker
Sports Reporter

Coach Steve Bietau's tennis team swings back into action today with the beginning of the Big Eight season.

K-State will travel to Lawrence for a 1 p.m. match with arch-rival Kansas. The match with the Jayhawks will mark the end of a span that has seen the K-State women traveling on various lengthy road trips since Feb. 28.

The two teams squared off earlier during the fall season at the Cottonwood Racquet Club with K-State capturing its first ever win over KU.

However, Bietau said it will definitely be a tougher match this time around. During the first meeting, KU played without No. 2 singles player Mindy Pelz, but she will be back in action for the Jayhawks today.

"It's tougher because Mindy Pelz is back in the lineup. She improves their depth in singles and also gives them a stronger doubles team," Bietau said. "I think KU has played a great schedule and because they have been one of the top three teams in the conference for a long time."

The match is a crucial one for the Wildcat women, if they want to achieve their goal of finishing higher than last year's fourth-place conference finish. However, Bietau said they can still improve if they do not capture a season-opening victory.

"The Big Eight season takes a month, so you can't win it all or lose it all in one match, which is important to remember," Bietau said.

K-State has had its longest rest of the season after returning from a 33-3 road trip during spring break, and even though Bietau said the match will be tougher, he also said the

Lady Cats vow to adjust, move forward

By David Svoboda
Sports Reporter

The initial hurt is over, and now it's time to move forward.

Those were the words of Lady Cat players who attended Tuesday morning's press conference in Bramlage Coliseum announcing the hiring of Susan Yow as the new women's basketball coach.

For Big Eight co-player-of-the-year Diana Miller, the healing process began in earnest after the team met with Yow Monday evening in a closed-door session.

"We met with her last night, and I think the feeling most of us had is that we're willing to adjust now, ready to move on," Diana Miller said of the decision by athletic director Steve Miller to select Yow and bypass interim coach Gaye Griffin, a favorite of many players. "The bad feelings we've had are pretty well behind us now."

Diana Miller's initial shock was shared by Kristie Bahner.

"When I heard Friday, I was very upset," she said. "I didn't want to accept the change, but it's easier now, especially after the meeting. That improved my mood. It changed for the better, definitely. I was really impressed with Coach Yow."

Miller said the trauma of the past four months has helped her and her teammates grow. When Matilda Mossman resigned Dec. 5 and Griffin took the helm, a roller-coaster ride began. It now is apparently at an end.

"The players have all been through this together, and that helps," she said. "Coach Griffin, Coach (Lynne) Fitzgerald and Coach (Susan) Kubala have helped us through it. That's something we'll always remember."

"And after what happened to us this year, we're ready for about anything the world brings us."

Miller said she was not concerned with Yow's overall record at Drake, which was below the .500 mark. It's something that players look at and dismiss quickly, she said.

"We do. We look at it," she said.

"But you have to look at the situation she had to walk into there. It takes a coach three or four years to build a program."

Miller said that much time wouldn't be necessary for Yow to build the Lady Cats. Second-place finishes in the conference regular season race and in the postseason tournament leave only one way to go for the team, she said, and that's up.

"I think we can win the conference title next year," Miller said. "As soon

Clark hoping for little help from Mother Nature

By David Svoboda
Sports Reporter

If only the weather would cooperate.

That's the refrain K-State baseball coach Mike Clark has been singing the last week.

First, due to a snow storm, his team lost a scheduled home game last Friday with Regis College. It would have been the first home contest for the Wildcats in 16 days.

Next, the team was forced to cancel a scheduled three-game trip to Western Illinois last Saturday and Sunday.

And thus, going into today's scheduled home doubleheader against Tarkio — slated for a 2 p.m. start at Frank Myers Field — the Wildcats have been idle for a week.

Today's forecast: you guessed it, a chance for rain. It may, in fact, already be here.

"We need to play," Clark said of the prospect that his team might lose today's action and thus enter the Big Eight Conference opening series this weekend against Oklahoma having been idle for 10 days. "When we're this close to being a good ballclub, we need to be out on the field."

"If there's any frustration setting in now for our kids, it's just in the fact that we need to play."

If Mother Nature cooperates, K-State will send Dave Christensen and either Kent Hipp or Greg McNamara to the mound today against the Owls in separate seven-inning tilts.

Tarkio, a Division II school, is the smallest school the Wildcats face in baseball. The Owls were 26-20 last season and 13-3 in their conference. Tarkio is coached by Rick Eberly.

"They're always very competitive, and Rick Eberly's a good baseball guy who always seems to get the maximum out of his players," Clark said.

He said midweek contests like the one against Tarkio provide him with several opportunities.

"It allows us to get some of our other pitchers (those not in the rotation) some innings pitched, and lets us develop some of those people — not so much for this season, but for next," Clark said.

It also is helpful for the Wildcat offense, a unit that has been struggling the entire campaign.

"There isn't anyone more frustrated right now than our hitters are at the situation," he said of the K-State offensive woes. "But I liken it to free throw shooting in basketball."

"Do you point out the fact that they're missing free throws and dwell on it, or do you let them work it out on their own? We're letting our players work it out on their own. Our kids are trying hard — maybe too hard, in fact."

It's that effort that has Clark encouraged entering today's possible action.

"We've worked hard in practice, and I think we're just one big swing one big inning away."

Perry, Tartabull lift Royals past Toronto

By The Associated Press

DUNEDIN, Fla. — Gerald Perry and Danny Tartabull hit solo home runs as the Kansas City Royals beat Toronto 6-3 Tuesday in the first game at the Blue Jays new spring training ballpark.

A sellout crowd of 6,218 was at Dunedin Stadium, which replaced Grant Field. The old ballpark was torn down during the offseason.

American League Cy Young Award winner Bret Saberhagen was the winner, allowing three hits in four innings.

Toronto starter John Cerutti pitched to the minimum nine batters in three innings, giving up only a leadoff single to Perry and striking out four.

Perry, Kevin Seitzer and Bill Pecota each had two hits for the Royals. Perry homered to lead off the fourth off loser Mauro Gozzo. Kansas City made it 3-0 in the fifth off Gozzo on Brad Wellman's run-scoring infield chopper and Seitzer's RBI single.

Tartabull homered off Alex Sanchez in the sixth and, after an error by Luis Sojo put a runner on first, Pecota doubled for a 5-0 lead.

Ozzie Virgil homered off Larry McWilliams in the fifth but Ed Hearn's RBI single in the eighth off David Wells made it 6-1.

Tobacco tax rate proposal approved

By Elvyn Jones
Collegian Reporter

A bill that would earmark $12 million for Kansas regent institutions by increasing the cigarette tax 5 cents a pack faces an uncertain future on the House floor.

The bill was passed by the House Taxation Committee today.

Rep. Keith Roe, R-Mankato and chairman of the taxation committee, said the bill is opposed by the vast majority of House Democrats and could not win approval at this time.

Roe said although the bill has been the subject of an intense letter-writing campaign organized by the tobacco industry, the letters will have little bearing on the bill's success or failure in the House.

Those who oppose the bill think it is bad taxation policy to indiscriminately raise taxes on items as a stop-gap policy to meet needs, said Rep. Katha Hurt, D-Manhattan. Reliable, long-term, equitable funding sources should be developed for something as important as education.

Although she would prefer an income-tax surcharge as a source for funding, Hurt said she and Rep. Sheila Hochhauser, D-Manhattan, would support the bill as long as the money remained earmarked for higher education.

"These are unusual times, calling for unusual measures, so I'll hold my nose and vote for the bill," Hurt said.

Sue Peterson, assistant to the president for governmental relations, said although the bill was originally introduced in the Senate to continue funding for the Margin of Excellence, the revenue will now be earmarked to fund the base operating budget and improving the operations of regent institutions.

"It would go a long way in restoring the 50 percent reduction in enrollment adjustment," she said.

The reduction in the enrollment adjustment was proposed by Gov. Mike Hayden in January.

Neither the cigarette tax, nor the regent's appropriations bill currently before the House would restore funding for the third year of the Margin of Excellence program, Peterson said.

Legislature considers 4 bills

Interstate banking rejected by development committee

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Interstate banking, abortion, car brokering and taxing military pensions were among top issues dealt with by the Legislature Tuesday, as both houses prepared for daylong debate sessions to try to clear their calendars of a backlog of bills.

The House Economic Development Committee, considered the most receptive to allowing limited interstate banking in Kansas, rejected the proposal, dealing a serious blow to its chances of gaining approval this session.

A subcommittee of the Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee significantly toughened a bill placing restrictions on abortions, then recommended it to the full committee, which will consider it Wednesday or Thursday.

The changes, which drew fire from pro-choice lobbyists, include making late-term abortions illegal unless the continued pregnancy poses a serious risk to the life of the mother.

The House voted, 70-50, to advance to final vote on Wednesday a bill to ban car brokering in the state, although members debated whether it was consumer protection or protection for established car dealers.

Car brokers are agents who arrange car sales between buyers and dealers. The bill bans all brokering, including arrangements made by car clubs and credit unions for members.

The Senate Assessment and Taxation Committee endorsed for passage a bill that would exempt the pension benefits of military retirees from state income taxation starting in tax year 1991.

The House Economic Development Committee stripped from a banking bill provisions that would have allowed banks in Arkansas, Colorado, Iowa, Missouri, Nebraska and Oklahoma to buy or obtain control over Kansas banks starting July 1, 1992.

The committee then endorsed the bill, which allows larger multi-bank holding companies. Those companies currently can own banks with total deposits equal to 9 percent or less of the total deposits in all Kansas financial institutions. The bill would increase the figure to 12 percent.

The committee's action represented a defeat for the state's largest banking group, the Kansas Bankers Association. The Senate had already approved the bill.

The committee rejected, 9-10, a motion to endorse the interstate banking bill. It then voted 11-7 to amend the bill and endorse it.

"I seriously doubt that the Senate is going to want to revisit the issue," said KBA lobbyist Jim Maag.

The committee's action sends the watered-down bill to the House Commercial and Financial Institutions Committee. House Speaker Jim Braden, R-Clay Center, referred the bill to both committees, and both must act before it can reach the House floor.

Pro-choice forces denounced Sen. Norma Daniels, D-Valley Center, after the Senate subcommittee stiffened the abortion bill upon her request.

"I've never seen such an anti-female female in my entire life," said Belva Ott, lobbyist for Planned Parenthood of Kansas.

Ott was responding to comments Daniels made before subcommittee adopted an amendment suggested by Daniels that would make it illegal to have a late-term abortion unless the pregnancy would pose a serious risk to the life of the mother.

Previously, the exception allowed the abortion if it was necessary to preserve the health of the mother, which Daniels objected to as being too vague.

As amended by the subcommittee, the bill also would make it a criminal offense for a woman to self-induce abortion. Previously, the bill would only subject the doctor performing the abortion to criminal prosecution.

Supporters of the measure to outlaw car brokering said it would help keep sales in Kansas and protect dealers from unfair competition. They said brokers do not have the overhead costs of dealers and do not cannot provide the same assurances of quality services.

"The broker does not serve the Kansas consumers' best interests," said Rep. Susan Roenbaugh, R-Lewis. "There's absolutely nothing wrong with this bill."

However, opponents said the bill is designed merely to protect dealers at consumers expense. They questioned whether the state should interfere with competition within an industry.

Houses lack functional fire alarms

Inspections find electrical, lighting problems neglected

By Ingrid Erickson
Collegian Reporter

Each semester, K-State fraternity and sorority houses receive an unscheduled visit from the Manhattan Fire Marshall to determine whether house members are living up to Manhattan's housing and safety codes.

"We don't find many problems during the fall semester check, because everyone has just moved in," said Fire Marshall Larry Wesche. "During the spring semester visit, we find a lot of problems due to carelessness or neglect after people have been living there six months."

Fire inspectors make their visits with a checklist that covers fire protection, fire prevention, exit requirements, fire resistive requirements and electrical standards.

The most common problems found in the greek houses are with fire alarms, lighting and fire-rated doors that have been propped open, Wesche said. A lack of functional fire alarms was the No. 1 problem.

When the fire inspector visits the houses, house members are to go through an observed and timed fire drill. Wesche said he recommends that the living groups have regular fire drills about every two months. Fire alarms should be tested once each month. Fire extinguishers, which must be within 75 feet of a house's sleeping area, must be serviced annually.

Wesche said that often when emergency lighting, exit signs, and fire alarms are in need of repair, they are just ignored.

The fire inspectors have found electrical problems in all of the houses, particularly in the sororities where outlets are overloaded with adapters, he said.

Inspectors have found extension cords run up over things and under carpets, Wesche said.

After the 1988 addition to Gamma Phi Beta sorority, members are allowed one outlet per person in the sleeping dorms for an alarm clock or electric blanket.

"We also installed fire-rated doors in the new addition," said Krista Reese, president of Gamma Phi Beta.

Fire-rated doors have automatic locks whereby they can't be left propped open.

Wesche said other potential hazards are usually a matter of poor general housekeeping, Wesche said. Inspectors have found exits blocked by trash or used as storage areas. If inspectors find any trash or flammable materials during house inspections, they are removed before the inspector leaves.

"We were told to clean-up the boiler room and get rid of a fire hazard there," said Kevin Christensen, a former house manager of Phi Delta Theta fraternity. "We generally try to keep things picked-up."

Houses with minor violations of general maintenance and upkeep are given a card stating the violations, Wesche said. The houses have 30 days to eliminate the problem. After the problem is corrected, the card is dated and signed by the house president or house manager and sent to the fire marshal.

If a house is found negligent of structural violations, the members are given about six months to correct the problem, Wesche said. During this period, the members must provide a letter to the fire marshal that includes a timetable outlining their projected changes.

Realizing that many houses operate on a limited budget, Wesche said, the fire department will take time to work with a house that must undergo structural changes.

Wesche said that in 1986 when he was named fire marshal of Manhattan, there were numerous structural problems with the greek houses. The City of Manhattan pushed for the houses to meet housing codes and standards. Since that time, the biggest problem remains a general carelessness of the houses.

"About 90 percent of the houses are up to structural standards," Wesche said. "As a whole, the sororities are better. Some of the houses take it (eliminating violations) very seriously, returning the cards to the fire inspector in a couple of days. About 10 percent don't care."

Normally, the fire marshal has better success working through a house's alumni president, who will put pressure on the active chapter to comply with meeting living codes, Wesche said.

Department earns grant

Firms say accounting communication should be developed

By Lori Stauffer
Collegian Reporter

The Department of Accounting is one of five recipients of a national grant designed to help the department make significant changes in its curriculum.

The almost $250,000 grant was awarded by the Accounting Education Change Commission, which was established because of the findings of two studies conducted in 1986 and 1989.

The 1986 study done by the American Accounting Association concluded that accounting graduates are not receiving preparation the field needs.

The study recommended that colleges and universities approach accounting education as an information development and distribution function for economic decision-making. It also emphasized "learning to learn" as the primary classroom objective.

The 1989 report, which was conducted by the eight largest accounting firms in America, concluded that the current accounting education is too narrow. Communication skills, intellectual skills and interpersonal skills, as well as knowledge of accounting, needed to be developed, the report said.

It also said the fundamental changes needed in accounting education would make the current teaching methods and tools outdated.

Maurice Stark, head of accounting, said the results of the two reports were the basis for the proposal the department submitted to the AECC.

The accounting field has grown rapidly within the past years and the new material has been "crammed" into courses and textbooks without any thought given to what is to be learned first, Stark said. Resulting textbooks are as large as 1,500 pages.

The department's goal is to rearrange the material in a logical sequence and develop the four content elements of finance, management, tax and auditing.

"We found we were teaching students things without an adequate background. The new approach will make the learning process easier," he said.

The revisions of the undergraduate and masters programs will take five years to complete. Using the new approach, the accounting department will offer two sections of Financial Accounting for accounting majors only next fall. The volunteers who enroll in the experimental class will follow the new program until graduation.

By fall of 1991, Stark said, all 20 sections of the introductory class will be under the new approach.

However, not all students will enroll in classes in the new program. Stark said about half of the graduates will finish under the old system, allowing comparison between the two programs.

"We will be able to assess the outcome of the new program by seeing if it works better than what we have now. That was important in getting the grant," he said.

The $240,900 will be used to give release time to professors to develop course material because no textbooks now follow the new approach, Stark said. The courses will include more case studies and simulations.

K-State was selected from 40 applications to receive grants totaling nearly $1 million in the first round of proposals. The other four schools were Brigham Young University, the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, the University of North Texas and Rutgers University.

Dan Deines and David Plumlee, associate professors of accounting, will be coordinating the program changes.

"This grant means we're continuing to show we're leading the U.S. in accounting education," said Randolph Pohlman, dean of the College of Business Administration.

Derby, Kramer offer nutrition, fitness games

By Donna Warren
Collegian Reporter

Students had a chance to test their knowledge of nutrition and fitness and register to win a Fuji bicycle at the residence hall food centers Tuesday.

In recognition of National Nutrition Month, the residence hall food services have sponsored their own "food" versions of popular game shows every Tuesday evening in March.

Tuesday's game, "Jeopardy: Lifestyles of the Young and Aimless Edition," challenged students to answer such puzzling questions as "Which of the following is not a benefit of exercise — weight control, increased sex drive, stress management or more energy?" The answer was increased sex drive.

The first game, "Wheel of Fiber," was March 6, and used wheels with various food items listed on them. Residents spun the wheel and tried to guess whether the item the marker landed on was a good or poor source of fiber. "The Choice is Light" game was played by residents March 20. The residents attempted to hit the openings of mock stop lights, and were then given slips of paper with nutritional advice corresponding to the "light's" color.

Participants were awarded small prizes and became eligible to register for the bike drawing at Derby and Kramer Thursday evening. Two Fuji bicycles, two bicycle fanny packs and two pairs of cyclist shorts are prizes.

Sandy Procter, registered dietitian at Kramer, called the games a success. She said more than 1,000 students have participated weekly in the games.

Procter said she wants the events to make the residents more aware of the effects of nutrition. She said she also wants students to realize they are responsible for what they put into their bodies.

"We want the students to have fun and learn useful information at the same time," she said.

Procter is a member of a committee that has been working since about August to organize this month's events.

Prosecutors investigate club owners

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Prosecutors on Tuesday investigated the tangled ownership of the Happy Land Social Club to determine whether the landlords, including actress Kathleen Turner's husband, share responsibility in the fiery deaths of 87 people.

The district attorney's office also said a grand jury had begun hearing evidence against Julio Gonzalez, a 36-year-old Cuban emigre who reportedly confessed to setting the fire at the illegal discotheque early Sunday.

"We'll have a made case even if he backs out of the confession," said Edward McCarthy, spokesman for the Bronx prosecutor's office.

Gonzalez allegedly bought $1 worth of gasoline and ignited it in the doorway to the two-story unlicensed club after a fight with his ex-girlfriend, who worked there. The club had no emergency exits and no second-story windows; the victims had neither the time nor the means to escape.

The building that housed the club was leased to Happy Land's operator by Turner's husband, Jay Weiss, who in turn had leased it from one of New York's major real estate operators, Alex DiLorenzo III.

McCarthy said the issue of landlord responsibility wasn't clear. Prosecutors still had to determine whether anyone beyond the club operator, Elias Colon, who died in the fire, knew the building had been served with notices of building code violations.

Weiss, through a statement by his lawyer, Roger Boyle, acknowledged that Little Peach Realty, a company he owns with Morris Jaffe, leased the building in 1985 from a DiLorenzo company, Clarendon Place Corp.

Two years later, Little Peach leased the club to Colon, but Boyle said that since last spring the company had been trying to evict Colon for not paying rent. The case was to have been heard in court Wednesday.

Boyle said Weiss would have no further statement. Turner said through her publicist, Susan Geller in Los Angeles: "This is an act of a violent madman. It's a tragedy. It doesn't reflect on me or my husband."

Turner is in New York starring in a Broadway revival of "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof."

Assistant Fire Chief William Feehan said inspectors are supposed to serve notices of code violations on the responsible person at the scene and not necessarily to building owners.

The Happy Land tragedy spurred Mayor David Dinkins to reactivate a police, fire and buildings department task force formed in the wake of another fatal club fire.

Fire Department spokesman John

Mulligan said the agency received nearly 1,000 calls Monday, the first day of operating a special number for reports of illegal social clubs.

Mulligan said the names and addresses of some 500 clubs were divulged.

"The department is elated," Mulligan said. "It shows the public is aware of the problem now and there's not much you can do about it unless the public gets involved."

Speakers discuss politics, markets at conference

By Todd Ubben
Collegian Reporter

Helping small- and medium-sized Kansas companies become more knowledgeable and involved in European markets is the focus of the 16th Annual International Trade Conference on campus Tuesday and today.

"Markets in Transition—West and East Europe" is the theme of the two-day conference being co-sponsored by the International Trade Council of Mid-America and the International Trade Institute of K-State.

The conference began Tuesday morning and ends today at 3 p.m. The speeches and discussions are located in the Big Eight Room in the Union.

The conference is open primarily to businessmen, said Pam Fulmer, office specialist at the International Trade Institute.

"Communication, like trade, has to be two-way communication," said Raymond Coleman, director of the institute. "We try to build enough time in here, so we can get a lot of discussion, and not only between conferees and speakers, but between themselves."

Coleman said this year's theme is a timely one because of the new opportunities in Europe for American businesses.

"Whenever you have the turmoil that's going on, particularly in Eastern Europe, there are a lot of pitfalls," he said. "They'll have plenty of problems. If they can weather them, it should eventually be a great market."

John Daly, assistant professor of history, spoke Tuesday afternoon about the economic aspects and situation in East and West Europe. Bob Evanson, associate dean of arts and sciences at the University of Missouri at Kansas City, followed Daly's address by discussing political aspects.

"It's good to have these viewpoints," Coleman said. "A lot of times the businessmen are so busy they are unable to keep up on all aspects."

Heinz Wirth, consul for economic and cultural affairs at the West German consulate in Chicago, said in a press conference Tuesday morning that the timing of this conference is perfect.

"There are a lot of possibilities for American enterprises to jump in and participate in the reconstruction of the East German economy," Wirth said.

Wirth said Kansas companies that can export commodities to East Germany or that can participate in a joint venture with an East German company could find a market, especially in the areas of environmental protection, transportation, construction and rebuilding of telecommunication systems.

"I can only encourage American enterprises to hurry up and go to Europe as soon as possible," he said.

Trade opportunities in Hungary and Poland are among the topics of today's discussions.

Students paid to fight fires

Selection process considers graded hours, training program

By William Sier
Collegian Reporter

K-State and Manhattan Christian College students have a unique opportunity to help pay for their education while performing a vital service in the community: they can learn to fight fires.

The Manhattan Fire Department is recruiting to fill vacancies in its Student Firefighter program left by the graduation of current participants.

Benefits from the positions don't stop at community service, however. Student firefighters can earn as much as $4,800 over the course of a year, said Larry D. Reese, Deputy Fire Chief of Manhattan.

The program has been successful since it began, in 1985, Reese said. "Overall, we have been pleased with the people we have had in this program," Reese said.

Although the program will accept students in any area of study, there are several requirements for participants.

"An undergraduate applicant must maintain at least 12 graded semester hours, with a semester grade point average of 2.0, to be in the program," Reese said. "We also accept graduate students. They must maintain six semester hours with a 3.0 average."

Whether undergraduate or graduate, an applicant must have at least two years of schooling left.

There is no minimum physical size requirement for applicants, Reese said. Applicants must have weight proportionate to their height, however, and be able to pass a physical agility exam. No restrictions are placed on gender or age. Candidates chosen for serious consideration must undergo a doctor's examination and a background check.

"We expect the same out of a student firefighter that we expect from any new firefighter," Reese said.

Consideration of the community's overall safety is most important in the selection process, Reese said.

"We will leave a position open rather than hire someone whom we feel would not do a good job for the community," Reese said.

Once through the selection process, the student firefighter will be required to attend a three-week firefighter training program. The program, identical to the one given to new firefighters, will be at the Manhattan Fire Station and Training Facility. This year's program begins May 21.

After completing the program, student firefighters will be placed on a regular shift for further training during the summer. Their duties consist primarily of dispatching, but they will be expected to be ready to go out on a truck, if necessary, Reese said.

During the school year, student firefighters will work as dispatchers on evenings and weekends.

In addition to being provided uniforms and protective equipment, the student firefighters have the opportunity to live in a dormitory located in the basement of the main fire station, Reese said.

"(The dormitory) can get kind of noisy during a fire," said Scott McClain, student firefighter and junior in life science. McClain said living in the dorm also has its advantages.

"Living here hasn't cut into my social life at all," McClain said. "In fact, I have more of a social life now than I did before."

There is an element of pride in performing a vital community service, McClain said.

Student firefighters are not required to live in the dorm. Anthony Wilks, senior in architecture, lives in an apartment but reports to the fire station four days a month to perform his duties from 5 to 8 p.m. He works a 24-hour shift during weekends.

"It would be hard for anyone like a football player or a member of the band (to be a student firefighter)," Wilks said. "There are situations where they will allow people to switch schedules, but they don't approve them lightly."

Wilks said although the long shift allows quite a bit of quiet study time, sometimes he needs to spend some time in the architecture studio. His schedule does not always allow studio time, however.

Wilks said that since becoming involved with the program, he has considered becoming a firefighter because of the respect they are given by society. He may at least continue as a volunteer in the future.

"This will be something to tell my grandkids," Wilks said, "about how I paid my way through college."

Social issues topic of play

By Todd Fertig
Collegian Reporter

"Long Time Since Yesterday," a play dealing with social issues by P.J. Gibson, will be performed by the Ebony Theatre Company March 29, 30 and 31 in the Purple Masque Theatre.

A reunion of five black women due to the death of a mutual friend sets the stage for the events which take place in the play. Anne Butler, associate educational personal programmer and adviser of the Ebony Theatre Company, said the drama focuses upon their relationships which developed while the characters attended college years before, during the socially turbulent '60s. Butler said the story reveals the lives and experiences of the women following the development of their relationships, which show the coming of age of each individual.

"This play connects a number of issues relating to the transition of women over this period of time," Butler said. "From the story you get a sense of how the '60s social movements impacted each character."

Directing "Long Time Since Yesterday" is Shirlyn Henry, a professional actress and theater producer. Henry is a former K-State student and performer in the K-State Players and Ebony Theatre. She has directed "The Colored Museum" and "Job Security," in past Ebony Theatre productions.

Henry said the committee of students which selects the material Ebony Theatre performs found "Long Time Since Yesterday" to have an interesting appeal to social issues and relationships.

"It's about a basic coming of age where we get to look at the effects of society on the lives of people," Henry said. "It deals with very sensitive issues, like suicide and rape."

Through the friendships of the characters in the story, Gibson made statements about honesty and sensitivity in relationships which relate to everyone, Henry said.

"She is telling us to be honest with ourselves and with others," Henry said of the playwright. "She is saying that we must be able to accept ourselves for who and what we are before we will be able to accept others."

Gibson's play features an all-female cast. Members of Ebony Theatre playing the roles of the five women are Jocelyn Bullock, sophomore in psychology; Camita Burnett, senior in apparel design; Adrienne Carter, junior in psychology; Karen Hester, senior in mathematics; Adrianna Morgan, freshman in modern languages and Eve Wilson, freshman in business administration pre-professional. Two actresses from Manhattan High School will depict two of the play's characters during an earlier time period.

"It's a very strong show, very dramatic," Hester said. "It will make an impression on the audience by the issues it addresses and because there is an unexpected hook to the story."

This is the first production by Ebony Theatre since it staged "Wait 'till Morning" last spring.
